Job.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,

VOL. I.

And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

Shakspeare.

He would give his nuts for a piece of metal, and exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble. Locke.

5. To yield; not to withhold.

Philip, Alexander's father, gave sentence against a prisoner at a time he was drowsy, and seemed to give small attention. The prisoner, after sentence was pronounced, said, I appeal:
the king, somewhat stirred, said, To whom do you appeal? The prisoner answered, from Philip, when he gave no ear, to Philip, when he shall give ear. Bacon's Apophthegms

Nay, urg'd him to go on: the shallow fraud
Will ruin him. Row's Ambitious Stepmother.

11. To afford; to supply.

This opinion abated the fear of death in them which were so resolved, and gave them courage to all adventures. Hooker.

Give us also sacrifices and burnt-offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the Lord. Exodus.

12. To empower; to commission.

Prepare

The due libation and the solemn pray'r;
Then give thy friend to shed the sacred wine.

13. To enable.

God himself requireth the lifting up of pure hands in prayers; and hath given the world to understand, that the wicked, although they cry, shall not be heard. Hooker.

Give me to know

How this foul rout began, who set it on. Shaks.
So some weak shoot, which else would poorly rise,

Jove's tree adopts, and lifts into the skies;
Through the new pupil soft'ring juices flow, Thrust forth the gems, and give the flow'rs to

cure their wounds, and rest their wearied bodies.

Sidney.

After man began to grow to number, the first thing we read they gave themselves into, was the tilling of the earth and the feeding of cattle. Hooker.

Groves and hill-altars were dangerous, in regard of the secret access which people, superstitiously given, might have always thereunto with ease. Hooker.

The duke is virtuous, mild, and, too well given,

To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.

Shakspeare.

Fear him not, Cæsar, he's not dangerous;
He is a noble Roman, and well given. Shaks.

His name is Falstaff: if that man should be lewdly given, he deceives me; for Harry, I see virtue in his looks. Shakspeare.

Huniades, the scourge of the Turks, was dead long before; so was also Mathias: after whom succeeded others, given all to pleasure and ease.

Knolles' History.

Though he was given to pleasure, yet he was likewise desirous of glory. Bacon's Henry VII.

Finding ourselves in the midst of the greatest wilderness of waters, without victual, we gave ourselves for lost men, and prepared for death.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

Who say, I care not, those I give for lost;
And to instruct them will not quit the cost.

Herbert.

Virtue giv'n for lost,
Deprest and overthrown, as seem'd;
Like that self-begott'n bird
From out her ashy womb now teem'd. Milton.

Since no deep within her gulph can hold Immortal vigour, though oppress'd and fall'n,
I give not Heav'n for lost. Milton's Par. Lost.

For a man to give his name to christianity in those days, was to lift himself a martyr. South.

Ours gives himself for gone; you've watch'd your time,

He fights this day unarm'd, without his rhyme.

Dryden.

The parents, after a long search for the body,
gave him for drowned in one of the canals.

Addison's Spectator.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back, inasmuch that the people gave him for gone. Addison's Guardian.

22. To conclude; to suppose.

Many have given over their pursuits after fame, either from the disappointments they have met, or from their experience of the little pleasure which attends it. Addison's Spectator.

28. To GIVE over. To addict; to attach to.

Zelmane, govern and direct me; for I am wholly given over unto thee. Sidney.

When the Babylonians had given themselves over to all manner of vice, it was time for the Lord, who had set up that empire, to pull it down. Grew's Cosmology.

I used one thing ill, or gave myself so much over to it as to neglect what I owed either to God or the world. Temple.

29. To GIVE over. To conclude lost.

Since it is lawful to practise upon them that are forsaken and given over, I will adventure to prescribe to you. Suckling.

'Tis not amiss, e'er y' are giv'n o'er,
To try one desp'rate med'cine more;
And where your case can be no worse,
The desp'ratest is the wisest course. Hudibras.

The abbess, finding that the physicians had given her over, told her that Theodosius was just gone before her, and had sent her his benediction. Addison's Spectator.

Her condition was now quite desperate, all regular physicians, and her nearest relations, having given her over. Arbutnot.

Yet this false comfort never gives him o'er,
That whilst he creeps, his vigorous thoughts can soar. Pope.

Not one foretells I shall recover;
But all agree to give me over. Swift.

30. To GIVE over. To abandon.

The duty of uniformity throughout all churches, in all manner of indifferent ceremonies, will be very hard, and therefore best to give it over. Hooker.

Abdemelech, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became a monk. Knolles.

Sleep hath forsook, and giv'n me o'er
To death's benumbing opium, as my only cure. Milton.

The cause for which we fought and swore
So boldly, shall we now give o'er? Hudibras.

31. To GIVE out. To proclaim; to publish; to utter.

The fathers give it out for a rule, that whatsoever Christ is said in Scripture to have received, the same we ought to apply only to the manhood of Christ. Hooker.

It is given out, that, sleeping in my orchard,
A serpent stung me. So the whole ear of Denmark
Is, by a forged process of my death, Rankly abused. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

One that gives out himself prince Florizel,
Son of Polixenes, with his princess. Shakspeare.

4. To GIVE in. To go back; to give away. Not in use.

The charge was given with so well governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in. Hayward.

5. To GIVE into. [A French phrase.] To adopt; to embrace.

This is a geography particular to the medalists; the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it, and furnish us with very good lights for the explication of it. Addison on Medals.

This consideration may induce a translator to give in to those general phrases, which have attained a veneration in our language from being used in the Old Testament. Pope.

The whole body of the people are either stupidly negligent, or else giving in with all their might to those very practices that are working their destruction. Swift.

6. To GIVE off. To cease; to forbear.

The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as soon as we perceived that it reaches the mind. Locke.

7. To GIVE over. To cease; to act no more.

If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can shew we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church polity. Hooker.

Neither hath Christ, thro' union of both natures, incurred the damage of either; left, by being born a man, we should think he hath given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also. Hooker.

Give not over so; to him again; intreat him; Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown, You are too cold. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
The state of human actions is so variable, that to try things oft and never to give over, doth wonders. Bacon's Natural History.

Demetrius, king of Macedon, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king. Bacon.

So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse Met ever, and to shameful silence brought, Yet gives not over, though desperate of success. Milton.

Shall we kindle all this flame Only to put it out again?

And must we now give over, And only end where we begun? In vain this mischief we have done,

If we can do no more. Denham.
It would be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to desist from any farther pursuits after fame. Addison.

He coined again, and was forced to give over for the same reason. Swift.

8. To GIVE out. To publish; to proclaim.

He saw rich nectar-thaws release the rigour Of th' icy north; from frost-bound Atlas hands

His adamantine fetters fall: green vigour Gladding the Scythian rocks, and Lybian sands. Crashaw.

It glads me
 To see so many virtues thus united,
 To restore justice and dethrone oppression. Orway.
 Each drinks the juice that glads the heart of man. Pope.
 If justice Philips' cossive head
 Some frigid rhymes disbursts,
 They shall like Persian tales be read,
 And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.
GLA'DDEN. v. a. [from glad.] To cheer; to delight; to make glad; to exhilarate.
 Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!
 Delight of every eye! When he appear'd,
 A secret pleasure gladden'd all that saw him. Addison's Cato
 A kind of vital heat in the soul cheers and gladdens her, when she does not attend to it. Addison's Spectator.
GLA'DDER. n. f. [from glad.] One that makes glad; one that gladdens; one that exhilarates.
 Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron,
 Have pity, goddesses. Dryden.
GLADE. n. f. [from glopan, to be hot, or to shine; whence the Danish glod, and the obsolete English gleed, a red-hot coal.] A lawn or opening in a wood.
Lucus. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.
 So flam'd his eyes with rage and rancorous ire;
 But far within, as in a hollow glade,
 Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade. Spenser.
 Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade
 The lion sleeping, lay in secret shade. Hub. Tale.
 O might I here
 In solitude live savage, in some glade
 Obscur'd, where highest woods impenetrable
 To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
 And brown as evening. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 When any, favour'd of high Jove,
 Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
 Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star
 I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy. Milton.
 For noonday's heat are closer harbours made,
 And for fresh evening air the op'ner glade. Dryden's Innocence.
 There interspers'd in lawns and op'ning glades,
 Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades. Pope.
 By the heroes armed shades
 Glitt'ring through the gloomy glades;
 By the youths that dy'd for love,
 Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
 Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
 Oh! take the husband or restore the wife! Pope.
 She smil'd, array'd
 With all the charms of sun-shine, stream and glade,
 New dress and blooming as a bridal maid. Harte.
GLA'DEN. } n. f. [from gladius, Latin, a sword.]
GLA'DER. } sword. Swordgras: a general name of plants that rise with a broad blade like sedge. Junius.
GLA'DFULNESS. n. f. [from glad and fulness.] Joy; gladness. Obsolete.
 And there him rests in riotous suffiance
 Of all his gladfulness, and kingly joyance. Spenser.
GLADIA'TOR. n. f. [Latin; gladiator, Fr.] A swordplayer; a prizefighter.
 Then whilst his foe each gladiator foils,
 The atheist, looking on, enjoys the spoils. Denham.
 Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
 Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryden's Persius.
GLA'DLY. adv. [from glad.] Joyfully;

with gayety; with merriment; with triumph; with exultation.
 For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
 But not one follower. Shakspeare's King Lear.
 You are going to set us right; and 'tis an advantage every body will gladly see you engross the glory of. Blount to Pope.
GLA'DNESS. n. f. [from glad.] Cheerfulness; joy; exultation.
 By such degrees the spreading gladness grew
 In every heart, which fear had froze before:
 The standing streets with so much joy they view,
 That with less grief the perish'd they deplore. Dryden.
GLA'DSOME. adj. [from glad.]
 1. Pleased; gay; delighted.
 The highest angels to and fro descend,
 From highest heaven in gladsome company. Fairy Queen.
 The gladsome ghost in circling troops attend,
 And with unweary'd eyes behold their friend. Dryden.
 2. Causing joy; having an appearance of gayety.
 Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay;
 Of opening heav'n they sung and gladsome day. Prior.
GLA'DSOMELY. adv. [from gladsome.] With gayety and delight.
GLA'DSOMENESS. n. f. [from gladsome.] Gayety; showyness; delight.
GLAIRE. n. f. [glær, Saxon, amber; glar, Danish, glars; glaire, French; glarea, Latin.]
 1. The white of an egg.
 Take the glaire of eggs, and strain it as short as water. Peacham.
 2. A kind of halbert. Diſt.
TO GLAIRE. v. a. [glairer, French; from the noun.] To smear with the white of an egg. This word is still used by the bookbinders.
GLANCE. n. f. [glantz, German, glitter.]
 1. A sudden shoot of light or splendour.
 His off'ring soon propitious fire from heav'n Consum'd with nimble glance, and grateful beam:
 The other's not; for his was not sincere. Milton.
 2. A stroke or dart of the beam of sight.
 The aspects which procure love are not gazings,
 but sudden glances and dartings of the eye. Bacon.
 There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment; some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, and a look of gravity. Dryden.
 Boldly she look'd, like one of high degree:
 Yet never seem'd to cast a glance on me;
 At which I only joy'd, for truth to say,
 I felt an unknown awe, and some dismay. Harte.
 3. A snatch of sight; a quick view.
 The ample mind takes a survey of several objects with one glance. Watts on the Mind.
TO GLANCE. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To shoot a sudden ray of splendour.
 He doubled blows about him fiercely laid,
 That glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
 As sparkles from the anvil use,
 When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd. Spenser.
 When through the gloom the glancing lightnings fly,
 Heavy the rattling thunders roll on high. Rowe.
 2. To fly off in an oblique direction.
 He has a little gall'd me, I confess;
 But as the jest did glance away from me,
 'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright. Shakspeare.
 3. To strike in an oblique direction.

Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
 His corslet pierces, and his garment rends,
 And glancing downwards near his flank descends. Pope.
 4. To view with a quick cast of the eye; to play the eye.
 O' th' sudden up they rise and dance,
 Then set again, and sigh and glance;
 Then dance again and kiss. Suckling.
 Mighty dulness crown'd,
 Shall take through Grub-street her triumphant round;
 And her Parnassus glancing o'er at once,
 Behold a hundred tons, and each a dunce. Pope.
 5. To censure by oblique hints.
 How can't thou thus, for shame, Titania,
 Glance at my credit with Hippolita,
 Knowing I know thy love to Theseus? Shakspeare.
 Some men glance and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives; as to say, this I do not. Bacon.
 I have never glanced upon the late designed procession of his holiness and his attendants, notwithstanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous speculations. Addison.
 He had written verses wherein he glanced at a certain reverend doctor famous for dulness. Swift.
TO GLANCE. v. a. To move nimbly; to shoot obliquely.
 Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
 Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shakspeare.
GLA'NCINGLY. adv. [from glance.] In an oblique broken manner; transiently.
 Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something in this kind, but brokingly and glancingly, intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Hakerwill on Providence.
GLAND. n. f. [glans, Latin; gland, French.] The glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.
 The abscess began deep in the body of the glands. Wiseman.
 The glands, which o'er the body spread,
 Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
 Involv'd and twisted with th' arterial duct,
 The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Blackmore.
GLA'NDERS. n. f. [from gland.] In a horse is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green, or black. Farrier's Dict.
 His horse is possess'd with the glanders, and like to mose in the chine. Shakspeare.
GLANDIFEROUS. adj. [glans and fero, Latin.] Bearing mast; bearing acorns, or fruit like acorns.
 The beech is of two sorts, and numbered amongst the glandiferous trees. Mortimer.
GLANDULE. n. f. [glandula, Latin; glandule, French.] A small gland serving to the secretion of humours.
 Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are called ductus salivares. Ray.

GLANDULOSITY. n. f. [from glandulous.]

A collection of glands.

In the upper parts of worms are found certain white and oval glandulosities. Brown.

GLANDULOUS. adj. [glandulosus, Latin; glanduleux, French, from glandule.] Pertaining to the glands; subsisting in the glands; having the nature of glands.

The beaver's bags are no testicles, or parts official unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emunctories. Brown.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous tumours, and ruptures of the lymphatics. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To GLARE. v. n. [glaren, Dutch.]

1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.

After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused. Bacon.

His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell, And like the brand of foul Alecto flame. Fairfax.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatic wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines but glares not; and is stately without ambition. Dryden.

The court of Cacus stands reveal'd to sight; The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden's Æneid.

Alas, thy dazzled eye Beholds this man in a false glaring light, Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addison.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.

Thou hast no speculation in those eyes, Which thou dost glare with. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Look, how pale he glares! Shaksp. Henry IV.
Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;

But when they met they made a furly stand, And glar'd, like angry lions, as they pass'd, And wish'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryden's Fables.

3. To shine ostentatiously, or with too much laboured lustre.

The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest, or most correct. Felton.

To GLARE. v. a. To shoot such splendour as the eyes cannot bear.

One spirit in them rul'd, and every eye Glaz'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire Among th' accurst, that wither'd all their strength. Milton.

GLARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eyes.

The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden's Fables.

I have grieved to see a person of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flambeaux. Addison's Guardian.

Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air, And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare, She sighs for ever. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

2. A fierce piercing look.

About them round, A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milton.

GLAREOUS. adj. [glarieux, French; glareosus, Latin; from glaire.] Consisting of viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

GLARING. adj. Applied to any thing notorious: as, a glaring crime.

GLASS. n. f. [glær, Saxon; glas, Dut. as Pezon imagines, from gläs, British, green. In Erse it is called klánn, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency.]

1. An artificial substance made by fusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.

The word glass cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glass, from the verb glansen, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles. Peacham on Drawing.

Glass is thought so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also of so close a texture that the subtlest chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.

Show'rs of grenades rain by sudden burst Disploding murtherous bowels, fragments of steel And stones, and glass and nitrous grain adust. Philips.

2. A glass vessel of any kind.

I'll see no more, And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass Which shews me many more. Shaksp.

3. A looking-glass; a mirror.

He was the mark and glass, copy and book, That fashion'd others. Shaksp. Henry IV.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight, With sprinkling glasses, to betray The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden.

4. An Hour GLASS. A glass used in measuring time by the flux of sand.

Were my wife's liver Infected as her life, she would not live The running of one glass. Shaksp.

5. The destined time of man's life.

No more his royal self did live, no more his noble sonne, The golden Meleager now, their glasses all were run. Chapman.

6. A cup of glass used to drink in.

To this last costly treaty, That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass Did break i' th' rinsing. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

When thy heart Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul Prompts to pursue the sparkling glass, be sure 'Tis time to shun it. Philips.

7. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; a draught.

While a man thinks one glass more will not make him drunk, that one glass hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. Taylor.

The first glass may pass for health, the second for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

8. A perspective glass

The moon whose orb Through optick glass the Tuscan artist views. Milton.

Like those who survey the moon by glasses, I tell of a shining world above, but not relate the glories of the place. Dryden.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.

Get thee glass eyes: And, like a scurvy politician, seem To see the things thou dost not. Shaksp.
Glass bottles are more fit for this second fining than those of wood. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GLASS. v. a.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent as in a glass or mirror. Not in use.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion, And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney.

2. To case in glass.

Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye, As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy; Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence they were glaz'd, Did point out to buy them, along as you pass. Shaksp.

To cover with glass; to glaze:

I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glaz'd over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLASSFURNACE. n. f. [glass and furnace.] A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.

GLASSGAZING. adj. [glass and gazing.] Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirror.

A whorson, glassgazing, finical rogue. Shaksp.

GLASSGRINDER. n. f. [glass and grinder.] One whose trade is to polish and grind glass.

The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLASSHOUSE. n. f. [glass and house.] A house where glass is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouses. Addison.

GLASSMAN. n. f. [glass and man.] One who sells glass.

The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman. Swift.

GLASSMETAL. n. f. [glass and metal.] Glass in fusion.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon.

GLASSWORK. n. f. [glass and work.] Manufacture of glass.

The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glassworks. Bacon.

GLASSWORT. n. f. [salicornia, or saltwort.] A plant.

It hath an epetulous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves; these embryos afterward become pods or bladders, which, for the most part, contain one seed. The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the plants up toward the latter end of summer; and having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, by the chymists. Miller.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulg. Err.

GLASSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man! Drest in a little brief authority, Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd: His glassy essence, like an angry ape, Plays such fantastick tricks before high heav'n, As makes the angels weep. Shaksp.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook, That shows his hoary leaves in the glassy stream. Shaksp.

The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing dust. Brown.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred

The hoary frosts that fall on winter's head?

The glassy deep. Dryden's Æneid.

GLASTONBURY Thorn. n. f. A species of MEDLAR.

This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in winter, and flowers again in spring. Miller.

GLAUCOMA. n. f. [γλαυκωμα; glaucomē, French.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a grayish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.

The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.

GLAIVE. n. f. [glaiue, French; glais, a hook, Welsh.] A broad sword; a falchion.

Two hundred Greeks came next in fight well try'd,

Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,
But each a glave hath pendant by his side.

Fairfax.

When zeal, with aged clubs and glaves,
Gave chace to rockets and white staves. Hudib.

To GLA'VER. v. n. [glave, Welsh, flattery; glipan, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheedle. A low word.

Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glavering council is as dangerous as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician. L'Estrange.

To GLAZE. v. a. [To glafs, only accidentally varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glafs.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glazed with crystalline glafs. Bacon's Essays.

2. To cover with glafs, as potters do their earthen ware. [from the French glâise, argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with brining tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shaksp.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it sound reason that carries the stroke home. Grew's Cosm. Sac.

White, with other strong colours with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden.

GLAZIER. n. f. [corrupted from glazier, or glassier, of glafs.] One whose trade is to make glafs windows. Other manufacturers of glafs are otherwise named.

Into rabbits the several panes of glasswork are set and fastened by the glazier. Moxon.

The dext'rous glazier strong returns the bound,
And ginglyng fashes on the penthouse sound.

Gay's Trivia.

And then, without the aid of neighbour's art,
Perform'd the carpenter's and glazier's part.

Harte.

GLEAM. n. f. [gelioma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;
And conquerors bedecked with his green,

Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.

At last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton's Paradise Lost.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Mine is a gleam of blifs, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercaft.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire.

Addison's Cato.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green.

Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams
Fires that glow.

Pope's St. Cecilia.

To GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden coruscation.

Observant of approaching day,
The meek-ey'd morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled east.

Thomson's Summer.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vistas through the trees.

Thomson.

GLEA'MY. adj. [from gleam.] Flashing; darting sudden coruscations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warrior bends his way.

Pope.

To GLEAN. v. a. [glaner, French, as Skinner thinks, from granum, Latin.]

1. To gather what the reapers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers.

Ruth.

Cheap conquest for his following friend remain'd;
He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd.

Dryden.

The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself. Nelson.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palæmon's fields.

Thomson.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather

So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus.

Shakspere's Hamlet.

That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, card'nal, by extortion.

Shakspere's Henry VIII.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men.

Judges.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,

Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear;
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear.

Dryden's Æneid.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs:
He spoils the saffron.

Dryden's Virgil.

GLE'ANER. n. f. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,

Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field.

Thomson.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant statesman. Locke.

GLE'ANING. n. f. [from glean.] The act of gleaning, or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done. Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Atterbury.

GLEBE. n. f. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

This, like the moory plots, delights in sedge bowers;

The grassy garlands loves, and oft attir'd with flowers

Of rank and mellow glebe. Drayton.

Fertile of corn the glebe of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.

Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,
'Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to-day.

2. The land possessed as a part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tythe, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people. Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. Swift.

GLE'BOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy.

Diët.

GLE'BY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flatt'ry! thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand
Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year.

Prior.

GLEDE. n. f. [glibaxlîde, Saxon.] A kind of hawk.

Ye shall not eat the glede, the kite, and the vulture.

Deuteronomy.

GLEE. n. f. [gligge, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gayety. It anciently signified musick played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,

Whom all the people follow with great glee.

Fairy Queen.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee by vexing the inhabitants; who again foreflow not to baigne them with perfume.

Carew.

Is Blouzelinda dead? Farewel my glee!

No happiness is now reserv'd for me.

Gay.

The poor man then was rich, and liv'd with glee;
Each barley-head untaxt, and day-light free.

Harte.

GLEED. n. f. [from glopan, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLEEFUL. adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful. Not used.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?

Shakspeare.

GLEEK. n. f. [gligge, Saxon.] Mulick; or musician.

What will you give us?—No money, but the gleek: I will give you the minstrel.

Shakspeare.

To GLEEK. v. a. [gligman, in Saxon, is a mimick or a droll.]

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.

I can gleek upon occasion

Shakspeare.

I have seen you gleeking or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.

Shakspeare.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimickry or drollery.

To GLEEN. v. n. To shine with heat or polish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam. I have not remarked it in any other place.

Those who labour

The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe, Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour, Acknowledge Vulcan's aid.

Prior.

GLEET. n. f. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from glidan, Saxon, to run softly.] A fanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

A hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet.

Wifeman's Surgery.

To GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin fanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops.

Wifeman.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours raised by the sun make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, 'till they hit against the mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow, afford them a basin.

Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

GLEETY. adj. [from gleet.] Ichorous; thinly fanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gleety, you may suspect it corrupting.

Wifeman.

GLEN. n. f. [gleann, Erse.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is start,
And woos the widow's daughter of the glen.

Spenser.

GLEW. n. f. [gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

GLIB. adj. [from glib, Skinner.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them.

Burnet's Theory.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope compactly twisted together, with a noose that slipped as glib as a birdcatcher's gin.

Arbutnot.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that glib and oily art
To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,

I'll do't before I speak. Shakspeare's King Lear.
There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English.

Locke.

Now Curl his shop from rubbish drains;
Three genuine toms of Swift's remains:
And then, to make them pass the glibber, Revis'd by Tibbald, More, and Cibber.

Swift.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man;
Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran.

Swift.

GLIB. n. f.

The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glibs; which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them.

Spenser on Ireland.

To GLIB. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations; they are coheirs;
And I had rather glib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

Shakspeare.

GLIBLY. adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as conscience recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction.

Government of the Tongue.

GLIBNESS. n. f. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enfold

Chapman's Odyssey.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving.

Government of the Tongue.

To GLIDE. v. n. [glidan, Saxon; glijden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By east, among the dusty vallies glide
The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood.

Fairfax.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,
In double streams the briny waters glide.

Just before the confines of the wood,
The gliding Lethe leads her silent flood.

Dryd.

Where stray the Muses, in what lawn or grove?
In those fair fields where sacred lits glides,
Or else where Cam his winding vales divides.

Pope.

2. To pass on without change of step.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate
The mystick wonders of your silent state.

Dryden's Æneid.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

If one of mean affairs

May plod it in a week, why may not I
Glide thither in a day?

Shakspeare's Cymb.

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,
Glide under the green wave.

Milton.

He trembl'd every limb, and felt a smart
As if cold steel had glided through his heart.

Dryden's Fables.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear.

Dryden.

GLIDE. n. f. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush.

Shakspeare's As you like it.

GLIDER. n. f. [from glide.] One that glides.

The glance into my heart did glide;
Hey ho the glider;
Therewith my soul was sharply glide,
Such wounds soon waxen wider.

Spenser.

GLIKE. n. f. [glix, Saxon. See GLEEK.] A sneer; a scoll; a flout. Not now in use.

Where's the bastard's-braves, and Charles his glikes.

Shakspeare.

To GLIMMER. v. n. [glimmer, Danish, to shine; glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. To shine faintly.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day.

Shakspeare.

The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.

—And on my side it is so well apparel'd,
So clear, so shining, and so evident;

That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Shakspeare.

For there no twilight of the sun's dull ray

Glimmers upon the pure and native day

Cowley.

Oft in glimmering bowers and glades

He met her.

Milton.

See'st thou yon' dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames

Casts pale and dreadful?

Milton's Par. Lost.

The sacred influence

Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night

A glimmering dawn.

Milton's Par. Lost.

Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,
Some seeds of light at length began to roll;

The rising motion of an infant ray,

Shot glimmering through the cloud, and promis'd day.

Prior.

Oft by the winds, extinct the signal lies;

Or smother'd in the glimm'ring socket dies.

Gay's Trivia.

When rosy morning glimm'r'd o'er the dales,
He drove to pasture all the lusty males.

Pope.

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.

On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were.

Wotton.

The pagan priesthood was always in the druids;
and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted.

Swift.

GLIMMER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Faint splendour; weak light.

2. A kind of fossil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer.

Woodward on Fossils.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastick: talc, catilver, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black.

Woodward.

GLIMPSE. n. f. [glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. A weak faint light.

Such vast room in nature;

Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far

Down to this habitable, which returns

Light back to them

Milton.

Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our short-sighted reason having got some faint glimpse of,
we, in the dark, grope after.

Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.

Light as the lightning glimpse they ran?

My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain de-
fires,

My manhood, long misled by wand'ring fires, Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,

My pride struck out new spangles of her own.

Dryden.

3. Transitory lustre.

There no dear glimpse of the sun's lovely face
Strikes through the solid darkness of the place.

Cowley.

- If I, celestial fire, in aught
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryden.
4. Short fleeting enjoyment.
If, while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
If haply be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great fire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.
5. A short transitory view.
O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade. Milton.
Some God punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might have a taste or glimpse of his present justice. Hakewill.
A man used to such sort of reflections, sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.
What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden.
6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.
No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of. Shakspeare.
- To GLIS'TEN. v. n. [glittan, German.]
To shine; to sparkle with light.
The bleating kind
Eye the bleak heaven, and next the glistening
earth,
With looks of dumb despair. Thomson.
The ladies eyes glistened with pleasure.
Richardson's Pamela.
- To GLISTER. v. n. [glittan, German;
glisteren, Dutch.] To shine; to be bright.
The wars flame most in summer, and the helmets glister brightest in the fairest sunshine.
Spenser on Ireland.
'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakspeare.
The golden sun
Gallops the zodiack in his glitt'ring coach. Shaks.
All that glisters is not gold. Shakspeare.
You were more the eye and talk
Of the court to-day, than all Else that glister'd in Wh tehall. Ben Jonson.
When the sun shone upon the shields of gold and brags the mountains glistered therewith, and shined like lamps of fire. 1 Maccabees.
It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant redish colour, and glistered
prettily. Boyle.
- GLISTER. n. f. [properly written clyster, from κλύζω.] See CLYSTER. It is written wrong even by Brown.
Now enters Bush with new state airs,
His lordship's premier minister;
And who, in all profound affairs,
Is held as needful as his glister. Swift.
Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which descending daily unto the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion. Brown.
- To GLITTER. v. n. [glitziman, Saxon.]
1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.
Steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade.
Bacon's Phys. Rem.
Before the battle joins, from afar
The field yet glitters with the pomp of war.
Dryden's Virgil.
Scarce had'st thou time t' unsheath thy con-qu'ring blade;
It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Granville.
2. To be specious; to be striking.
On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it. Decay of Piety.

- In glitt'ring scenes, o'er her own heart severe;
In crowds collected; and in courts sincere. Young.
- GLITTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Lustre;
bright show; splendour.
Clad
With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton.
Flourish not too much upon the glitter of fortune, for fear there should be too much alloy in
it. Collier on Pride.
Take away this measure from our dress and habits, and all is turned into such paint and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Law.
- GLITTERAND. Shining; sparkling. A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termination is still retained in Scotland.
- GLITTERINGLY. adv. [from glitter.]
With shining lustre.
- To GLOAR. v. a. [gloeren, Dutch.]
1. To squint; to look askew. Skinner.
2. In Scotland, to stare: as, what a gloarand quean.
- To GLOAT. v. n. [This word I conceive to be ignorantly written for gloar.]
To cast side glances as a timorous lover.
Teach every grace to smile in your behalf,
And her deluding eyes to gloat for you. Rowe.
- GLO'BARD. n. f. [from glow.] A glow-worm.
- GLO'BATED. adj. [from globe.] Formed in shape of a globe; spherical; spheroidal.
- GLOBE. n. f. [globe, French; globus, Latin.]
1. A sphere; a ball; a round body; a body of which every part of the surface is at the same distance from the centre.
2. The terraqueous ball.
The youth, whose fortune the vast globe obey'd,
Finding his royal enemy betray'd,
Wept at his fall. Stepney.
Where God declares his intention to give dominion, he meant that he would make a species of creatures that should have dominion over the other species of this terrestrial globe. Locke
3. A sphere in which the various regions of the earth are geographically depicted, or in which the constellations are laid down according to their places in the sky.
The astrologer who spells the stars,
Mistakes his globe, and in her brighter eye
Interprets heaven's physiognomy. Chapelwand.
These are the stars,
But raise thy thought from sense, nor think to find Such figures as are in globes design'd. Creech.
4. A body of soldiers drawn into a circle.
Him round
A globe of fiery seraphim inclos'd,
With bright emblazoning, and horrent arms. Milton.
- GLOBE Amaranth, or everlasting flower.
n. f. [amaranthoides.] A flower. Miller.
- GLOBE Daisy. n. f. A kind of flower.
- GLOBE Fish. n. f. A kind of orbicular fish.
- GLOBE Ranunculus. n. f. [belleboro-ra-nunculus.] A plant. Miller.
- GLOBE Thistle. n. f. [carduus orbiculatus.]
A plant. Miller.
- GLOBOSE. adj. [globosus, Latin.] Spherical; round.

- Regions, to which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more Than what this garden is to all the earth,
And all the sea; from one entire globose Stretch'd into longitude. Milton's Par. Lost.
Then form'd the moon
Globose, and ev'ry magnitude of stars. Milton.
- GLOBO'SITY. n. f. [from globosus.] Sphe-ricity; sphericalness.
Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably, 'till at last it appear not at all; no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth. Ray on the Creation.
- GLOBOUS. adj. [globosus, Latin.] When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globose, when on the first globous: I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected.]
Spherical; round.
Wide over all the plain, and wider far
Than all this globose earth in plain outspread;
Such are the courts of God! Milton.
The brazen instruments of death discharge
Horrible flames, and turpid streaming clouds;
Large globous irons fly, or dreadful hiss,
Singing the air. Philips.
- GLOBULAR. adj. [globulus, Lat.] Having the form of a small sphere; round;
spherical.
The figure of the atoms of all visible bodies seemeth to be globular, there being no other
Grew's Caspologia Sana.
- GLOBULARIA. n. f. [Latin; globelaire, French.] A flosculous flower.
Miller.
- GLOBULE. n. f. [globule, French;
globulus, Latin.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical
which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope.
These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver. Quincy.
The hailstones have opaque globules of snow at their centre, to intercept the light within the ball.
Newton's Opticks.
Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum; the red globules are elastic, and will break; the vessels which admit the smaller globule, cannot admit the greater without a disease. Arbutnot on Scurvy.
- GLO'NULOUS. adj. [from globule.] In form of a small sphere; round.
The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth. Boyle.
- To GLOMERATE. v. a. [glomera, Latin.]
To gather into a ball or sphere. A filamentous substance gathered into a ball is said to be glomerated, but discon-tinuous particles are conglobated.
- GLOMERATION. n. f. [glomeratio, Latin.]
1. The act of forming into a ball or sphere.
2. A body formed into a ball.
The rainbow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot fall but from the air that is very low. Boyle.
- GLO'MEROUS. adj. [glomerosus, Latin.] Gathered into a ball or sphere, as a ball of thread.

GLOOM. n. f. [glomang, Saxon, twilight.]

1. Imperfect darkness; dismalness; obscurity; defect of light.

Glowing embers through the room,
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

This the feat,
That we must change for heav'n? This mournful gloom,

For that celestial light? Milton's Paradise Lost.

The still night, not now, as ere men fell, Wholesome, and cool, and mild; but with black air

Accompany'd; with damps, and dreadful gloom.
Milton.

Now warm in love, now with'ring in thy bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom. Pope.

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind; fullness.

To GLOOM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine obscurely, as the twilight.
This sense is not now in use.

His glitt'ring armour made
A little glooming light much like a shade. Spenser.

Scarcely had Phœbus in the glooming east
Yet harnessed his fiery footed team. Spenser.

2. To be cloudy; to be dark.
3. To be melancholy; to be sullen.

GLOOMILY. adv. [from gloomy.]

1. Obscurely; dimly; without perfect light; dimly.

2. Sullenly; with cloudy aspect; with dark intentions; not cheerfully.

See, he comes: how gloomily he looks! Dryd.
Gloomily retir'd the spider lives. Thomson.

GLOOMINESS. n. f. [from gloomy.]

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dismalness.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humour, and makes them grow sullen and inconvertible.

Collier of the Spleen.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involved, very often stands in need of such little incitements to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy.

Addison.

GLOOMY. adj. [from gloom.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without
The growing miseries, which Adam saw Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,
To sorrow abandon'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,
Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,
Nor setting visits, nor the lightsome noon.

Dryden's Fables.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier, just as the sun is bright or more overcast. Pope.

2. Dark of complexion.

That fair field
Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flow'rs, Herself a fairer flow'r by gloomy Dis
Was gather'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.

GLO'RIED. adj. [from glory.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours. Not in use.

Old respect
As I suppose, toward your once glory'd friend,
My son, now captive, hither hath inform'd Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age

Came lagging after. Milton's Agonistes.

GLORIFICATION. n. f. [glorification, French, from glorify.] The act of giving glory.

GLORIFY. v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifico, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in. Shaksp.

Justice is their virtue: that alone
Makes them sit sure, and glorifies the throne.
Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged.
Hooker.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alledged at that time as an argument
for the truth. Hooker.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord. Shaksp.

All nations shall glorify thy name. Psalms.
Our bodies with which the apostle commands
us to glorify God, as well as with our souls.
Duty of Man.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Taylor.

To GLO'RIFY. v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifico, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in. Shaksp.

Justice is their virtue: that alone
Makes them sit sure, and glorifies the throne.
Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above
all things, is with due admiration acknowledged.
Hooker.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alledged at that time as an argument
for the truth. Hooker.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord. Shaksp.

All nations shall glorify thy name. Psalms.
Our bodies with which the apostle commands
us to glorify God, as well as with our souls.
Duty of Man.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end; and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver. Tillotson.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.

Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify.
Spenser on Ireland.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall,
Some odoriferous thing, or med'cinal. Donne.

4. To exalt to glory in heaven; to raise to celestial beatitude.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him. John.

Whom he justified, them he also glorified.
Romans.

The members of the church remaining, being perfectly sanctified, shall be eternally glorified; then shall the whole church be truly and perfectly holy. Pearson.

The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner. Ayliffe's Peregrin.

GLORIOUS. adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorieux, French.]

1. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.

They that are glorious must needs be factious;
for all bravery stands upon comparisons. Bacon.

2. Noble; illustrious; excellent. It is frequently used by theological writers, to express the brightness of triumphant sanctity rewarded in heaven.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world. Daniel.

He is glorious in respect of the brightness and splendor of his celestial body, still made more glorious and majestic by the authority which his Father hath committed to him of universal Judge.
Nelson.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,
'Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;
If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,
He now defends the cause that once was thine.
Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title.
Addison's Cato.

She must stand amongst the first servants of God, and be glorious amongst those that have fought the good fight. Law.

If there be nothing so glorious as doing good, if there is nothing that makes us so like to God, then nothing can be so glorious in the use of our money, as to use it all in works of love and goodness. Law.

GLORIOUSLY. adv. [from glorious.]

Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

They inspire with those celestial flames, which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryden.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend.
Pope.

GLORY. n. f. [gloire, French; gloria, Latin. Among the old poets it was used sometimes as one syllable, gloré.]

1. Praise paid in adoration.

Glory to God in the highest. Luke.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me into thy glory. Psalms.

Then enter into glory, and resume
His seat at God's right hand, exalted high Above all names in heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.

It is hardly possible for you to beseech and in-treat God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life.
Law.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.
Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
'Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.
Shakespeare's Henry vi.

And with that word and warning soon was dight,
Each soldier longing for near coming glory.
Fairfax.

Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings,
There have been fewer friends on earth than kings. Cowley.

Can we imagine that neither the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea.
Burnet.

Your sex's glory 'tis to shine unknown,
Of all applause, be fondest of your own. Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not array'd like one of these. Matthew.

Treated so ill, chas'd from your throne,
Returning, you adorn the town;
And with a brave revenge do show
Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison's Spect.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.

From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And saints embrace thee with a love like mine.
Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in picture.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South's Sermons.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance. Collier of the Aspect.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Wisdom.

On death-beds some in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die. Young.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney.

To GLO'RY. v. n. [glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgment glorying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakespeare.

Your glorying is not good. 1 Corinthians.

Thou hast seen mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height. Addison's Cato.

This title of freeholder is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison's Freeholder.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? Atterbury.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Clarissa.

To GLOSE. v. a. To flatter; to colloque.

Hanmer. See To GLOZE.

GLOSS. n. f. [γλῶσσα; glose, French.]

1. A scholium; a comment.

They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explain'd, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach,
With gen'ral voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flatt'ring gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Hewel.

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment. Hudibras.

In many places he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

They give the scandal, and the wise discern;
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryden.

Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method. Baker on Learning.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. Superficial lustre. In this sense it seems to have another derivation; it has perhaps some affinity to glow.

His iron coat all over-grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whose glittering gloss dark'ned with filthy dust. Spenser.

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,

To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shakespeare.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss.

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than plates of brass. Bacon.

Weeds that the wind did toss

The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss,

Like that of oil. Chapman's Iliads.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison's Spectator.

3. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation. This sense seems to partake of both the former.

Poor painters oft with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit;
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker, Preface.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakespeare.

The common gloss
Of theologians. Milton.

To GLOSS. v. n. [gloser, French, from the noun.]

1. To comment.

Thou detain'st Briseis in thy bands,
By priestly glossing on the gods commands. Dryd.

2. To make sly remarks.

Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing gloss'd, that Abra, serv'd so well. Prior.

To GLOSS. v. a.

1. To explain by comment.

In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws,
Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Donne.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.

Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker's Sermons.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Philips.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.

But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a faint-like show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden's Persius.

GLOSSARY. n. f. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, when delubrum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo dei simulachrum dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries. Stillingfleet.

I could add another word to the glossary. Baker.

GLOSSA'TOR. n. f. [glossateur, French, from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence: but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.

GLOSSER. n. f. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.

2. A polisher.

GLOSSINESS. n. f. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

Their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt. Boyle.

GLOSSOGRAPHER. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γράφω.] A scholiast; a commentator.

GLOSSOGRAPHY. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γράφω.] The writing of commentaries.

GLOSSY. adj. [from gloss.] Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a person of place; he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water-camblet, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.

The rest entire Shone with a glossy scarf. Milton.

His furcoat was a bearskin on his back;
His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,

For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden.

GLOVE. n. f. [glove, Saxon, from klaffue, Danish, to divide.] Cover of the hands.

They flew about like chaff i' th' wind;
For haste some left their masks behind,
Some could not slay their gloves to find. Drayton.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

To GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now carag'd with grief,

Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

The next he preys on is her palm,
That alm'ner of transpiring balm;
So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd;

Tender as 'twere a jelly glove'd. Cleveland.

GLO'VER. n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a Glover's paring knife? Shakespeare.

To GLOUT. v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To pout; to look fullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,
Where, glouting round her rock, to fish she falls. Chapman.

Glouting with fullen spight, the fury shook
Her clotted locks, and blatted with each look. Garth.

To GLOW. v. n. [glopan, Saxon; gloeyen, Dutch.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But silence silence lesseneth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser.

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn

Their office upon a tawny front. Shakespeare.

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocency, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milton.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison's Ovid.

How opening heav'n their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. Smith.

Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe.

Pope.

3. To feel heat of body.

Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?

Addison's Cato.

The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands.

Guy.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.

With smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.
Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays. Dryden.

A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage
A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;
Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colours glow,
Admire the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.
Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse. Savage.

Fair ideas flow,
Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
Can move the god. Pope.

Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.
Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole. Pope.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

You strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison.
Forc'd compliments and formal bows
Will shew thee just above neglect;
The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will settle into cold respect. Prior.
Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire. Prior.
Let the gay conscience of a life well spent Calm ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

With furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.
So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow

For others good, or melt at others woe. Pope.
To praise is always hard,
When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a fullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell

To GLOW. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids, With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakespeare.

GLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.

2. Vehemence of passion.

3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain. Shakespeare.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.
Such as suppose that the great stile might happily be blended with the ornamental, that the simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Raffaele could unite with the glow and buffle of a Paulo, or Tintoret, are totally mistaken. Reynolds.

GLOWWORM. n. f. [glow and worm] A small creeping grub with a luminous tail.

The honey bags steal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shakespeare.

The glowworm shews the matten to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffectual fire. Shakespeare.

A great light drowneth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:
He held it dear, 'till by the springing day Informed, he threw the worthless worm away. Waller.

To GLOZE. v. n. [glean, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

Man will hearken to his glozing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton's Parad. Lost
So gloz'd the tempter, and his poem tun'd:
Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milton.

A false glozing parasite would call his fool-hardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.

Now for a glozing speech,
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship. Phillips.

2. To comment. This should be gloss.

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France. Shakspeare. Henry v.

GLOZE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by. Shakespeare.

2. Specious show; gloss. Not used.

Precious couches full oft are shaken with a fever;
If them a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a love's fire? Sidney.

GLOZEN. n. f. [from gloze.] A flatterer.

GLUE. n. f. [glu, French; gluten, Lat. glud, Welsh.] A viscus body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a gelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Nat. History.
The driest and most transparent glue is the best. Maxon.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse. Blackmore.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbuthnot.

To GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glu'd many friends to thee. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glueth a potsherd together. Ecclesi.

The custom of crowning the holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinsel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvass over the head of the figure. Addison on Italy.

Moist wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm. Derham.

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogeneal hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest; that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton.

3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.

Those wasps in a honeypot are sensual men, plunged in their lust and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debase mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glu'd
Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryden.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms. Pope.

GLUEBOILER. n. f. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.

GLUER. n. f. [from glue.] One who cements with glue.

GLUM. adj. [A low cant word formed by corrupting gloom.] Sullen; stubbornly grave.

Some, when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well what then? Guardian.

To GLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutio, Latin, to swallow; γλῦζω.]

1. To swallow; to devour.

'Till cram'd and gorg'd, nigh burst
With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton.

2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to fate; to disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.

Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites. Denham.
What way remove

His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dryden.

No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden's Æn.
I found

The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new. Prior.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's carcass glut the grave. Milton.
His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes. Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Dryden.

4. To oversil; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once. Arbuthnot.

5. To saturate.

The menstruum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it. Boyle.

GLUT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Disgorged foul
Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail Of iron globes. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

So death

Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his rav'nous maw. Milton.

Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange.

A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope.

3. More than enough; overmuch.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.

The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage. Woodward.

GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutineux, French; from gluten, Latin.] Gluy; viscous; tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects; the one that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members. Bacon's Natural History.

Next this marble venom'd seat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.

Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GLUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from glutinous.] Viscosity; tenacity.

There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Cheyne.

GLUTTON. n. f. [glouton, French; from glutio, Latin, to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.

The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catsflesh baked.

Bacon's Natural History.

Through Macer's gullet she runs down

While the vile glutton dines alone;

And, void of modesty and thought,

She follows Bibo's endless draught. Prior.

If a glutton was to say in excuse of his gluttony, that he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat, he would make as good an excuse for himself as the greedy, covetous, ambitious trade-man, that should say, he only deals in lawful business. Law.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.

The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love. Cowley.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Granville.

To GLUTTONISE. v. n. [from glutton.]

To play the glutton; to be luxurious.

GLUTTONOUS. adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted over-much with food.

When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,

And take down th' interest in their gluttonous
maws. Shakespeare.

The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raleigh.

The rule of not too much, by temperance taught In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence

Due nourishment, no gluttenous delight. Milton.

GLUTTONOUSLY. adv. [from glutton-ous.] With the voracity of a glutton.

GLUTTONY. n. f. [gluttonie, French; from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

small. Holiday.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stone. Milton.

Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Dryden's Juvenal.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry;
but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion;
in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbuthnot.

GLUY. adj. [from glue.] Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a gluy spumous matter. Harvey on Conf.

With gluy wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin combs. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

Whatever is the composition of the vapour let it have but one quality of being very gluy or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phænomena of the grotto. Addison.

GLYN. n. f. [Irish; gleann, glyn, plur.
Erse; glenn, Scottish.] A hollow between two mountains.

Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he did shut them up within these narrow corners and glyns under the mountain's foot. Spenser.

To GNAR. } v. n. [gnynnan, Saxon;

To GNARL. } knorren, Dutch.] To growl; to murmur; to snarl.

When he 'gan to rear his bristles strong,
And felly gnar, until day's enemy

Did him appease. Spenser.

Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first. Shakespeare.

Gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light. Shakespeare's Richard II.

The gnarring porter durst not whine for doubt;
Still were the furies while their sovereign spoke. Fairfax.

GNARLED. adj. [gnar, nar, or nurr, is in Staffordshire a hard knot of wood which boys drive with sticks.] Knotty.

Merciful heav'n!

Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.

To GNASH. v. a. [knaschen, Dutch.]

To strike together; to clash.

The seer, who could not yet this wrath af-swage,

Row'd his green eyes, that sparkl'd with his rage,
And gnash'd his teeth. Dryden's Virgil.

To GNASH. v. n.

1. To grind or collide the teeth.

He shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away. Psalms.

There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Matthew.

2. To rage even to collision of the teeth;
to fume; to growl.

His great iron teeth he still did grind,
And grimly gnash, threatening revenge in vain. Spenser.

They gnashed upon me with their teeth. Psalms.

They him laid
Gnashing for anguish, and despite and shame,
To find himself not matchlets. Milton.

With boiling rage Atrides burn'd,
And foam betwixt his gnashing grinders churn'd. Dryden.

GNAT. n. f. [gnæt, Saxon.]

1. A small winged stinging insect.

Her whip of cricket's bone, the lash of film;
Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat. Shaksp.

but only the gnatsnapper. Hakerwill on Providence.

To GNAW. v. a. [gnagan, Saxon;
knaghen, Dutch.]

1. To eat by degrees; to devour by slow corrosion.

A knowing fellow, that would gnaw a man
Like to a vermine, with his hellish braine,
And many an honest soule, even quick had slain. Chapman.

To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is giv'n, as raw Young soldiers at their exercisings gnaw. Dryd.

2. To bite in agony or rage.

Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?
Some bloody passion shakes your very frame. Shakespeare's Othello.

They gnawed their tongues for pain. Rev.

He comely fell, and dying gnaw'd the ground. Dryden.

3. To wear away by biting.

Gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder,
I gain'd my freedom. Shaksp. Comedy of Errors.

Like rotten fruit I fall, worn like a cloth,
Gnawen into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.

A lion, hampered in a net, called to a mouse to help him out of the snare: the mouse gnawed
the threads to pieces, and set the lion at liberty. L'Estrange.

4. To fret; to waste; to corrode.

5. To pick with the teeth.

His bones clean pick'd; his very bones they gnaw. Dryden.

To GNAW. v. n. To exercise the teeth.

It is now used actively.

I might well, like the spaniel, gnaw upon the chain that ties me; but I should sooner mar my teeth than procure liberty. Sidney.

See the hell of having a false woman: my bed shall be abused, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnawen at. Shakespeare.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon. Shaksp.

that gnaws.

GNO'MON. n. f. [γνώμων.] The hand or pin of a dial.

The gnomon of every dial is supposed to represent the axis of the world, and therefore the two ends or extremities thereof must directly answer to the north and south pole. Harris.

There were from great antiquity sua-dials, by the shadow of a style or gnomon, denoting the hours of the day. Brown.

GNO'MONICKS. n. f. [γνώμονικα.] A science which makes a part of the mathematically: it teaches to find a just proportion of shadows for the construction of all kinds of sun and moon dials, and for knowing what o'clock it is by means thereof; as also of a gnomon or stile that throws off the shadow for this purpose. Trevoux.

To GO. v. n. pret. I went; I have gone.

[gan, Saxon. This was probably changed to gone, or gang, then contracted to go. Went is the preterit of the old verb wend.]

1. To walk ; to move step by step.

You know that love

Thus others we with defamation wound,
While they stab us ; and so the jest goes round.

Dryden.

8. To remove from place to place.

I am in blood

Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er.

Shakspeare.

9. To depart from a place ; to move from a place : the opposite of to come.

I hope it be not gone, to tell my lord

That I kiss aught but him.

Shakspeare.

At once good-night :

Stand not upon the order of your going,

But go at once.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

And when she had so said she went her way.

John.

I will let you go, that ye may sacrifice, only you shall not go very far away.

Exodus.

Colchester oysters are put into pits, where the sea goeth and cometh.

Bacon's Natural History.

A young tall squire

Did from the camp at first before him go.

Cowley.

Then I concur to let him go for Greece,

And with our Egypt fairly rid of him.

Dryden.

Go first the master of thy herds to find,

True to his charge, a loyal swain and kind.

Pope.

10. To move or pass in any manner, or to any end.

Though the vicar be bad, or the parson be evil,
Go not for thy tything thyself to the devil.

Tusser.

She may go to bed when she list ; all is as she will.

Shakspeare.

You did wish that I would make her turn ;

Sir, she can turn and turn and yet go on.

Shakspeare.

I am glad to see your lordship abroad : I heard say your lordship was sick : I hope your lordship goes abroad by advice.

Shakspeare.

The mourners go about the streets.

in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp.

Exodus.

The sun, which once did shine alone,
Hung down his head, and wish'd for night,
When he beheld twelve suns for one

Going about the world, and giving light.

Herbert.

This seen, the rest at awful distance stood,

As if they had been there as servants set,

To stay, or to go on, as he thought good,

And not pursue, but wait on his retreat.

Dryden.

Turn not children going, till you have given them all the satisfaction they are capable of.

Locke.

History only acquaints us that his fleet went up the Elbe, he having carried his arms as far as that river.

Arbutnot.

The last advice I give you relates to your behaviour when you are going to be hanged, which, either for robbing your master, for housebreaking, or going upon the highway, may very probably be your lot.

Swift.

Those who come for gold will go off with pewter and brass, rather than return empty.

Swift.

11. To pass in company with others.

Thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry.

Jeremiah.

Away, and with thee go, the worst of woes,
That seek't my friendship and the gods thy foes.

Chapman.

He goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men.

Job.

Whatever remains in story of Atlas, or his kingdom of old, is so obscured with age or fables, that it may go along with those of the Atlantick islands.

Temple.

12. To proceed in any course of life good or bad.

And the Levites that are gone away far from me, when Israel went astray, which went astray away from me after their idols, they shall even bear their iniquity.

Ezekiel.

13. To proceed in mental operations.

If I had unwarily too far engaged myself for the present publishing it, truly I should have kept it by me till I had once again gone over it.

Digby on the Soul, Dedication.

Thus I have gone through the speculative consideration of the Divine Providence.

Hale.

I hope by going over all these particulars, you may receive some tolerable satisfaction about this great subject.

South.

If we go over the laws of christianity, we shall find that, excepting a few particulars, they enjoin the same things, only they have made our duty more clear and certain.

Tillotson.

In their primary qualities we can go but a very little way.

Locke.

I go over some parts of this argument again,
and enlarge a little more upon them.

Locke.

They are not able all their life-time to reckon, or regularly go over any moderate series of numbers.

14. To take any road.

I will go along by the highway ; I will neither turn to the right hand, nor to the left.

Deut.

Who shall bemoan thee ? Or who shall go aside to ask how thou doest ?

Jeremiah.

His horses go about

Almost a mile.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

I have endeavoured to escape into the ease and freedom of a private scene, where a man may go his own way and his own pace.

Temple.

15. To march in a hostile or warlike manner.

You were advis'd his flesh was capable
Of wounds and scars, and that his forward spirit
Would lift where most trade of danger rang'd ;
Yet did you say go forth.

We be not able to go up against the people ;
for they are stronger than we.

Numbers.

Let us go down after the philistines by night,
and spoil them until the morning light.

1 Samuel.

Thou art able to go against this philistine to fight with him.

1 Samuel.

The remnant of Jacob shall be among the gentiles as a lion among the beasts of the forest ; who, if he go through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

Micah.

16. To change state or opinion for better or worse.

We will not hearken to the king's words to go from our religion.

1 Maccabees.

The regard of the publick state, in so great a danger, made all those goodly things, which went so to wreck, to be lightly accounted of in comparison of their lives and liberty.

Knolles.

They look upon men and matters with an evil eye ; and are best pleased when things go backward, which is the worst property of a servant of a prince or state.

Bacon.

All goes to ruin, they themselves contrive
To rob the honey, and subvert the hive.

Dryden.

Landed men, by their providence and good husbandry, accommodating their expences to their income, keep themselves from going backwards in the world.

Locke.

Cato, we all go into your opinion.

Addison.

17. To apply one's self.

Seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, he went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood.

Sidney.

Because this atheist goes mechanically to work, he will not offer to affirm that all the parts of the embryon could, according to his explication, be formed at a time.

Bentley.

18. To have recourse to.

Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints ?

1 Corinthians.

19. To be about to do.

So extraordinary an example, in so degenerate an age, deserves for the rarity, and, I was going to say, for the incredibility of it, the attestation of all that knew him, and considered his worth.

Locke.

20. To shift ; to pass life not quite well.

Every goldsmith, eager to engross to himself as much as he could, was content to pay high for it, rather than go without.

Locke.

Cloaths they must have ; but if they speak for this stuff, or that colour, they should be sure to go without it.

Locke.

21. To decline ; to tend toward death or ruin. This sense is only in the principles going and gone.

He is far gone, and, truly, in my youth,

I suffer'd much extremity for love,

Very near this.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

22. To be in party or design.

They with the vanquish'd prince and party go,
And leave their temples empty to the foe.

Dryden.

Dositheus and Sospater, whom he besought with much craft to let him go with his life.

2 Mac.

24. To tend to any act.

There be some women, Silvius, had they mark'd him

In parcels as I did, would have gone near

To fall in love with him.

Shakspeare. As you like it.

25. To be uttered.

His disciples personally appeared among them,
and ascertained the report which had gone abroad concerning a life so full of miracles.

Addison.

26. To be talked of ; to be known.

It has the greatest town in the island that goes under the name of Ano-Caprea, and is in several places covered with a very fruitful soil.

Addison.

27. To pass ; to be received.

Because a fellow of my acquaintance set forth her praises in verse, I will only repeat them, and spare my own tongue, since she goes for a woman.

Sidney.

And the man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul.

1 Samuel.

A kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprize in his air and motion : it stamps value upon his face, and tells the people he is to go for so much.

Collier.

Clipping should be finally stopped, and the money which remains, should go according to its true value.

Locke.

28. To move by mechanism.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him.

Bacon.

Clocks will go as they are set ; but man,
Irregular man's never constant, never certain.

Orway.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike, yet each believes his own.

Pope.

29. To be in motion from whatever cause.

The weyward fitters, hand in hand,

Posters of the sea and land,

Thus do go about, about.

Which answer exceedingly united the vulgar minds to them, who concurred only with them as they saw them like to prevail in what they went about. Clarendon.

Some men, from a false persuasion that they cannot reform their lives, and root out their old vicious habits, never so much as attempt, endeavour, or go about it. South.

Either my book is plainly enough written to be rightly understood by those who peruse it with attention and indifferency, or else I have writ mine so obscurely that it is in vain to go about to mend it. Locke.

They never go about, as in former times, to hide or palliate their vices; but expose them freely to view. Swift.

52. To Go aside. To err; to deviate from the right.

If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him. Numbers.

53. To Go between. To interpose; to moderate between two.

I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her; for, indeed, he was mad for her. Shakspeare.

54. To Go by. To pass away unnoticed.

Do not you come my tardiness to chide, That laps'd in time and passion, lets go by Th' important acting of your dread command? Shakspeare's Hamlet.

So much the more our carver's excellent, Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her

As she liv'd now. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

What's that to us? The time goes by; away. Shakspeare.

55. To Go by. To find or get in the conclusion.

In argument with men a woman ever Goes by the worse whatever be her cause. Milton.

He's sure to go by the worst that contends with an adversary that is too mighty for him. L'Estrange.

56. To Go by. To observe as a rule.

'Tis not to be supposed, that by searching one can positively judge of the size and form of a stone; and indeed the frequency of the fits, and violence of the symptoms, are a better rule to go by. Sharp's Surgery.

57. To Go down. To be swallowed; to be received, not rejected.

Nothing so ridiculous, nothing so impossible, but it goes down whole with him for truth and earnest. L'Estrange.

Folly will not easily go down in its own natural form with discerning judges. Dryden.

If he be hungry, bread will go down. Locke.

Ministers are so wise to leave their proceedings to be accounted for by reasoners at a distance, who often mould them into the systems that do not only go down very well in the coffeehouse, but are supplies for pamphlets in the present age. Swift.

58. To Go in and out. To do the business of life.

The lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in. Psalms.

59. To Go in and out. To be at liberty.

He shall go in and out, and find pasture. John.

60. To Go off. To die; to go out of life; to decess.

I would the friends we miss were safe arrived:
Some must go off; and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Shaksf.
In this manner he went off, not like a man that departed out of life, but one that returned to his abode. Tatler.

61. To Go off. To depart from a post.

The leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak. Shaksf.

62. To Go on. To make attack.

Bold Cethegus,
Whose valour I have turn'd into his poison,
And prais'd so to daring, as he would Go on upon the gods. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

63. To Go on. To proceed.

He found it a great war to keep that peace, but was fain to go on in his story. Sidney.

He that desires only that the work of God and religion shall go on, is pleased with it, whoever is the instrument. Taylor.

I have escaped many threats of ill fits by these motions: if they go on, the only poltice I have dealt with is wool from the belly of a fat sheep.

To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength, to consider that she is to shine for ever with new accessions of glory, and brighten to all eternity, is agreeable. Addison.

Go on cheerfully in the glorious course you have undertaken. Addison.

Copious bleeding is the most effectual remedy in the beginning of the disease; but when the ex-pectoration goes on successfully, not so proper, because it sometimes suppresseth it. Arbuthnot.

I have already handled some abuses during the late management, and in convenient time shall go on with the rest. Swift.

When we had found that design impracticable, we should not have gone on in so expensive a management of it. Swift.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extraordinary expletives.

I wish you health to go on with that noble work.

64. To Go over. To revolt; to betake himself to another party.

In the change of religion, men of ordinary understandings don't so much consider the principles as the practice of those to whom they go over. Addison on Italy.

Power, which, according to the old maxim, was used to follow, is now gone over to money.

65. To Go out. To go upon any expedition.

You need not have pricked me: there are other men fitter to go out than I. Shakspeare.

66. To Go out. To be extinguished.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out,
With titles blown from adulation? Shakspeare.
Spirit of wine burned till it go out of itself, will burn no more. Bacon's Nat. History.

The care of a state, or an army, ought to be as constant as the chymist's fire, to make any great production; and if it goes out for an hour, perhaps the whole operation fails. Temple.

The morning, as mistaken, turns about;
And all her early fires again go out. Dryden.

Let the acquaintance be decently buried, and the flame rather go out than be smothered. Collier.

My blood runs cold, my heart forgets to heave,
And life itself goes out at thy displeasure. Addif.

And at her felt approach and secret might,
Art after art goes out, and all is night. Pope.

67. To Go through. To perform thoroughly; to execute.

Finding Pyrocles every way able to go through with that kind of life, he was as desirous for his sake as for his own to enter into it. Sidney.

If you can as well go through with the statute laws of that land, I will think you have not lost all your time there. Spenser.

Kings ought not to suffer their council to go through with the resolution and direction, as if it depended on them, but take the matter back into their own hands. Bacon.

He much feared the earl of Antrim had not steadiness of mind enough to go through with such an undertaking. Clarendon.

The amazing difficulty and greatness of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting heartily about such a task, as he despairs ever to go through with it. South.

The powers in Germany are borrowing money,
in order to go through their part of the expence.

68. To Go through. To suffer; to undergo.

I tell thee that it is absolutely necessary for the common good that thou shouldst go through this operation. Arbuthnot.

69. To Go upon. To take as a principle.

This supposition I have gone upon through those papers. Addison.

70. The senses of this word are very indis- tinct; its general notion is motion or progression. It commonly expresses passage from a place, in opposition to come.
This is often observable even in figurative expressions. We say, the words that go before and that come after: to-day goes away and to-morrow comes.

Go to. interj. Come, come, take the right course. A scornful exhortation.

Go to then, O thou far renowned son Of great Apollo; shew thy famous might In medicine. Spenser.

Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow:
Let me be clear of thee. Shakspeare.

My favour is not bought with words like these:
Go to; you'll teach your tongue another tale.

Go-BETWEEN. n. f. [go and between.] One that transacts business by running between two parties. Commonly in an ill sense.

Even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven. Shakspeare.

Go-BY. n. f. Delusion; artifice; circum-vention; overreach.

Except an apprentice is instructed how to adulterate and varnish, and give you the go by upon occasion, his master may be charged with neglect.

Go-CART. n. f. [go and cart.] A machine in which children are enclosed to teach them to walk, and which they push forward without danger of falling.

Young children, who are try'd in
Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding,
When members knit, and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer. Prior.

GOAD. n. f. [gad, Saxon.] A pointed instrument with which oxen are driven forward.

Oft in his harden'd hand a goad he bears. Pope.

To GOAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prick or drive with the goad.
2. To incite; to stimulate; to instigate; to drive forward.

Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Shakspeare.

Goaded with most sharp occasions,
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your own virtues. Shakspeare.

Of all that breathes the various progeny,
Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee. Dryd.

GOAL. n. f. [gaule, French, a long pole, set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. The landmark set up to bound a race;

the point marked out to which racers run.

As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields,
Part curb their fiery steeds, or flun the goal
With rapid wheels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

And the slope sun his upward beam
Shoots against the dusky pole,
Pacing toward the other goal. Milton.

2. The starting post.

Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race? Dryden's Virgil.

3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.

Each individual seeks a several goal;
But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole. Pope.

So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole. Pope.

4. It is sometimes improperly written for gaol, or jail.

GOAR. n. f. [goror, Welsh.] Any edging sewed upon cloth to strengthen it. Skinner.

GOAT. n. f. [gatz, Saxon and Scottish.]
A ruminant animal that seems a middle species between deer and sheep.

Gall of goat, and slips of yew. Shakspeare.

We Cyclops care not for your goat-fel Jove,
Nor other blest ones; we are better farre. Chapm.

You may draw naked boys riding and playing with their papermills upot goats, eagles, or dolphins. Peacham.

The little bear that rock'd the mighty Jove,
The swan whose borrow'd shape conceal'd his love,

Are grac'd with light; the nursing goat's repaid
With heav'n, and duty rais'd the pious maid.

GOATBEARD. n. f. [goat and beard; barba
capri.] A plant.

GOATCHAFER. n. f. An insect; a kind of beetle. Bailey.

GOATHERD. n. f. [gatz and hynd, Sax.
a feeder or tender.] One whose employment is to tend goats.

Is not thilk same goatherd proud,
That sits on yonder bank,
Whose straying herd themselves doth shroud

Among the bushes rank? Spenser's Pastoral.

They first gave the goatherd good contentment, and the marquis and his servant chased the kid about the stack. Wotton.

GOATMARJORAM. n. f. The same with GOATBEARD.

GOATSMILK. n. f. [goat and milk. This is more properly two words.]

After the fever and such like accidents are diminished, asses and goatsmilk may be necessary.

GOATMILKER. n. f. [goat and milker.]
A kind of owl so called from sucking goats. Bailey.

GOATS RUE. n. f. [galega.] A plant.

Goat's Rue has the reputation of being a great alexipharmick and sudorifick: the Italians eat it raw and boiled; with us it is of no esteem. Hill.

GOATSKIN. n. f. [goat and skin.]

Then fill'd two goatskins, with her hands divine:
With water one, and one with fable wine. Pope.

GOATS-THORN. n. f. [goat and thorn.]
An herb.

GOATISH. adj. [from goat.] Resembling a goat in any quality: as rankness; lust.

An admirable evasion of a whoremaster, man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star. Shakspeare's King Lear.

The last is notorious for its goatish smell, and tufts not unlike the beard of that lecherous animal. More against Atheism.

G O B. n. f. [gobe, French.] A small quantity. A low word.

Do'st think I have so little wit as to part with such a gob of money? L'Estrange.

G O'BBET. n. f. [gobe, French.] A mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once.

Therewith she spew'd, out of her filthy maw, A flood of poison, horrible and black, Full of great lumps of flesh and gobbets raw. Spenser.

By devilish policy art thou grown great, A like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd With gobbets of thy mother's bleeding heart. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

The cooks, slicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandys' Travels.

The giant gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood, Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den, Belching raw gobbets from his maw, o'ercharg'd With purple wine and cruddled gore confus'd. Addison.

To G O'BBET. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow at a mouthful. A low word.

Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and gobbets up both together. L'Estrange.

To G O'BBLE. v. a. [gobber, to swallow, old French.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up now and then a piece of the coat along with them. L'Estrange.

Of last year's corn in barn great store; Fat turkeys gobbling at the door. Prior.

The time too precious now to waste, And supper gobbled up in haste, Again afresh to cards they run. Swift.

G O'BBLER. n. f. [from gobble.] One that devours in haste; a gormand; a greedy eater.

G O'BLET. n. f. [goblet, French.] A bowl, or cup, that holds a large draught.

My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakspeare.
We love not loaded boards, and goblets crown'd;
But free from surfeits our repose is found. Denham.

Crown high the goblets with a chearful draught;
Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought. Dryden.

G O'BLIN. n. f. [French; gobeline, which Spenser has once retained; writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that elfe and goblin is Guelph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nurses with the name of the other: but it appears that elfe is Welsh, and much older than those factions. Eilff uisbon, are phantoms of the night, and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named goboldi, from which gobeline might be derived.]

1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.

Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell!
Shakspeare.

To whom the goblin, full of wrath, reply'd,
Art thou that traitor angel? Milton's Par. Lost.

Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark. Locke.

2. A fairy; an elf.

His son was Elfinel, who overcame
The wicked gobbelines in bloody field;
But Elfant was of most renowned fame,
Who of all crystal did Panthea build. Spenser.
Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints

With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps. Shakspeare's Tempest.

Mean time the village rouses up the fire,
While well attested, and as well believ'd,
Heard solemn goes the goblin story round. Thomson.

G O D. n. f. [god, Saxon, which likewise signifies good. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonic dialects.]

1. The Supreme Being.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. John.

God above Deal between thee and me. Shakspeare.

All the churches of God are united into one by the unity of discipline and government, by virtue whereof the same Christ ruleth in them all. Pearson.

The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy. Grew's Cosmologia.

2. A false god; an idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed. Exod.

As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods,
They kill us for their sport. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing north, and Hyperborean seas,
And Scythian colds, and Thracia's winter coast,
Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most. Dryden.

3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly. Philippians.

I am not Licio,
But one that scorns to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion. Shakspeare.

To G O D. v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man
Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay *god*led me, indeed. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

G O'DCHILD. n. f. [god and child.] A term of spiritual relation; one for whom one became sponsor at baptism, and promised to see educated as a christian.

G O'DDAUGHTER. n. f. [god and daughter.] A girl for whom one became sponsor at baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

G O'DDESS. n. f. [from god.] A female divinity.

Hear, nature, hear; dear *god*dess hear a father?
Shakspeare.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a *god*dess, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthy, thou a heav'nly love. Shakspeare.

I long have waited in the temple nigh,
Built to the gracious *god*dess Clemency;
But reverence thou the pow'r. Dryden.

From his seat the *god*dess born arose,
And thus undaunted spoke. Dryden's Fables.

When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself among a crowd of *god*desses, she was distinguished by her graceful stature and superior beauty. Addison.

Modesty withheld the *god*dess' train. Pope.

G O'DDESS-LIKE. adj. [*god*dess and like.] Resembling a *god*dess.

Then female voices from the shore I heard;
A maid amidst them *god*dess-like appear'd. Pope.

G O'DFATHER. n. f. [god and father.] The sponsor at the font.

He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour as to stand *god*father to his child. Bacon's Henry vii.

Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow; and, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some *god*father with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator. Hammond.

G O'DHEAD. n. f. [from god.]

1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature. It is used both of idols and of the true God.

Be content:

Your low-laid son our *god*head will uplift. Shakspeare.

At the holy mount

Of heav'n's high-seated top, th' imperial throne
Of *god*head, fix'd for ever firm and sure,
The filial pow'r arriv'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

So may thy *god*head be confest,
So the returning year be blest. Prior.

2. A deity in person; a god or *god*dess.

Were your *god*heads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shakspeare's Timon.

Adoring first the genius of the place,
The nymphs and native *god*heads yet unknown. Dryden's Aeneid.

G O'DLESS. adj. [from god.] Without sense of duty to God; atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both *god*less, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hooker.

That *god*less crew

Rebellious. Milton.

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes
Of *god*less men, and of rebellious times,
Him his ungrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus, into banishment. Dryden.

G O'DLIKE. adj. [god and like.] Divine; resembling a divinity; supremely excellent.

Thus Adam his illustrious guest besought,
And thus the *god*like angels answer'd mild. Milton.

Musing and much revolving in his breast,
How best the mighty work he might begin
Of Saviour to mankind, and which way first Publish his *god*like office now mature. Milton.

That prince shall be so wise and *god*like, as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind. Locke.

G O'DLING. n. f. [from god.] A little divinity; a diminutive god.

Thy puny *god*lings of inferior race,
Whose humble statues are content with brass. Dryden's Juvenal.

G O'DLINESS. n. f. [from *god*ly.]

1. Piety to God.

2. General observation of all the duties prescribed by religion.

Nor ortelans nor godwits crown his board. Cowley.

Go'DYELD. } adv. [corrupted from God
Go'DYIELD. } shield or protect.] A term of thanks. Not used.

Herein I teach you,
How you should bid godyield us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble. Shakspeare.

GOEL. adj. [goelen, Saxon.] Yellow.

An old word.
In March at the furthest, dry season or wet,
Hop roots so well chosen let skilful go set;
The goeler and younger, the better I love;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove. Tusser.

Go'ER. n. f. [from go.]

1. One that goes; a runner.

I would they were in Africk both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back. Shakspeare's Cymb.

Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate them

But goers backward. Shakspeare.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me. Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

A double mantle, cast
A'thwart his shoulders, his faire goers grac'd
With fitted shoes. Chapman.

To Go'GGLE. v. n. To look askint.

Inflam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place,
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl. Hudibras.
Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want. Dryden.

GOGGLE-EYED. adj. [reegl egen, Sax.] Squint-eyed; not looking straight.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves. Ascham

Go'ING. n. f. [from go.]

1. The act of walking.

When nobles are their taylor's tutors,
No hereticks burnt, but wenches suitors,
Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shall be us'd with feet. Shakspeare.

2. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight: that is the twentieth part of their going. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

3. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound. Milton.

Go'LA. n. f. The same with CYMATIUM.

In a cornice the gola or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make

GOLD. n. f. [gold, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geel, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelten, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money. Peacham on Drawing.

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies, not to be injured either by air, or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. Pure Gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Fossils.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Natural History.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shaksp.

We readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.

The *gold*fraught vessel which mad tempests beat,
He sees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden

2. Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shaksp.

Thou that so stoutly had resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσόν ἀφ' ὁδοῦ; and animamque moresque aureos educit in astra. Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakspeare.

GOLD of Pleasure. n. f. [myagrum.] A plant.

Go'LD BEATER. n. f. [gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold to gild other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to allow with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Boyle.

Go'LD BEATER'S Skin. n. f. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.

When your gillyflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Mortimer.

Go'LD BOUND. adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.

Thy air,
Thou other goldbound brow is like the first. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Go'LDEN. adj. [from gold.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.

O would to God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to fear me to the brain. Shaksp.
Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep. Shakspeare.

'Tis better to be lowly born
Than wear a golden sorrow. Shakspeare.
Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Grashaw.
To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
Howe'er she shines all golden to you now. Dryden.
And see the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining soft on many a golden cloud. Rowe.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.

Golden rusteting hath a gold coloured coat under a russet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour. Mortimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.

I have bought
Golden opinions from all sort of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
That verse which they commonly call golden, has two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.
Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others as we would have others deal with us. Watts' Logic.

5. Happy; resembling the age of gold.

Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world. Shakspeare.

Go'LDEN Saxifrage. n. f. [chrysophenium.] An herb.

Go'LDENLY. adv. [from golden.] Delightfully; splendidly.

My brother Jacques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit. Shakspeare.

Go'LD FINCH. n. f. [goldfinc, Saxon.] A singing bird, so named from his golden colour. This is called in Staffordshire a proud tailor.

Of singing birds they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, Canary-birds, blackbirds, thrushes,
and divers others. Carew.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

Go'LD FINDER. n. f. [gold and find.] One who finds gold. A term ludicrously applied to those that empty jakes.

His empty paunch that he might fill,
He suck'd his vittels through a quill;
Untouch'd it pass'd between his grinders,
Or 't had been happy for goldfinders. Swift.
GO'LDHAMMER. n. f. A kind of bird. Diæ.

GO'LDING. n. f. A sort of apple. Diæ.

GO'LDNEY. n. f. A sort of fish, otherwise called gilt-head. Diæ.

GO'LDPLEASURE. n. f. An herb. Diæ.

GO'LD SIZE. n. f. A glue of a golden colour; glue used by gilders.
The gum of ivy is good to put into your goldsize, and other colours. Peacham on Drawing.

GO'LD SMITH. n. f. [gold and smith, Sax.]
1. One who manufactures gold.
Neither chain nor goldsmith came to me. Shaksp.
2. A banker; one who keeps money for others in his hands.
The goldsmith or scrivener, who takes all your fortune to dispose of, when he has beforehand resolved to break the following day, does surely deserve the gallows. Swift.

GO'LDYLOCKS. n. f. [coma aurea, Lat.]
A plant.

GOLL. n. f. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from pal or pol, whence pealban, to handle or manage.] Hands; paws;
claws. Used in contempt, and obsolete.
They set hands, and Mopsa put her golden golls among them; and blind fortune, that saw not the colour of them, gave her the pre-eminence. Sidney.

GOME. n. f. The black grease of a cartwheel. Bailey.

GOMPHOSIS. n. f. A particular form of articulation.
Gomphosis is the connexion of a tooth to its socket. Wifeman.

GONDOLA. n. f. [gondole, French.] A boat much used in Venice; a small boat.
He saw did swim
Along the shore, as swift as glance of eye,
A little gondelay bedecked trim
With boughs and arbours woven cunningly. Spenser.
In a gondola were seen together Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica. Shakspere.
As with gondolas and men, his Good excellence the duke of Venice Sails out, and gives the gulph a ring. Prior.

GONDOLIER. n. f. [from gondola.] A boatman; one that rows a gondola.
Your fair daughter,
Transported with no worse nor better guard,
But with a knave of hire, a gondolier,
To the gross claps of a lascivious Moor. Shaksp.

GONE. part. preter. [from go. See To GO.]
1. Advanced; forward in progress.
I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone with it, only by being put into broomlands. Mortimer.
The observator is much the brisker of the two,
and, I think, farther gone of late in lyes and impudence than his presbyterian brother. Swift.
2. Ruined; undone.
He must know 'tis none of your daughter, nor my siller: we are gone else. Shakspere.
3. Past.
I'll tell the story of my life,
And the particular accidents gone by,
Since I came to this isle. Shakspere's Tempest.
4. Lost; departed.
When her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas. Acts.
Speech is confined to the living, and imparted to only those that are in presence; and is transient and gone. Holder.

5. Dead; departed from life.
I mourn Adonis dead and gone. Oldham.
A dog, that has his nose held in the vapour, loses all signs of life; but carried into the air, or thrown into a lake, recovers, if not quite gone. Addison on Italy.

GO'NFALON. } n. f. [gonfanon, French; GO'NFANON. } gunfana, Islandick, from gunn, a battle, and fani, a flag. Lye.
An ensign; a standard.
Ten thousand thousand ensigns high advanc'd,
Standards and gonfalons, 'twixt van and rear,
Stream in the air. Milton.

GONORRHOEA. n. f. [γόνρρ and ῥεα.]
A morbid running of venereal hurts.
Rauty mummy or stone mummy grows on the tops of high rocks: they powder and boil it in milk, and then give it to stop gonorrhoeas. Woodward on Fossils.

GOOD. adj. comp. better, superl. best.
[god, Saxon; goed, Dutch.]
1. Having, either generally or for any particular end, such physical qualities as are expected or desired; not bad;
not evil.
God saw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good. Genesis.
An universe of death! which God by curse Created evil; for evil only good. Milton.
Resolv'd
From an ill cause to draw a good effect. Dryden.
Notwithstanding this criticism the verses were good. Spectator.
A man is no more to be praised upon this account, than because he has a regular pulse and a good digestion. Addison.
Ah! ne'er so dire a thirst of glory boast,
Nor in the critick let the man be lost!
Good nature and good sense must ever join;
To err is human, to forgive, divine. Pope.
2. Proper; fit; convenient; right; not wrong.
Amongst a man's peers a man shall be sure of familiarity, and therefore it is good a little to keep state; amongst a man's inferiors one shall be sure of reverence, and therefore it is good a little to be familiar. Bacon.
If you think good, give Martius leave. Bacon.
It was a good time to comply with the importunity of the gentlemen of Suffolk. Clarendon.

3. Conducive to happiness.
It is not good that the man should be alone. Genesis.
We may as well pretend to obtain the good which we want without God's assistance, as to know what is good for us without his direction. Smalridge's Sermons.

4. Uncorrupted; undamaged.
He also bartered away plumbs, that would have rotted in a week, for nuts, that would last good for his eating a whole year. Locke.

5. Wholesome; salubrious.
A man first builds a country seat,
Then finds the walls not good to eat. Prior.

6. Medicinal; salutary.
The water of Nilus is sweeter than other waters in taste, and it is excellent good for the stone and hypochondriack melancholy. Bacon.

7. Pleasant to the taste.
Eat thou honey, because it is good; and the honeycomb, which is sweet. Proverbs.
Of herbs and plants some are good to eat raw;
as lettuce, endive, and purslane. Bacon.

8. Complete; full.
The protestant subjects of the abbey make up a good third of its people. Addison on Italy.

9. Useful; valuable.
All quality, that is good for any thing, is originally founded upon merit. Collier on Envy.
We discipline betimes those other creatures we would make useful and good for somewhat. Locke.

10. Sound; not false; not fallacious.
He is resolved now to shew how slight the propositions were which Luther let go for good. Atterbury.

11. Legal; valid; rightly claimed or held.
According to military custom the place was good, and the lieutenant of the colonel's company might well pretend to the next vacant captainship in the same regiment. Wotton.

12. Confirmed; attested; valid.
Ha! am I sure she's wrong'd? Perhaps 'tis malice!
Slave, make it clear, make good your accusation. Smith.

13. With as preceding. It has a kind of negative or inverted sense; as good as,
no better than.
Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude. Hebrews.

14. With as preceding. No worse.
He sharply reproved them as men of no courage, which, being many times as good as in possession of the victory, had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Knolles.
The master will be as good as his word, for his own business. L'Estrange.

15. Well qualified; not deficient.
If they had held their royalties by that title, either there must have been but one sovereign over them all, or else every father of a family had been as good a prince, and had as good a claim to royalty as these. Locke.

16. Skilful; ready; dexterous.
Flatter him it may, I confess; as those are generally good at flattering who are good for nothing else. South.
I make my way where-e'er I see my foe;
But you, my lord, are good at a retreat. Dryden.

17. Happy; prosperous.
Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. Psalms.
Many good morrows to my noble lord!
—Good morrow, Catesby, you are early stirring. Shakspere.
Good e'en, neighbours;
Good e'en to you all, good e'en to you all. Shaksp.
At my window bid good morrow. Milton.
Good morrow, Portius! let us once embrace. Addison.

18. Honourable.
They cast to get themselves a name,
Regardless whether good or evil fame. Milton.
Silence, the knave's repute, the whore's good name,
The only honour of the wishing dame. Pope.

19. Cheerful; gay. Joined with any words expressing temper of mind.
They may be of good comfort, and ever go cheerfully about their own affairs. 2 Mac.
Quietness improves into cheerfulness, enough to make me just so good humoured as to wish that world well. Pope.

20. Considerable; not small though not very great.
A good while ago God made choice that the gentiles by any mouth should hear the word. Acts.
The plant, having a great stalk and top, doth prey upon the grass a good way about by drawing the juice of the earth from it. Bacon.
Myrtle and pomegranate, if they be planted though a good space one from the other, will meet. Peacham on Drawing.
The king had provided a good fleet, and a body of three thousand foot to be embarked. Clarendon.
We may suppose a great many degrees of lit-tleness and lightness in these earthy particles, so as many of them might float in the air a good while, like exhalations, before they fell down. Burnet.
They held a good share of civil and military employments during the whole time of the usurpation. Swift.

21. Elegant; decent; delicate: with breeding.

If the critick has published nothing but rules and observations in criticism, I then consider whether there be a propriety and elegance in his thoughts and words, clearness and delicacy in his remarks, wit and good breeding in his railery. Addison's Guardian.

Mankind have been forced to invent a kind of artificial humanity, which is what we express by the word good breeding. Addison.

Those among them, who return into their several countries, are sure to be followed and imitated as the greatest patterns of wit and good-breeding. Swift.

22. Real; serious; not feigned.

Love not in good earnest, nor no farther in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou may'st in honour come off again. Shaksp.

23. Rich; of credit; able to fulfil engagements.

Antonio is a good man: my meaning, in saying that he is a good man, is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shaksp.

24. Having moral qualities, such as are wished; virtuous; pious; religious: applied both to persons and actions. Not bad; not evil.

For a good man some would even dare to die. Romans.

The woman hath wrought a good work upon me. Matthew.

All man's works on me, Good or not good, ingraft my merit, these Shall perfect, and for these my death shall pay. Milton.

What reward Awaits the good, the rest what punishment. Milton.

The only Son of light In a dark age against example good, Against allurements. Milton.

Such follow him, as shall be registred Part good, part bad, of bad the larger scroll. Milton.

Grant the bad what happiness they would, One they must want, which is to pass for good. Pope.

Why drew Marfeilles' good bishop purer breath, When nature sicken'd, and each gale was death? Pope.

Such was Roscommon, not more learn'd than good, With manners gen'rous as his noble blood. Pope.

No farther intercourse with Heav'n had he, But left good works to men of low degree. Harte.

25. Kind; soft; benevolent.

Matters being so turned in her, that where at first liking her manners did breed good will, now good will became the chief cause of liking her manners. Sidney.

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will towards men. Luke.

Without good nature man is but a better kind of vermin. Bacon.

Here we are lov'd, and there we love; Good nature now and passion strive

Which of the two should be above, And laws unto the other give. Suckling.

'Tis no wonder if that which affords so little glory to God, hath no more good will for men. Decay of Piety.

When you shall see him, sir, to die for pity, 'Twere such a thing, 'twould so deceive the world,

'Twould make the people think you were good natur'd. Denham.

To teach him betimes to love and be good natur'd to others, is to lay early the true foundation of an honest man. Locke.

Good sense and good nature are never separated, though the ignorant world has thought otherwise. Dryden.

Affability, mildness, tenderness, and a word which I would fain bring back to its original fignification of virtue, I mean good nature, are of daily use. Dryden.

This doctrine of God's good will towards men, this command of men's proportionable good will to one another, is not this the very body and substance, this the very spirit and life of our Saviour's whole institution? Sprat.

It was his greatest pleasure to spread his healing wings over every place, and to make every one sensible of his good will to mankind. Calamy.

How could you chide the young good natur'd prince,

And drive him from you with so stern an air. Addison's Cato.

26. Favourable; loving.

But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt. 1 Samuel.

Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart. Psalms.

You have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you. 1 Thessalonians.

This idea must necessarily be adequate, being referred to nothing else but itself, nor made by any other original but the good liking and will of him that first made this combination. Locke.

27. Companionable; sociable; merry. Often used ironically.

Though he did not draw the good fellows to him by drinking, yet he eat well. Clarendon.

Not being permitted to drink without eating, will prevent the custom of having the cup often at his nose; a dangerous beginning and preparation to good fellowship. Locke.

It was well known, that Sir Roger had been a good fellow in his youth. Arbutnot.

28. It is sometimes used as an epithet of slight contempt, implying a kind of negative virtue or bare freedom from ill.

My good man, as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause. Shaksp.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison's Spectator.

29. In a ludicrous sense.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to louse themselves in the sunshine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness. Spenser.

30. Hearty; earnest; not dubious.

He, that saw the time fit for the delivery he intended, called unto us to follow him, which we both, bound by oath, and willing by good will, obeyed. Sidney.

The good will of the nation to the present war has been since but too much experienced by the successes that have attended it. Temple.

Good will, she said, my want of strength supplies: And diligence shall give what age denies. Dryden.

31. In Good time. Not too fast.

In good time, replies another, you have heard them dispute against a vacuum in the schools. Collier on Human Reason.

32. In Good sooth. Really; seriously.

What, must I hold a candle to my shames? They in themselves, good sooth are too too light. Shaksp.

33. Good. [To make.] To keep; to maintain; not to give up; not to abandon.

There died upon the place all the chieftains, all making good the fight without any ground given. Bacon's Henry VII.

He forced them to retire in spite of their dragons, which were placed there to make good their retreat. Clarendon.

Since we claim a proper interest above others in the pre-eminent rights of the household of faith, then to make good that claim, we are obliged above others to conform to the proper manners and virtues that belong to this household. Sprat.

He without fear a dangerous war pursues; As honour made him first the danger chuse, So still he makes it good on virtue's score. Dryden.

34. Good. [To make.] To confirm; to establish.

I farther will maintain Upon his bad life to make all this good. Shaksp.

To make good this explication of the article, it will be necessary to prove that the church, which our Saviour founded and the apostles gathered, was to receive a constant and perpetual accession. Pearson.

These propositions I shall endeavour to make good. Smalridge.

35. Good. [To make.] To perform.

While she so far extends her grace, She makes but good the promise of her face. Waller.

36. Good. [To make.] To supply.

Every distinct being has somewhat peculiar to itself, to make good in one circumstance what it wants in another. L'Estrange.

Good. n. f.

1. That which physically contributes to happiness; benefit; advantage; the contrary to evil or misery.

I fear the emperor means no good to us. Shaksp.

Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me. Shaksp.

He wav'd indifferently 'twixt them, doing neither good nor harm. Shaksp.

Love with fear the only God, Merciful over all his works, with good Still overcoming evil. Milton.

Nature in man's heart, her laws doth pen, Prescribing truth to wit, and good to will. Davies.

The lessening or escaping of evil is to be reckoned under the notion of good: the lessening or loss of good is to be reckoned under the notion of evil. Wilkins.

This caution will have also this good in it, that it will put them upon considering, and teach them the necessity of examining more than they do. Locke.

Good is what is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us; or else to procure or preserve us in the possession of any other good, or absence of any evil. Locke.

Refuse to leave thy destin'd charge too soon, And for the church's good defer thy own. Prior.

Works may have more wit than does them good, As bodies perish through excess of blood. Pope.

A thirst after truth, and a desire of good, are principles which still act with a great and universal force. Rogers.

2. Prosperity; advancement.

If he had employ'd Those excellent gifts of fortune and of nature Unto the good, not ruin of the state. Ben Jonson.

3. Earnest; not jest.

The good woman never died after this, 'till she came to die for good and all. L'Estrange.

4. Moral qualities, such as are desirable; virtue; righteousness; piety; the contrary to wickedness.

Depart from evil and do good. Psalms.

Not only carnal good from evil does not justify; but no good, no not a purposed good, can make evil good. Holyday.

O sons, like one of us is Man become, To know both good and evil, since his taste Of that defended fruit, but let him boast His knowledge of good lost, and evil got, Happier had it suffic'd him to have known Good by itself, and evil not at all. Milton.

Empty of all good, wherein consists Woman's domestick honour, and chief praise. Milton.

By good, I question not but good, morally so called bonum honestum, ought, chiefly at least, to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure the bonum utile or jucundum, hardly come into any account here. South.

Nor holds this earth a more deserving knight
For virtue, valour, and for noble blood,
Truth, honour, all that is compriz'd in good.

Dryden.

5. Good placed after bad, with as, seems a substantive; but the expression is, I think, vitious; and good is rather an adjective elliptically used, or it may be considered as adverbial. See Good. adv.

The pilot must intend some port before he steers his course, or he had as good leave his vessel to the direction of the winds, and the government of the waves.

South.

Without good nature and gratitude, men had as good live in a wilderness as in a society.

L'Estrange.

Good. adv.

1. Well; not ill; not amiss.

2. As Good. No worse.

Was I to have never parted from thy side,
As good have grown there still a lifeless rib.

Milton.

Says the cuckoo to the hawk, Had you not as good have been eating worms now as pigeons?

L'Estrange.

Good. interjection. Well! right! It is sometimes used ironically.

GOOD-CONDITIONED. adj. Without ill qualities or symptoms. Used both of things and persons, but not elegantly.

No surgeon dilates an abscess of any kind by injections, when the pus is good-conditioned.

Sharp's Surgery.

GOOD-NOW. interjection.

1. In good time; a la bonne heure. A gentle exclamation of entreaty. It is now a low word.

Good-now, sit down, and tell me, 'he that knows,

Why this same watch? Shakspeare's Hamlet.

2. A soft exclamation of wonder.

Good-now, good-now, how your devotions jump with mine!

Dryden.

GOODLINESS. n. f. [from goodly.] Beauty; grace; elegance.

She sung this song with a voice no less beautiful to his ears, than her goodliness was full of harmony to his eyes.

Sidney.

The stateliness of houses, the goodliness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye.

Hooker.

GOODLY. adj. [from good.]

1. Beautiful; graceful; fine; splendid. Little in use.

A prince of a goodly aspect, and the more goodly by a grave majesty, wherewith his mind did deck his outward graces.

Sidney.

A goodly city is this Antium.

Shakspeare.

Patience and sorrow strove

Which should express her goodliest: you have seen Sunshine and rain at once. Her smiles and tears Were like a wetter May.

Shakspeare.

Here from gracious England have I offer

Of goodly thousands.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Rebekah took goodly raiment of her eldest son
Esau, and put them upon Jacob.

Genesis.

There was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he.

1 Sam.

Both younger than they were; of stature more;
And all their formes, much goodlier then before.

Chapman.

He had not made them any recompence for their goodly houses and olive gardens, destroyed in the former wars.

Knolles.

The goodliest man of men since born
His sons, the fairest of her daughters Eve.

Milton.

Of the fourth Edward was his noble song;
Fierce, goodly, valiant, beautiful, and young.

Waller.

Not long since, walking in the field,
My nurse and I, we there beheld

A goodly fruit, which, tempting me,
I would have pluck'd.

Waller.

How full of ornament is all I view
In all its parts! and seems as beautiful as new:
O goodly order'd work! O power divine!
Of thee I am, and what I am is thine!

Dryden.

His eldest born, a goodly youth to view,
Excell'd the rest in shape and outward shew;
Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd,
But of a heavy, dull, degen'rate mind.

Dryden.

2. Bulky; swelling; affectedly turgid.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,
Goodly and great he sails behind his link.

Dryd.

3. Happy; desirable; gay.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately inured to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor.

Spenser.

We have many goodly days to see.

Shakspeare.

GOODLY. adv. Excellently. Obsolete.

There Alma, like a virgin queen most bright,
Doth flourish in all beauty excellent;
And to her guests doth bounteous banquet dight,
Attemper'd goodly well for health and for delight.

Spenser.

GOODLYHOOD. n. f. [from goodly.] Grace; goodness. Obsolete.

But mote thy goodlyhood forgive it me,
To meet which of the gods I shall thee name.

Spenser.

GOODMAN. n. f. [from good and man.]

1. A slight appellation of civility: generally ironical.

How now, what's the matter? part.

—With you, goodman boy, if you please: come,
I'll flesh ye.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

2. A rustick term of compliment; gasser.

Old goodman Dobson of the green,
Remembers he the trees has seen.

Swift.

GOODNESS. n. f. [from good.] Desirable qualities either moral or physical; kindness; favour.

If for any thing he loved greatness, it was because therein he might exercise his goodness.

Sidney.

There is in all things an appetite or desire, whereby they incline to something which they may be; all which perfections are contained under the general name of goodness.

Hooker.

All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.

—Yes, that goodness

Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion:
The goodness of your intercepted packets
You writ to the pope against the king: your goodness,

Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

There's no goodness in thy face.

Shakspeare.

There is a general, or natural goodness in creatures, and a more special or moral goodness.

Perkins.

The goodness of every thing is measured by its end and use, and that's the best thing which serves the best end and purpose.

Tillotson.

All made very particular relations of the strength of the Scots army, the excellent discipline that was observed in it, and the goodness of the men.

Clarendon.

No body can say that tobacco of the same goodness is risen in respect of itself; one pound of the same goodness will never exchange for a pound and a quarter of the same goodness.

Locke.

GOODS. n. f. [from good.]

1. Moveables in a house.

That giv'it to such a guest

As my poor selfe, of all thy goods the best.

Chapman.

2. Personal or moveable estate.

That a writ be su'd against you,
To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Castles, and whatsoever.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

This hinders nothing the proceedings of the civil courts, which respect the temporal punishment upon body and goods.

Lestry.

3. Wares; freight; merchandise.

Her majesty, when the goods of our English merchants were attached by the duke of Alva, arrested likewise the goods of the Low Dutch here in England.

Raleigh's Essays.

Salce, that scorn'd all pow'r and laws of men,
Goods with their owners hurrying to their den.

Waller.

GOODY. n. f. [corrupted from good wife.]

A low term of civility used to mean persons.

Soft, goody sheep, then said the fox, not so;
Unto the king so rash you may not go.

Hubbard's Tale.

Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd,
Which erst I saw when goody Dobson dy'd.

Gay.

Plain goody would no longer down;
'Twas madam in her program gown.

Swift.

GOODYSHIP. n. f. [from goody.] The quality of a goody. Ludicrous.

The more shame for her goodyship,
To give so near a friend the slip.

Hubbards.

GOOSE. n. f. plural geese. [gor, Saxon;
goes, Dutch; garwe, Erse, ling. gewey, plural.]

1. A large waterfowl proverbially noted,
I know not why, for foolishness.

Thou cream-faced lown,

Where got'st thou that goose look?

Shakspeare.

Since I pluck't geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten till lately.

Shakspeare.

Birds most easy to be drawn are waterfowl; as the goose and swan.

Peacham on Drawing.

Nor watchful dogs, nor the more wakeful geese,
Disturb with nightly noise the sacred peace.

Dryden's Fables.

2. A taylor's smoothing iron.

Come in, taylor: here you may roast your goose.

Shakspeare.

Mortimer.

GORBELLIED. adj. [from gorbelly.] Fat;
bigbellied; having swelling paunches.

Hang ye gorbellied knaves, are you undone?
Ne, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

GORBELLY. n. f. [from gor, dung, and belly, according to Skinner and Junius. It may perhaps come from gor,

Welsh, beyond, too much; or, as seems to me more likely, may be contracted from gormand, or gorman's belly, the belly of a glutton.] A big paunch;

a swelling belly. A term of reproach for a fat man.

GORD. n. f. An instrument of gaming, as appears from Beaumont and Fletcher.

Warburton.

Thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gords and ninepins. Beaumont and Fletcher.

Let vultures gripe thy guts; for gords and Fulham holds. Shakspeare.

GORE. n. f. [gone, Saxon; gôr, Welsh, fanious matter.]

1. Blood effused from the body.

A griesly wound,

From which forth gush'd a stream of gore blood thick,

That all her goodly garment stain'd around, And into a deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground. Spenser.

Another's crimes the youth unhappy bore, Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden's Æn.

2. Blood clotted or congealed.

The bloody fact

Will be aveng'd; though here thou see him die, Rolling in dust and gore. Milton's Paradise Lost.

His horrid beard and knotted tresses stood Stiff with his gore, and all his wounds ran blood. Denham.

To GORE. v. a. [geberian, Saxon.]

1. To stab; to pierce.

Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear. Shakspeare's Richard II.

No weaker lion's by a stronger slain; Nor from his larger tusks the forest boar Commission takes his brother swine to gore. Tate's Juvenal.

For arms his men long pikes and jav'ins bore, And poles with pointed steel their foes in battle gore. Dryden.

2. To pierce with a horn.

Some tofs'd, some gor'd, some trampling down he kill'd. Dryden.

He idly butting, feigns

His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk. Thomson.

GORGE. n. f. [gorge, French.]

1. The throat; the swallow.

There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the sight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which the watry instruments did make their gorge deliver. Sidney.

And now how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor. Shakspeare's Othello.

2. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Not in use.

And all the way, most like a brutish beast, He spewed up his gorge, that all did him detest. Spenser.

To GORGE. v. n. [gorger, French.]

1. To fill up the throat; to glut; to satiate.

Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and full. Shakspeare.

He that makes his generation messes,

To gorge his appetite. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite. Dryden.

I desire that they will not gorge the lion either with nonsense or obscenity. Addison.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds, To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia. Addison's Cato.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,

Lay stretcht at length, and snoring in his den. Addison.

2. To swallow: as, the fish has gorged the book.

Go'RGED. adj. [from gorge.] Having a gorge or throat.

Look up a height, the shrill gorg'd lark so far Cannot be seen or heard. Shakspeare.

GORGEOUS. adj. [gorgias, old French. Skinner.] Fine; splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.

O, that deceit should dwell

In such a gorgeous palace! Shakspeare.

As full of spirit as the month of May,

And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer. Shakspeare.

He bad them look upon themselves and upon their enemies, themselves dreadful, their enemies gorgeous and brave. Hayward.

The gorgeous east, with richest hand, Pours on her kings barbaric pearl and gold. Milton.

With gorgeous wings, the marks of sov'reign sway,

The two contending princes make their way. Dryden's Virgil.

GORGEOUSLY. adv. [from gorgeous.] Splendidly; magnificently; finely.

The duke, one solemn day, gorgeously clad in a suit all over spread with diamonds, lost one of them of good value. Wotton.

GORGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from gorgeous.] Splendour; magnificence; show.

Go'RGET. n. f. [from gorge.] The piece of armour that defends the throat.

He with a palsy fumbling on his gorget, Shakes in and out the rivet. Shakspeare.

He did oftentimes spend the night in the church alone praying, his headpiece, gorget, and gauntlets lying by him. Knolles.

See how his gorget peers above his gown, To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben Jonson.

About his neck a threefold gorget, As rough as trebled leathern target. Hudibras.

Go'RGON. n. f. [γοργών.] A monster with snaky hairs, of which the sight turned beholders to stone; any thing ugly or horrid.

Gorgons and hydras, and chimeras dire. Milton.

Why did'st thou not encounter man for man, And try the virtue of that gorgon face To stare me into stature. Dryden.

Go'RMAND. n. f. [gourmand, French.] A greedy eater; a ravenous luxurious feeder.

To Go'RMANDIZE. v. n. [from gormand.] To eat greedily; to feed ravenously.

2. Bloody; murderous; fatal. Not in use.

The obligation of our blood forbids A gory emulation 'twixt us twain. Shakspeare.

Go'SHAWK. n. f. [gor, goose, and hawc, a hawk.] A hawk of a large kind.

Such dread his awful visage on them cast; So seem poor doves at gosshawks fight aghast. Fairfax.

Go'SLING. n. f. [from goose.] 1. A young goose; a goose not yet full grown.

Why do you go nodding and wagging so like a fool, as if you were hipshot? says the goose to her gosling. L'Estrange.

Nature hath instructed even a brood of gossings to stick together, while the kite is hovering over their heads. Swift.

2. A katkin on nut-trees and pines.

Go'SPEL. n. f. [godeſ rpe, or God's or good tidings; εὐαγγέλιον; gofhel, ſkeal ſuach, happy tidings, Erse.]

1. God's word; the holy book of the christian revelation.

Thus may the gospel to the rising sun

Be spread, and flourish where it first begun. Waller.

All the decrees whereof scripture treateth are conditionate, receiving Christ as the gospel offers him, as Lord and Saviour; the former, as well as the latter, being the condition of scripture-election, and the rejecting, or not receiving him thus, the condition of the scripture-reprobation. Hammond.

How is a good christian animated and cheered by a stedfast belief of the promises of the gospel! Bentley.

2. Divinity; theology.

To Go'SPEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakspeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gossellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you so gospel'd

To pray for this good man, and for his issue, Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave? Shakspeare.

Go'SPELLER. n. f. [from gospel.] A name of the followers of Wickliffe, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

These gossellers have had their golden days, Have trodden down our holy Roman faith. Rowe.

Go'SSAMER. n. f. [gossipium, low Latin.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm sunny weather, especially about the time of autumn. Hanmer.

A lover may bestride the gossamer, That idles in the wanton summer air, And yet not fall, so light is vanity. Shakspeare.

Four nimble gnats the horses were, Their harnesses of gossamer. Drayton's Nymphid;

The filmy gossamer now flits no more, Nor halcyons bask on the short sunny shore. Dryden's Virgil.

Go'SSIP. n. f. [from god and ryb, relation, affinity, Saxon.]

1. One who answers for the child in baptism.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaud with me, After so long grief such nativity. Shakspeare.

At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips. Davies on Ireland.

2. A tippling companion.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl, In very likeness of a roasted crab,

And when she drinks against her lips I bob. Shakspeare.

3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.

To do the office of a neighbour, And be a gossip at his labour. Hudibras.

'Tis sung in ev'ry street, The common chat of gossips when they meet. Dryden.

To Go'SSIP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaud with me.
—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast.

Shakspeare.

His mother was a votress of my order,
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often hath the gossip by my side.
The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking; and gossipings not be robbed of their ancient privilege.

Locke.

He gives himself up to an idle gossiping conversation.

Laro.

2. To be a pot-companion.

Nor met with fortune, other than at feast,
Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping.

Shakspeare.

GOSSIPRED. n. f. [gossipry, from gossip.]

Gossipred or compaternity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent.

Davies.

GO'STING. n. f. [rubia.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

GOT. The preterit of get.

Titus Lartius writes, they fought together;
but Aufidius got off.

Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear, Though foul Therites got thee, thou shalt be Lov'd and esteem'd.

Dryden's Juvenal.

These regions and this realm my wars have got;

This mournful empire is the loser's lot.

Dryden.

When they began to reason about the means how the sea got thither, and away back again, there they were presently in the dark.

Woodward.

GOT. The part. pass. of get.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, in a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason.

Knolles.

A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the first point of submission to your will is got, will most times do.

Locke.

If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is got above the world?

Arbutnot's John Bull.

Thou wert from Aetna's burning entrails torn,
Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder borne.

Pope.

GO'TTEN. The part. pass. of get.

Wisdom cannot be gotten for gold.

Job.

Few of them, when they are gotten into an office, apply their thoughts to the execution of it.

Temple.

GOUD. n. f. Woad; a plant.

DiD.

GOVE. n. f. A mow.

Tusser.

To GOVE. v. n. To mow; to put in a gove, goff, or mow. An old word.

Load safe, carry home, follow time being fair,
Gove just in the barn, it is out of despair.

Tusser.

To GOVERN. v. a. [gouverner, French; gubernare, Latin.]

1. To rule as a chief magistrate.

This inconvenience is more hard to be redressed in the governor than the governed; as a malady in a vital part is more incurable than in an external.

Spenser on Ireland.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then
It grows impossible to govern men.

Waller.

2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.

I am at present against war, though it puts the power into my hands, and though such turbulent and naughty spirits as you are govern all things in times of peace.

Davenant.

The chief point, which he is to carry always in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his counsels, designs, and actions.

Atterbury.

3. To manage; to restrain.

Go after her, she's desperate; govern her.

Shakspeare.

4. [In grammar.] To have force with regard to syntax: as, amo governs the accusative case.

Listen, children, unto me,

And let this your lesson be,
In our language evermore

Words that govern go before. Mauger's Fr. Gr.

5. To pilot; to regulate the motions of a ship.

To GOVERN. v. n. To keep superiority; to behave with haughtiness.

By that rule,

Your wicked atoms may be working now

To give bad counsel, that you still may govern.

Dryden.

GOVERNABLE. adj. [from govern.] Submissive to authority; subject to rule;
obedient; manageable.

The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe.

Locke.

GOVERNANCE. n. f. [from govern.]

1. Government; rule; management.

Jonathan took the governance upon him at that time, and rose up instead of his brother Judas.

1 Maccabees.

2. Control, as that of a guardian.

Me he knew not, neither his own ill,
'Till through wise handling, and fair governance,
I him recurred to a better will.

Spenser.

What! shall king Henry be a pupil still,
Under the surly Gloster's governance?

Shakspeare.

3. Behaviour; manners. Obsolete.

He likeliest is to fall into mischance
That is regardless of his governance.

Spenser.

GOVERNANT. n. f. [gouvernante, Fr.]

A lady who has the care of young girls of quality. The more usual and proper word is governess.

GOVERNESS. n. f. [gouvernesse, French, from gove.]

1. A female invested with authority.

The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatick diseases do abound.

Shakspeare.

2. A tutress; a woman that has the care of young ladies.

He presented himself unto her, falling down upon both his knees, and holding up his hands, as the old governess of Danae is painted, when she suddenly saw the golden shower.

Sidney.

His three younger children were taken from the governess in whose hands he put them.

Clarendon.

3. A tutress; an instructress; a direc- tress.

Great affliction that severe governess of the life of man brings upon these souls she seizes on.

More against Atheism.

GOVERNMENT. n. f. [gouvernement, French.]

1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many.

Temple.

No government can do any act to limit itself:
the supreme legislative power cannot make itself not to be absolute.

Lefley.

2. An established state of legal authority.

There they shall found

Their government, and their great senate chuse Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws or-dain'd.

Milton.

While he survives, in concord and content
The commons live, by no division rent;
But the great monarch's death dissolves the government.

Dryden.

Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power.

Aldison.

Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one.

Swift.

3. Administration of publick affairs.

Safety and equal government are things
Which subjects make as happy as their kings.

Waller.

Those governments which curb not evils, cause;
And a rich knave's a libel on our laws.

Young.

4. Regularity of behaviour. Not in use.

You needs must learn, lord, to amend this fault;

Though sometimes it shews greatness, courage,
blood,

Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,

Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain.

Shakspeare.

'Tis government that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes thee abominable.

Shakspeare.

5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequiousness.

Thy eyes windows fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part depriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiff and stark, and cold appear, like death.

Shakspeare.

6. Management of the limbs or body. Obsolete.

Their god

Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;
But I them warded all with wary government.

Spenser.

7. [In grammar.] Influence with regard to construction.

GOVERNOUR. n. f. [gouverneur, French.]

1. One who has the supreme direction.

It must be confessed, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governour of the world by providence, all are partakers.

Hooker.

They beget in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governour of such stupendous bodies, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise.

Bentley.

2. One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.

For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governour among the nations.

Psalms.

The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds as the minister, if so disposed, can urge disobedience: as, for instance, if my governour should command me to do a thing, or I must die, or forfeit my estate; and the minister steps in and tells me, that I offend God, and ruin my soul, if I obey that command, 'tis easy to see a greater force in this persuasion.

South.

cunning concord, as brothers glued together,
but not united in grain.
Hayward.

14. The form of the ſurface with regard to roughneſs and ſmoothneſs.

The ſmaller the particles of cutting ſubſtances are, the ſmaller will be the ſcratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glaſs until it be poliſhed; but be they never ſo ſmail, they can wear away the glaſs no otherwiſe than by grating and ſcratching it, and breaking the pro-tuberances; and therefore poliſh it no otherwiſe than by breaking its roughneſs to a very fine grain, ſo that the ſcratches and frettings of the ſurface become too ſmall to be viſible.
Newton.

GRA'INED. adj. [from grain.] Rough; made leſs ſmooth.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid

—No farther than the Tower,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakspeare.

Since nature could behold so dire a crime,
I gratulate at least my native clime,
That such a land, which such a monster bore,
So far is distant from our Thracian shore. Dryden.

2. To declare joy for; to mention with expressions of joy.

Yet give thy jealous subjects leave to doubt,
Who this thy 'scape from rumour gratulate,
No less than if from peril; and devout,
Do beg thy care unto thy after state. Ben Jonson.

GRATULATION. n. f. [gratulatio, Latin.] Salutations made by expressing joy; expression of joy.

They are the first gratulations wherewith our Lord and Saviour was joyfully received at his entrance into the world, by such as in their hearts, arms, and bowels embraced him. Hooker.

The earth
Gave signs of gratulation, and each hill. Milton.

Your enjoyments, according to the standard of a christian desire, require no addition: I shall turn my wishes into gratulations, and, congratulating their fulness, only wish their continuance.
South.

GRA'TULATORY. adj. [from gratulate.] Congratulatory; expressing congratula-tion.

fragments which the earth broke into, and bury in one common grave all the inhabitants of the earth. Burnet.

They were wont once a year to meet at the graves of the martyrs; there solemnly to recite their sufferings and triumphs, to praise their virtues, to bless God for their pious examples, for their holy lives and their happy deaths.
Nelson.

GRA'VE-CLOTHES. n. f. [grave and clothes.] The dress of the dead.

But of such subtle substance and unsound,
That like a ghost he seem'd, whose grave-cloaths were unbound. Spenser.

And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-cloaths. John.

GRA'VE-STONE. n. f. [grave and stone.]
The stone that is laid over the grave;
the monumental stone.

Timon, presently prepare thy grave;
Lye where the light foam of the sea may beat Thy grave-stone daily. Shakspeare's Timon.

To GRAVE. v. a. preter. graven; part.
pass. graven. [graver, Fr. graver.]

1. To insculp; to carve a figure or inscription in any hard substance.

Cornice with bossy sculptures graven. Milton.
Later vows, oaths, or leagues can never blot out those former gravings or characters, which by just and lawful oaths were made upon their souls. King Charles.

Thy sum of duty let two words contain;
O! may they graven in thy heart remain,
Be humble and be just. Prior.

2. To carve or form.

What profiteth the graven image, that the maker thereof hath graven it? Hebrews.

3. To copy paintings upon wood or metal, in order to be impressed on paper.

The gravers can and ought to imitate the bodies of the colours by the degrees of the lights and shadows: 'tis impossible to give much strength to what they grave, after the works of the schools, without imitating in some sort the colour of the objects. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

4. [from grave.] To entomb. Not in use.

There's more gold:
Do you damn others, and let this damn you:
And ditches grave you all! Shakspeare's Timon.

And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

Folly-painting humour, grave himself,
Calls laughter forth. Thomson.

They have as much reason to pretend to, and as much necessity to aspire after, the highest accomplishments of a christian and solid virtue, as the gravest and wisest among christian philosophers. Law.

2. Of weight; not futile; credible. Little used.

The Roman state was of all others the most celebrated for their virtue, as the gravest of their own writers, and of strangers, do bear them witness. Grew's Cosmol.

3. Not showy; not tawdry: as, a grave suit of clothes.

4. Not sharp of sound; not acute.

Accent, in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tone of the voice; the acute accent raising the voice, in some syllables, to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depressing it lower, and both having some emphasis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation.
Holder.

GRAVEL. n. f. [gravier, French;
graveel, Dutch; gravel, Armorick.]

1. Hard sand; sand consisting of very small pebble-stones.

Gravel consists of flints of all the usual sizes and colours, of the several sorts of pebbles; sometimes with a few pyrites, and other mineral bodies, confusedly intermixed, and common sand. Woodward.

His armour, all gilt, was so well handled, that it shewed like a glittering sand and gravel, interlaced with silver rivers. Sidney.

Proofs as clear as founts in July, when We see each grain of gravel. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Providence permitted not the earth to spend itself in base gravels and pebbles, instead of quarries of stones. More.

So deep, and yet so clear, we might behold
The gravel bottom, and that bottom gold. Dryd.

The upper garden at Kensington was at first nothing but a gravel pit. Spektor.

Gravel walks are best for fruit-trees. Mortimer.

2. [gravelle, French.] Sandy matter
concreted in the kidneys.

If the stone is brittle it will often crumble, and pass in the form of gravel: if the stone is too big to pass, the best method is to come to a sort of a composition or truce with it. Arbutnot.

To GRAVEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pave or cover with gravel.

Moss groweth upon alleys, especially such as lie cold, and upon the north, as in divers terrasses; and again, if they be much trodden, or if they were at the first gravelled. Bacon.

2. To stick in the sand.

William the conqueror, when he invaded this island, chanced at his arrival to be gravelled; and one of his feet stuck so fast in the sand, that he fell to the ground. Camden.

3. To puzzle; to stop; to put to a stand;
to embarrass.

I would kiss before I spoke.
—Nay, you were better speak first, and when you were gravelled for lack of matter you might take occasion to kiss. Shakspeare.

The disease itself will gravel him to judge of it; nor can there be any prediction made of it, it is so sharp. Howel.

What work do our imaginations make with eternity and immensity? and how are we gravel- led by their cutting dilemmas? Glanville.

Mat, who was here a little gravelled,
Took up his nose, and would have cavill'd. Prior.

GRAVELLY. adj. [graveleux, French; from gravel.] Full of gravel; abounding with gravel; consisting of gravel.

There are some natural spring waters that will inlaidate wood; so that you shall see one piece of wood, whereof the part above the water shall continue wood, and the part under the water shall be turned into a gravelly stone. Bacon.

If you live in a consumptive air, make choice of the more open, high, dry, and gravelly part of it. Harvey on Consumptions.

GRAVELY. adv. [from grave.]

1. Solemnly; seriously; soberly; without lightness or mirth.

Thou stand'st
Gravelly in doubt when to hold them wise.
Milton.

A girl longs to tell her confidant that she hopes to be married in a little time, and asks her very gravely what she would have her to do. Spektor.

Wisdom's above suspecting wiles;
The queen of learning gravely smiles. Swift.

A formal story was very gravely carried to his excellency, by some zealous members. Swift.

Is 't not enough the blockhead scarce can read,
But must he wisely look, and gravely plead?
Young.

2. Without gaudiness or show.

GRA'VENESS. n. f. [from grave.] Seriousness; solemnity and sobriety of behaviour.

Youth no less becomes
The light and careless livery that it wears,
Than settled age his fables, and his weeds

Importing health and graveness. Shakspeare.
But yet beware of counsels when too full;

Number makes long disputes and graveness dull.
Denham.

GRA'VEOLENT. adj. [graveolens, Latin.] Strong scented. Di.

GRA'VE. n. f. [graveur, French; from grave.]

1. One whose business is to inscribe or carve upon hard substances; one who copies pictures upon wood or metal to be impressed on paper.

If he makes a design to be graved, he is to remember that the gravers dispose not their colours as the painters do; and that, by consequence, he must take occasion to find the reason of his design in the natural shadows of the figures, which he has disposed to cause the effect. Dryd.

2. The style or tool used in graving.

With all the care wherewith I tried upon it the known ways of softening gravers, I could not soften this. Boyle.

Women, obstructed, have not always the fore-mentioned symptoms: in those the signs of gravity and obstructions are hard to be distinguished in the beginning. Arbuthnot on Diet.

GRAVING. n. f. [from grave.] Carved work.

Skilful to work in gold; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chronicles.

To GRAVITATE. v. n. [from gravis, Latin.] To tend to the centre of attraction.

Those who have nature's steps with care pursued,

That matter is with active force endu'd,
That all its parts magnetick pow'r exert,
And to each other gravitate, assert. Blackmore.

That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body. Bentley.

GRAVITATION. n. f. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to the terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre. Bentley.

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,

Shall gravitation cease, if you go by? Pope.

GRAVITY. n. f. [gravitas, Latin; gravité, French.]

1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shewn to be unsolvable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and vulgar or comparative: absolute gravity is the whole force by which any body tends downwards; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specific gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth. Quincy.

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Brown.

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding slow, yet if the elastic tone of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton's Opticks.

2. Atrocioufness; weight of guilt.

No man could ever have thought this reasonable, that had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed, according to the gravity of the fact. Hooker.

3. Seriousness; solemnity.

There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity. Shakespeare.

For the advocates and council that plead, patience and gravity of hearing is an essential part of justice. Bacon.

Great Cato there, for gravity renown'd.

Dryden's Æn.

The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their mints still maintained their gravity. Addison.

He will tell you with great gravity, that it is a dangerous thing for a man that has been used to get money, ever to leave it off. Laro.

GRAVY. n. f. The serous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.

Meat we love half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gravy, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter. Harvey on Consumptions.

There may be stronger broth made of vegetables than of any gravy soup. Arbuthnot.

GRAY. adj. [græg, Saxon; grau, Danish; grau, Dutch.]

1. White with a mixture of black.

They left me then, when the gray headed even,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's wood,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phæbus' wain. Milton.

These gray and dun colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect whites, not in species of colours, but only in degree of luminousness. Newton.

2. White or hoary with old age.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in horses, that are dappled and turn white; in old squirrels that turn grilly, and many others. Bacon's Natural History.

Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffered me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation. Walton.

Anon

Gray headed men and grave, with warriours mix'd,

Assemble. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The restoration of gray hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected. Glanville's Scepis.

A house in which tender plants are sheltered from the weather.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, which you may know by the freezing of a moistened cloth set in your greenhouse, kindle some charcoal.
Evelyn's Kalendar.

Sometimes our road led us into several hollow apartments among the rocks and mountains, that look like so many natural greenhouses, as being always shaded with a great variety of trees and shrubs that never lose their verdure. Addison.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery or artificial greenhouse. Spect.

GRE'ENISH. adj. [from green.] Somewhat green; tending to green.

With goodly greenish locks, all loose, unty'd,
As each had been a bride. Spenser.

Of this order the green of all vegetables seems to be, partly by reason of the intenseness of their colours, and partly because, when they wither, some of them turn to a greenish yellow. Newton.

GRE'ENLY. adv. [from green.]

1. With a greenish colour.
2. Newly; freshly.
3. Immaturely.
4. Wanly; timidly. Not in use.

GRE

Kate, I cannot look greenly, nor gasp out my eloquence; nor have I cunning in protestation.
Shakspeare's Henry v.

GRE'ENNESS. n. f. [from green.]

1. The quality of being green; viridity; viridness.

About it grew such sort of trees, as either excellency of fruit, stateliness of growth, continual greenness or poetical fancies have made at any time famous. Sidney.

In a meadow, though the meek grass and greenness delights, yet the variety of flowers doth heighten and beautify. Ben Jonson.

My reason, which discourses on what it finds in my phantasy, can consider greenness by itself, or mellowness, or sweetness, or coldness, singly and alone by itself. Digby on Bodies.

2. Immaturity; unripeness.

This prince, while yet the errors in his nature were excused by the greenness of his youth, which took all the fault upon itself, loved a private man's wife. Sidney.

3. Freshness; vigour.

Take the picture of a man in the greenness and vivacity of his youth, and in the latter date and declension of his drooping years, and you will scarce know it to belong to the same person.
South.

4. Newness.

GRE'ENSICKNESS. n. f. [green and sickness.] The disease of maids, so called from the paleness which it produces.

Sour eructations, and a craving appetite, especially of terrestrial and absorbent substances, are the case of girls in the greensickness. Arbuthnot.

GRE'ENSWARD. } n. f. [green and sward:

GRE'ENSWORD. } of the same original

Ran on the greensward. Shakspeare.

After break their fast
On greensward ground, a cool and grateful taste.
Dryden.

In shallow soils all is gravel within a few inches;
and sometimes in low ground a thin greensward, and sloughy underneath; which last turns all into bog. Swift.

GRE'ENWEED. n. f. [green and weed.]
Diers weed.

GRE'ENWOOD. n. f. [green and wood.]
A wood considered as it appears in the spring or summer. It is sometimes used as one word.

Among wild herbs under the greenwood shade.
Fairfax.

It happen'd on a summer's holiday,
That to the greenwood shade he took his way;
For Cymon thump'd the church. Dryden.

To GREET. v. a. [grator, Latin; gnezan, Saxon.]

1. To address at meeting.

I think if men, which in these places live,
Durst look in themselves, and themselves retrieve,
They would like strangers greet themselves.
Donne.

I would gladly go,
To greet my Pallas with such news below.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. To address in whatever manner.

My noble partner
You greet with present grace, and great prediction;

To me you speak not. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good. Shakspeare's Richard II.

3. To salute in kindness or respect.

My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you

—God bless your grace with health and happy days. Shakspeare.

GRE

Now the herald lark
Left his ground nest, high tow'ring to descry
The morn's approach, and greet her with his song.
Milton.

Once had the early matrons run
To greet her of a lovely son. Milton.

The sea's our own; and now all nations greet,
With bending sails, each vessel of our fleet.
Waller.

Thus pale they meet, their eyes with fury burn:
None greets; for none the greeting will return;
But in dumb furliness, each arm'd with care,
His foe profess, as brother of the war. Dryden.

4. To congratulate.

His lady, seeing all that channel from far,
Approacht in haste to greet his victorie. Spenser.

5. To pay compliments at a distance.

The king's a-bed,
And sent great largesse to your officers:
This diamond he greets your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostess. Shakspeare.

6. To meet, as those do who go to pay congratulations. Not much in use.

Your haste
Is now urg'd on you.
—We will greet the time. Shakspeare.

To GREET. v. n. To meet and salute.

There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace. Shakspeare.

Such was that face on which I dwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled stem'd the tides to Troy;
But parting then for that detested shore,
Our eyes, unhappy! never greeted more. Pope.

GRE'ETER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who greets.

GRE'ETING. n. f. [from greet.] Salutation at meeting, or compliments at a distance.

I from him
Give you all greetings, that a king, as friend,
Can send his brother. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

GRENADE. n. f. [from pomum granatum, Latin.] A little hollow globe or ball of iron, or other metal, about two inches and a half in diameter, which, being filled with fine powder, is set on fire by means of a small fusee fastened to the touchhole; as soon as it is kindled, the case flies into many shatters, much to the damage of all that stand near.
Harris.

GRE'NADIER. n. f. [grenadier, French, from grenade.] A tall footsoldier, of whom there is one company in every regiment: such men being employed to throw grenades.

Peace allays the shepherd's fear

Of wearing cap of grenadier. Gay's Pastorals.

GRENA'DO. n. f. See GRENADE.

Yet to express a Scot, to play that prize,
Not all those mouth grenados can suffice.
Cleaveland.

You may as well try to quench a flaming grenado with a shell of fair water as hope to succeed.
Watts.

GREUT. n. f. A kind of fossil body.

A sort of tin ore, with its greut; that is, a congeries of crystals, or sparks of spar, of the higness of bay salt, and of a brown shining colour immersed therein. Grew's Museum.

GREW. The preterit of grow.

The pleasing task he fails not to renew;
Soft and more soft at ev'ry touch it grew.

Dryden.

GREY. adj. [gris, French. More properly written gray.] See GRAY.

This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I spar'd at suit of his grey beard. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Our green youth copies what grey sinners act,
When venerable age commends the fact. Dryden.

GREYHOUND. n. f. [grunhund, Saxon.]

A tall fleet dog that chafes in flight.

First may a truly greyhound transform himself into a tyger. Sidney.

So, on the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A haſt'ned hare from greedy greyhounds go.

Sidney.

Th' impatient greyhound, ſlipt from far,
Bounds o'er the glebe to catch the fearful hare.

Dryden.

GRICE. n. f.

This a ſtep to love. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

TO GRIDE. v. n. [gridare, Italian.] To cut; to make way by cutting. A word elegant, but not in uſe.

His poignant ſpear he thruſt with puiſſant ſway,
That through his thigh the mortal ſteel did gride.

Spenser.

So ſore

The griding ſword, with diſcontinuous wound, Paſſ'd through him! Milton's Par. Loſt.

GRIDELIN. n. f. A colour mixed of white and red.

The ladies dreſſ'd in rich ſymars were ſeen,
Of Florence fatten, flow'rd with white and green,
And for a ſhade betwixt the bloomy gridelin.

Dryden's Fables.

GRIDIRON. n. f. [grind, Islandick, a grate, and iron.] A portable grate on which meat is laid to be broiled upon the fire.

He had added two bars to the gridiron. Speſt.

GRIEF. n. f. [from grieve; griff, Welſh, probably from the Engliſh.]

1. Sorrow; trouble for ſomething paſt.

I will inſtruct my ſorrows to be proud;
For grief is proud, and makes his owner ſtout.

Shakspeare.

Wringing of the hands, knocking the breaſt, are but the ceremonies of ſorrow, the pomp and oſtentation of an effeminate grief, which ſpeak not ſo much the greatneſs of the miſery as the ſmallneſs of the mind. South.

The mother was ſo afflicted at the loſs of a fine boy, who was her only ſon, that ſhe died for grief of it. Addiſon.

2. Grievance; harm. [grief, French.]

Not in uſe.

*Be factious for redreſs of all theſe griefs,
And I will ſet this foot of mine as far
As who goes fartheſt. Shakspeare.

The king hath ſent to know

The nature of your griefs, and whereupon
You conjure from the breaſt of civil peace Such bold hoſtility? Shakspeare's Henry IV.

3. Pain; diſeaſe. Obſolete.

GRIEVANCE. n. f. [from grief.]

1. A ſtate of uneaſineſs. Out of uſe.

2. The cauſe of uneaſineſs. Uſed of ſuch cauſes as are the effects of human conduct.

What remedy can be found againſt grievances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage thoſe who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future puniſhment, will be moved to juſtice and integrity? Swift.

TO GRIEVE. v. a. [grewer, French; griever, Flemiſh; gravis, Latin.]

1. To afflict; to hurt.

For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. Luk.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Pſalms.

It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. Gen.

Griev'd at the thought, he vow'd his whole endeavour

Should be to cloſe thoſe breaches. Rowe.

2. To make ſorrowful.

When one man kills another, thinking that he killeth a wild beaſt; if the ſame man remembrieth afterwards what he hath done, and is not grieved for the fact, in this caſe he hath ſinned; becauſe his not grieving is offensive unto God, though the fact were merely beſides his will. Perkins.

TO GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for ſomething paſt; to mourn; to ſorrow, as for the death of friends. It has ſometimes at and ſometimes for before the cauſe of grief: perhaps at is proper before our miſfortunes, and for before our faults.

Do not you grieve at this. Shakspeare.

How diſt thou grieve then, Adam, to behold

The end of all thy offſpring end ſo ſad. Milton.

With equal mind what happens let us bear;
Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care. Dryden.

GRIEVINGLY. adv. [from grieve.] In ſorrow; ſorrowfully.

Grievingly, I think,

The peace between the French and us not values
The coſt that did conclude it. Shakſ. Henry VIII.

GRIEVOUS. adj. [gravis, Latin; or from To grieve.]

1. Afflictive; painful; hard to be born.

To the fleſh, as the apoſtle himſelf granteth,
all affliction is naturally grievous. Hooker.

Correcſion is grievous unto him that forſaketh
the way, and he that hateth reproof ſhall die.

Proverbs.

2. Such as cauſes ſorrow.

To own a great but grievous truth, though they quicken and ſharpen the invention, they corrupt the temper. Watts.

3. Expreſſing a great degree of uneaſineſs.

He durſt not diſobey, but ſent grievous complaints to the parliament of the uſage he was forced to ſubmit to. Clarendon.

4. Atrocious; heavy.

It was a grievous fault,

And grievouſly both Cæſar answer'd it. Shakſp.

Crying ſins I call thoſe, which are ſo heinous,
and in their kind ſo grievous, that they haſten God's judgments and call down for ſpeedy vengeance upon the ſinner. Perkins.

5. Sometimes uſed adverbially in low language.

He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous ſick.

Shakspeare.

GRIEVOUSLY. adv. [from grievous.]

1. Painfully; with pain.

Wide was the wound, and a large lukewarm
ſlood,

Red as the roſe, thence gushed grievouſly. Spenser.

2. With diſcontent; with ill-will.

Gritus perceiv'ing how grievouſly the matter was taken, with the danger he was in, began to doubt. Knolles.

3. Calamitouſly; miſerably.

I ſee how a number of ſouls are, for want of right information, oftentimes grievouſly vexed.

Hooker.

4. Vexatouſly; to a great degree of uneaſineſs.

Houſes built in plains are apt to be grievouſly annoyed with mire and dirt. Ray on the Creation.

GRIEVOUSNESS. n. f. [from grievous.]
Sorrow; pain; calamity.

They fled from the ſwords, from the drawn ſword and from the bent bow, and from the grievouſneſs of war. Iſaiah.

GRIFFIN. } n. f. [This ſhould rather be GRIFFON. } written gryphon, or gryphon;
gryps, γρύψ; but it is generally written griffon.] A fabled animal, ſaid to be generated between the lion and eagle, and to have the head and paws of the lion, and the wings of the eagle.

Of all bearing among theſe winged creatures,
the griffin is the moſt ancient. Peaſham.

Ariſteus, a poet of Proconneſus, affirmed, that near the one-eyed nations griffins defended the mines of gold. Brown.

GRIG. n. f. [kricke, Bavarian, a little duck.]

1. It ſeems originally to have ſignified any thing below the natural ſize.

2. A ſmall eel.

3. A merry creature. [Suppoſed from Greek; graculus feſtivus, Latin.]

Hard is her heart as flint or ſtone,

She laughs to ſee me pale;

And merry as a grig is grown,

And briſk as bottle-ale.

Swift.

TO GRILL. v. n. [grille, a grate, French.]

To broil on a grate or gridiron.

GRILLADE. n. f. [from grill.] Any thing broiled on the gridiron.

TO GRILLY. v. a. [from grill.] This word ſignifies, as it ſeems, to haraſs;
to hurt: as we now ſay, to roaſt a man,
for to teaze him.

For while we wrangle here and jar,

W' are grill'd all at Temple-bar. Hudibras.

GRIM. adj. [grimma, Saxon.]

1. Having a countenance of terror; horrible; hideous; frightful.

The innocent prey in haſte he does forſake,
Which quit from death, yet quakes in every lin b,
With change of fear to ſee the lion look ſo grim.

Spenser.

Grim Saturn yet remains,

Bound in thoſe gloomy caves with adamantine chains. Drayton.

Thou haſt a grim appearance, and thy face

Bears a command in 't. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Their dear cauſes

Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm

Excite the mortified man. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

What if the breath that kindled thoſe grim

fires,

Awak'd, ſhould blow them into ſevenfold rage?

Milton.

Expert to turn the ſway

Of battle, open when and where to cloſe

The ridges of grim war. Milton's Par. Loſt.

He that dares to die,

May laugh at the grim face of law, and ſcorn

The cruel wrinkle of a tyrant brow. Denham.

Their ſwarthy hoſts would darken all our plains,

Doubling the native horror of the war,

And making death more grim. Addiſon.

2. Ugly; ill-looking.

Strait ſtood up to him

Divine Ulyſſes; who with looks exceeding grave and grim,

This better check gave. Chapman.

Grim viſag'd war had ſmooth'd his wrinkl'd front. Shakspeare.

Venus was like her mother; for her father is but grim. Shakspeare.

GRIMACE. n. f. [French, from grim.]

1. A diſtortion of the countenance from habit, affectation, or inſolence.

He had not spar'd to shew his piques,
Against th' haranguer's politicks,
With smart remarks of leering faces,
And annotations of grimaces! Hudibras.
The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate; and by a few demure looks and affected whims, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces, and such other little arts of dissimulation, cunning men will do wonders. South's Sermons.
The buffoon ape, with grimaces and gambols, carried it from the whole field. L'Estrange.
The French nation is addicted to grimace. Spectator.

2. Air of affectation.

Vice in a vizzard, to avoid grimace,
Allows all freedom, but to see the face. Granville.

GRIMALKIN. n. f. [gris, French, gray, and malkin, or little Moll. Gray little woman.] The name of an old cat.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe; with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice Sure ruin. Philips.

GRIME. n. f. [from grim.] Dirt deeply insinuated; fullying blackness not easily cleansed.

Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing so clean kept; for why? She sweats: a man may go over shoes in the grime of it. Shakspeare.

Collow is the word by which they denote black grime of burnt coals or wood. Woodward.

To GRIME. v. a. [from the noun.] To dirt; to sully deeply.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakspeare.

GRIMLY. adv. [from grim.]

1. Horribly; hideously; terribly.

We've landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,

And threaten present blusters. Shakspeare.

So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,

Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies.
Addison's Cato.

2. Sourly; sullenly.

The augurs
Say they know not; they cannot tell; look grimly,

And dare not speak their knowledge. Shaksp.

GRIMNESS. n. f. [from grim.] Horror;
frightfulness of visage.

To GRIN. v. n. [gnennian, Saxon; grinnen, grinden, Dutch, undoubtedly of the same origin with To grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grincer, French.]

1. To set the teeth together and with- draw the lips either in anger or in mirth.

Death, death! oh, amiable, lovely death!
Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st. Shakspeare.

What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to trust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away. Shakspeare.

It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning, and only shewing their teeth. Stillingfleet.

A lion's hide he wears:
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;
The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin. Dryden.
They neither could defend, nor can pursue;
But grin'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view. Dryden.

Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth
To grinning laughter, and to frantick mirth. Prior.

Fools grin on fools, and Stoicklike support,
Without one sigh, the pleasures of a court. Young.

2. To fix the teeth as in anguish.

I like not such grinning honour as fir Walter hath: give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

GRIN. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and showing them.

He laughs at him: in 's face too.
—O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin,
The fawning joy of courtiers and of dogs. Dryd.

The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shewed twenty teeth at a grin. Addison.

Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and arguments; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grimace. Watts on the Mind.

What lords are those saluting with a grin?
One is just out, and one is lately in. Young.

GRIN. n. f. [gryn, gryne, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.

Like a bride that hasteth to his gryn?
Not knowinge the perile. Chaucer.

The grin shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him. Joh.

To GRIND. v. a. preter. I ground; part.
pass. ground. [grundan, ge-grunden, ground, Saxon.]

1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Matthew.

He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding. Shakspeare.

What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meal? Bentley's Sermons.

2. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.

Meeting with time, slack thing, said I,
Thy fithe is dull; whet it, for shame:

No marvel, sir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;

But where one man would have me grind it
Twenty to one too sharp to find it. Herbert.

Against a slump his tusk the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds. Dryden's Fables.

3. To rub one against another.

So up he let him rise; who with grim look,
And count'nance stern, upstanding, 'gan to grind
His grated teeth for great disdain. Spenser.

Harsh sounds, as of a saw when it is sharpened, and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and set the teeth on edge. Bacon's Natural History.

That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. To harass; to oppress.

Some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessities, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Another way the Spaniards have taken to grind the Neapolitans, and yet to take off the odium from themselves. Addison.

5. In the following lines, I know not whether it be not corruptly used for grinding, cutting.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings and of grinding pains,
My throws come thicker, and my cries increas'd. Dryden.

To GRIND. v. n.

1. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.

Fetter'd they send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses. Milton's Agonistes.

2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.

Shrinking sinews start,
And smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws. Rowe.

GRINDER. n. f. [from grind.]

1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.

2. The instrument of grinding.
His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone. Sandys.

Now exhort

Thy hinds to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Philips.

3. [grind today.] The back teeth; the double teeth.

The teeth are in men of three kinds; sharp, as the foreteeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both. Bacon's Natural History.

He the raging lions confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey. Sandys.

The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molars, are made flat and broad a-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind, and commix the aliments. Ray.

Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herb-eating animals, which do not ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbuthnot.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.

One, who at the sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders try'd. Dryden.

Both he brought;

He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught. Dryden.

GRINDLESTONE. } n. f. [from grind and GRINDSTONE. } stone.] The stone on which edged instruments are sharpened.

Such a light and mettall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by the lead-men, for the nonce,
That turn round like grindlestones. Ben Jonson.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coul-ters, and to whet their natural faculties. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Smiths that make hinges brighten them, yet seldom file them; but grind them on a grindstone till bright. Maxon.

GRINNER. n. f. [from grin.] He that grins.

The frightful'st grinner
Be the winner. Addison's Spectator.

GRINNINGLY. adv. [from grin.] With a grinning laugh.

GRIP. n. f. A small ditch. Ainsworth.

To GRIPE. v. a. [greipan, Gothick;
gnipan, Saxon; gripen, Dutch; gripp, Scottish.]

1. To hold with the fingers closed; to grasp; to press with the fingers.

He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,
Whilst he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkl'd brows. Shaksp. King John.

2. To hold hard.

He seiz'd the shining bough with gripping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold. Dryden's Esop.

3. [gripper, French.] To catch eagerly; to seize.

You took occasion to be quickly woo'd,
To gripe the gen'ral sway into your hands.
Shakspeare's Henry IV.

4. To close; to clutch.

Unlucky Welfed! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his hand the faster.
Pope.

5. To pitch; to press; to squeeze.

A wond'rous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the griped prey.
Spenser.

And first the dame came rushing through the wood;
And next the famish'd hounds that fought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood.
Dryden's Fables.

6. To give a pain in the bowels.

Thus full of counsel to the den she went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent.
Dryden.

To GRIPPE. v. n.

1. To feel the colick, to have the belly-ache.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the griping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others.
Locke.

Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture, and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of sickness, and sometimes of acute pains or gripings in us.
Locke.

2. To pinch; to catch at money meanly.

It is mean revenue, by being scattered, in the worst of times growing upon him, when others that had great ones, by griping, made them less, and grew stark beggars.
Fell.

GRIPPE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.

Therefore still on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws,
Threatning with greedy gripe to do him dy.
Spenser.

They put a barren sceptre in my gripe
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand.
Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hardy with hourly falsehood as with labour.
Shakspeare.

He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service.
Shakspeare's Henry V.
I fell; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. Squeeze; pressure.

Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast;
'Tis true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe.
Dryden.

3. Oppression; crushing power.

I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.
Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

4. Affliction; pinching distress.

Adam, at the news
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound!
Milton's Par. Lost.
Can'st thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,
Fram'd for the tender offices of love,
Endure the bitter gripes of smarting poverty?
Otway.

5. [In the plural.] Bellyache; colick.

In the jaundice the cholera is wanting; and the icterical have a great sourness and gripes with windiness.
Floyer.

GRIPPER. n. f. [from gripe.] Oppressor; usurer; extortioner.

Others pretend zeal, and yet are professed usurers, gripers, monsters of men, and harpies.
Burton on Melancholy.

GRIPINGLY. adv. [from griping.] With pain in the guts.

Clysters help, lest the medicine stop in the guts,
and work gripingly.
Bacon's Nat. History.

GRIPPLE. n. f. A greedy snatcher; a griping miser.

GRISA'MBER. n. f. Used by Milton for ambergrise.

Beasts of chase, or fowl of game,
In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd,
Grisamber steam'd.
Milton's Paradise Reg.

GRISE. n. f. [See GREECE, as it should be written.] A step, or scale of steps.

Let me speak like ourself; and lay a sentence,
Which, as a grise or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour.
Shakspeare's Othello.

GRISKIN. n. f. [grifgin, roast meat, Irish.] The vertebres of a hog broiled.

GRISLY. adj. [griflu, Saxon.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous; frightful; terrible.

His grisly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round.
Spenser.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toadstool grown there might I see.
Spenser.

My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death.
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Back step'd those two fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the grisly king;
Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon.
Milton.

For that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron.
Milton.
The beauteous form of fight,
Is chang'd, and war appears a grisly fight.
Dryden's Fables.

In vision thou shalt see his grisly face,
The king of terrors raging in thy race.
Thus the grisly spectre spoke again.
Dryden.
Close by each other laid, they press'd the
ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grisly wound.
Dryden.
So rushes on his foe the grisly bear.
Addison.

GRIST. n. f. [grist, Saxon.]

1. Corn to be ground.

Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Lest miller lack water.
Tusser's Husbandry.
A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,
And all the corn they us'd at scholar's hall.
Miller of Tromp.

2. Supply; provision.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist.
Swift.

3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.

The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

GRISTLE. n. f. [gristle, Saxon.]

A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creatures, that have shells very hard,
as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have bones within them, but only little gristles.
Bacon's Natural History.

Lest the asperity or hardness of cartilages should hurt the œsophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore the annulary

gristles of the windpipe are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet. Ray on the Creation.

GRISTLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.

At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes.
Harvey.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures.
More.

Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like womens fans.
Ray.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe.
Grew.

Each pipe distinguish'd by its gristly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings.
Blackmore.

GRIT. n. f. [gritta, græot, Saxon.]

1. The coarse part of meal.

2. Oats husked, or coarsely ground.

3. Sand; rough hard particles.

Silesian bole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as soap.
Grew.

The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing grit and restive marle.
Philips.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder;
the several particles of which are of no determinate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or disunited by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass.

One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt water, into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards disunited by water. This is the pulvis petrolanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plaisters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysocollo of the ancients, which they used in soldering gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of soldering metals better than borax. The ferrugineous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy.
Hill on Fossils.

GRITTINESS. n. f. [from gritty.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.

In fuller's-earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness.
Mortimer.

GRITTY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.

I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof.
Newton.

GRIZELIN. n. f. [more properly gridelin.
See GRIDELIN.]

The Burgundy, which is a grizelin or pale red, of all others, is surest to ripen in our climate.
Temple.

GRIZZLE. n. f. [from gris, gray;
grisaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy face?
Shakspeare.

GRIZZLED. adj. [from grizzle.] Inter-sprinkled with gay.

To the boy Cæsar, send this grizzled head.

Shakspeare.

His beard was grizzled: no.

—It was as I have seen it in his life. Shakspeare.

His hair just grizzled,

As in a green old age. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide
In plenteous growth their asses ears to hide. Dryd.

GRIZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, Fr.]
Somewhat gray.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turned to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled and turn white; and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon.

To GROAN. v. n. [gnanan, Saxon;
grogen, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir

Of these fair edifices, for my wars,
Have I heard groan and drop. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out. Job.

Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit.

Wisdom.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning. Milton.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains. South.

On the blazing pile his parent lay,
Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pope.

GROAN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty, from pain, faintness, or weariness.

Alas, poor country,
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the
air,

Are made, not mark'd! Shakspeare's Macbeth.

I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;
And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive.

Dryden.

Hence aching bosoms wear a visage gay,
And stifled groans frequent the ball and play.

Young.

2. Any hoarse dead sound.

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,

Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. King Lear.

GROANFUL. adj. [groan and full.] Sad;
agonizing. Not used.

Adown he keft it with so puissant wrest,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
—And gave against his mother earth a groanful found. Spenser.

GROAT. n. f. [groot, Dut. grosso, Ital.]

1. A piece valued at four pence.

2. A proverbial name for a small sum.

My mother was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

I dare lay a groat,
A tertian ague is at least your lot. Dryden's Fables.

Imagine a person of quality to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune. Swift.

3. GROATS. Oats that have the hulls taken off. Ainsworth.

GROCER. n. f. [This should be written groffer, from grofs, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grossus, a fig, which their present state seems to favour.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar, and plums and spices for gain. Watts' Logick.

But still the offspring of your brain shall prove
The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove.

Garth.

GROCERY. n. f. [from grocer.] Grocers ware, such as tea, sugar, raisins, spice.

His troops being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon.

GRO'GERAM. } n. f. [gros, grain, Fr.
GRO'GRAM. } grossogranus, low Latin.
GRO'GRAN. } Ainsworth.] Stuff woven with a large woof and a rough pile.

Certes they're neatly cloth'd: I of this mind am,

Your only wearing is your grogeram. Donne.
Natolia affords great store of chamelots and grograms. Sandys.

Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's skin nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grogram, or the like. Brown.

The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in grogram than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade.

Addison.

Plain goody would no longer down;

'Twas madam in her grogram gown. Swift.

GROIN. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.]

The part next the thigh.

Antipheus, a sonne of Priam, threw His lance at Ajax through the prease, which went by him, and flew,

On Leucus, wife Ulysses' friend: His groine it smote. Chapman.

The fatal dart arrives,

And through the border of his buckler drives;
Pass'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly
wound

Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground.

Dryden.

GRO'MWELL. n. f. [lithospermum, Lat.]

Gromill or graymill. A plant. Miller.

GROOM. n. f. [grom, Dutch.]

1. A boy; a waiter; a servant.

Then called she a groom, that forth him led Into a goodly lodge. Spenser.

From Egypt's kings ambassadours they come;
Them many a squire attends, and many a groom.

Fairfax.

Think then, my soul! that death is but a groom
Which brings a taper to the outward room.

Donne.

In the time of Edward VI. lived Sternhold, whom king Henry his father had made groom of his chamber, for turning of certain of David's psalms into verse. Peacham.

Would'st thou be touch'd

By the presuming hands of saucy grooms? Dryd.

Amid' the fold he rages, nor the sheep
Their shepherds, nor the grooms their bulls can keep. Dryden.

2. A young man.

I presume forto intreat this groom,
And silly maid, from danger to redeem. Fairfax.

3. A man newly married.

By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are drest'd;

All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast.

Dryden.

GROOVE. n. f. [from grave.]

1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.

He might, to avoid idleness, work in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.

The screw-plate is a kind of steel well tempered, with several holes in it, each less than other;
and in those holes are threads grooved inwards, which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

To GROOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut hollow.

Of the box every joint was well grooved. Swift.

To GROPE. v. n. [gnapan, Saxon.]

To feel where one cannot see.

My sea-gown scarf about me, in the dark
Grop'd, I to find out them. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

We grobe for the wall like the blind, and we grobe as if we had no eyes. Isaiah.

They meet with darkness in the clearest light;
And grobe at noon, as if involv'd with night.

Sandys.

A boy was groping for eels, and laid his hand upon a snake. L'Estrange.

This, no doubt, is better for men than that they should in the dark grobe after knowledge; as St. Paul tells us all nations did after God. Locke.

He heard us in our course,

And with his outstretch'd arms around him grop'd.

Addison.

O truth divine! enlighten'd by thy ray,
I grobe and guess no more, but see my way.

Arbutnot.

To GROPE. v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see.

How vigilant to grobe mens thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain. Hayward.

They have left our endeavours to grobe them out by twilight, and by darkness almost to discover that, whose existence is evidenced by light.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant
The bottom of the pan to grobe. Swift.

GRO'PER. n. f. [from grobe.] One that searches in the dark.

GROSS. adj. [gros, French; grosso, Ital.
crassus, Latin.]

1. Thick; bulky.

The crows and choughs, that wing the midway
air,

Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shakspeare.

There are two gross volumes concerning the power of popes. Baker.

2. Shameful; unseemly; enormous.

He ripely considered how gross a thing it were for men of his quality, wife and grave men, to live with such a multitude, and to be tenants at will under them. Hooker.

They can say that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayers, and in sacraments, the church of Rome bath very foul and gross corruptions. Hooker.

So far hath the natural understanding, even of sundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned, no, not gross iniquity to be sin. Hooker.

There is a vain and imprudent use of their estates, which, though it does not destroy like gross sins, yet disorders the heart, and supports it in sensuality and dulness. Law.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure; unrefined.

To all sense 'tis gross

You love my son: invention is alham'd,
Against the proclamation of thy passion,

To say thou do'st not. Shakspeare.

Examples gross as earth exhort me. Shakspeare.

Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd
Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself, above all, in its Author, that, without the *gross*est sensuality, we cannot but admire it? Sprat.

It is a gross mistake of some men, to think that our want only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficent. Smalridge.

But she dares never boast the present hour,
So gross the cheat, it is beyond her pow'r. Young.

4. Inelegant; disproportionate in bulk.

The sun's oppressive ray the roseat bloom
Of beauty blasing, gives the gloomy hue,
And feature gross. Thomson's Summer.

5. Dense; not refined; not attenuated; not pure.

It is manifest, that when the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the grosser, things shew greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium, and the object in the finer
Bacon's Natural History.

Of elements,

The grosser feeds the purer; earth the sea,
Earth and the sea feed air. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Light fumes are merry, grosser fumes are sad;
Both are the reasonable soul run mad. Dryden.

Or suck the mists in grosser air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow. Pope.

6. Stupid; dull.

If she doth then the subtle sense excel,
How gross are they that drown her in her blood?
Darwin.

And in clear dream and solemn vision,
Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear.
Milton.

Some men give more light and knowledge by the bare stating of the question with perspicuity and justness, than others by talking of it in gross confusion for whole hours together. Watts.

7. Coarse; rough; not delicate.

Fine and delicate sculptures are helped with nearness, and gross with distance. Watson.

8. Thick; fat; bulky.

tionate dimensions, avoiding the extremes of gross and meager. Fell.

GROSS. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The main body; the main force.

The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste
The deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or, if with caution leisurely we past,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.

Several casuists are of opinion, that, in a battle, you should discharge upon the gross of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular person. Addison's Freeholder.

The gross of the people can have no other prospect in changes and revolutions than of publick blessings. Addison.

2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its several parts.

Certain general inducements are used to make saleable your cause in gross. Hooker.

There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal. Abbot.

There is confession, that is, the acknowledging our sins to God; and this may be either general or particular: The general is, when we only confess in gross that we are sinful; the particular, when we mention the several sorts and acts of our sins. Duty of Man.

Remember, son,

You are a general: other wars require you;
For see the Saxon gross begins to move. Dryden.

Notwithstanding the decay and loss of sundry trades and manufactures, yet in the gross, we ship off now one third part more of the manufactures, as also lead and tin, than we did twenty years past. Child on Trade.

3. Not individual, but a body together.

He hath ribbons of all the colours i' th' rainbow; they come to him by the gross. Shaksp.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats. Shaksp.

You see the united design of many persons to make up one figure: after they have separated themselves in many petty divisions, they rejoin one by one into a gross. Dryden.

4. The chief part; the main mass.

Comets, out of question, have likewise power and effect over the gross and mass of things. Bacon.

The articulate sounds are more confused,
though the gross of the sound be greater. Bacon.

5. The number of twelve dozen. [grosse, French.]

It is made up only of that simple idea of an unite repeated; and repetitions of this kind, joined together, make those distinct simple modes of a dozen, a gross, and a million. Locke.

GROSSLY. adv. [from gross.]

1. Bulkily; in bulky parts; coarsely: as, this matter is grossly pulverized.

2. Without subtilty; without art; with- out delicacy; without refinement; coarsely; palpably.

Such kind of ceremonies as have been so grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Hooker.

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke devils sworn to others purpose;
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them. Shaksp.

And thine eyes

See it so grossly shown in thy behaviour,
That in their kind they speak it. Shaksp.

What! are we cuckolds ere we have deserv'd it?
—Speak not so grossly. Merchant of Venice.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry so happily restored by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If I speak of light and rays as endued with colours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people would be apt to frame. Newton's Opticks.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious inquisitive heads. Swift.

GROSSNESS. n. f. [from gross.]

1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thickness; spissitude; density; greatness of parts.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shaksp.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shaksp.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain. Bacon.

Then all this earthy grossness quit;
Attir'd with stars we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death. Milton.

This being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent skies, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton's Opticks.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, was known
Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.

2. Inelegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.

Wife men, that be over-fat and fleshy, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Ascham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the soppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shaksp.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned.
Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Clarissa.

GROT. n. f. [grotte, French; grotta, Ital.]

A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot,
Certain to meet that worst of evils, thought.
Prior.

Awful see the Egerian grot. Pope.

GROTESQUE. adj. [grotesque, French; grottesco, Italian.] Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

The champaign head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild, Access deny'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden.

An hideous figure of their foes they drew,
Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,
And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors. Pope.

GROTTO. n. f. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool grotto's run,
The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun.
Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward.

GROVE. n. f. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move:
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say, a moving grove. Shakspere's Macbeth.

Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;
Thrice happy isles! Milton.

She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove.
Blackmore.

Banish'd from courts and love,
Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove.
Granville.

Can fierce passions vex his breast,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody? Thomson's Spring.

TO GRO'VE. v. n. [grufde, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground fell.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel-head passage wrought,
And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground

He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing wound. Spenser.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem, Inchas'd with all the honours of the world!
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the same. Shaksp.

Oke mast and beech, and cornell fruit they eat,
Groveling like swine on earth; in fowlest sort.
Chapman.

Now they lie
Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire.
Milton.

Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go. Milton.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves:
'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I must disclaim whate'er he can express;
His groveling sense will shew my passion less.
Dryden.

Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Addison's Spectator.

GROUND. n. f. [grund, Saxon; grondt, Danish.]

1. The earth, considered as superficially extended, and therefore related to tillage, travel, habitation, or almost any action.

The main mass of terrene matter is never called the ground. We never distinguish the terraqueous globe into ground and water, but into earth, or land, and water; again, we never say under earth, but under ground.
Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea.
Exodus.

Man to till the ground
None was, and from the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground. Milton.

- From the other hill
To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground Gliding meteorous. Milton.
A black bituminous gurge
Boils up from under ground. Milton.
And yet so nimbly he would bound,
As if he scorn'd to touch the ground. Hudibras.
2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.
I have made man and beast upon the ground. Jeremiah.
There was a dew upon all the ground. Judges.
They summ'd their wings, and soaring th' air
sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.
Too late young Turnus the delusion found;
Far on the sea, still making from the ground. Dryden's Æneid.
3. Land; country.
The water breaks its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.
4. Region; territory.
On heav'nly ground they stood, and from the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss. Milton.
With these came they, who from the bord'ring flood
Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names Of Baalim and Ashtaroth. Milton's Parad. Lost.
5. Estate; possession.
Uneasy still within these narrow bounds,
Thy next design is on thy neighbour's grounds:
His crop invites, to full perfection grown;
Thy own seems thin, because it is thy own. Dry.
6. Land occupied.
The sea o'erflow'd my ground,
And my best Flanders mare was drown'd. Mil.
7. The floor or level of the place.
Wherefore should I smite thee to the ground? 2 Samuel.
Dagon was fallen on his face to the ground. 1 Samuel.
A multitude sit on the ground. Matthew.
Some part of the month of June, the water of this lake descends under ground, through many great holes at the bottom. Brown.
8. Dregs; lees; feces; that which settles at the bottom of liquors.
Set by them cyder, verjuice, four drink, or grounds. Mortimer.
Some insist upon having had particular success in stopping gangrenes, from the use of the grounds of strong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal. Sharp's Surgery.
9. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterward painted.
We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with darksome colours. Hakerwill.
When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark,
are placed on light and transparent grounds,
as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters,
and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden.
10. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.
O'er his head
A well-wrought heaven of silk and gold was spread,
Azure the ground, the sun in gold shone bright. Cowley.
Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.
Then, wrought into the soul, let virtues shine,
The ground eternal, as the work divine. Young.
11. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised.

Get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shakspeare's Richard III.

12. First hint; first traces of an invention; that which gives occasion to the rest.
Though jealousy of state th' invention found,
Yet love refin'd upon the former ground;
That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly,
Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.

13. The first principles of knowledge.
The concords will easily be known, if the fore-grounds be thoroughly beaten in. Pref. to Accid.
Here statesmen, or of them they which can read,
May of their occupation find the grounds. Donne.
The grounds are already laid whereby that is unquestionably resolved; for having granted that God gives sufficient grace, yet when he co-operates most effectually, he doth it not irresistibly. Hammond.

After evening repasts, 'till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture. Milton on Education.

14. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle.

He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.
Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness, and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sid.
The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker.

In the solution of the Sabbatizer's objection, my method shall be, to examine, in the first place, the main grounds and principles upon which he buildeth. White.

Thou could'st not have discern'd
Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake,
No ground of enmity between us known. Milton.

Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures. Clarendon.

Sound judgment is the ground of writing well. Roscommon.

Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would be true. Dryden.

It is not easy to imagine how any such tradition could arise so early, and spread so universally, if there were not a real ground for it. Wilkins.

If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.

Thus it appears, that suits at law are not sinful in themselves, but may lawfully be used, if there is no unlawfulness in the ground and way of management. Kettlerwell.

Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.

The miraculous increase of the professors of christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury.

15. The field or place of action.

Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose;
And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring,
Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Dan.

16. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire.

At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to loose ground. Sidney.

Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their ground,
While our's with easy victory were crown'd. Dryden.

He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Seneffe. Dryden.

17. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer.

Ev'ning mist,
Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels, Homeward returning. Milton's Par. Lost.

Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Addison's Spect.

Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment. Addison.

18. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors.

Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung. Shakspeare.

If they get ground and 'vantage of the king,
Then join you with them like a rib of steel,
To make them stronger. Shakspeare Henry IV.

He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury.

Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph so gloriously over the other. Atterbury.

19. State of progress or recession.

I have known so many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.

The squirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: she runs apace, and wearies herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

20. The foil to set a thing off.

Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakspeare.

To GROUND. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fix on the ground.
2. To found, as upon cause, reason, or principle.

Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker.

The church of England, walking in the good and old way of the orthodoxal primitive fathers, groundeth the religious observation of the Lord's-day, and of other christian holidays, upon the natural equity, and not upon the letter of the fourth commandment. White.

It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boyle.

If your own actions on your will you ground,
Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dry.

Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour, becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

3. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge.

Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph.

GROUND. The pret. and part. pass. of grind.

How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground
And polish'd, looks a diamond. Hudibras.

GROUND is much used in composition for that which is next the ground, or near the ground.

GRO'UND-ASH. n. f. A saplin of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.

A lance of tough ground-ash the Trojan threw,
Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew. Dry.

Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large strait shoots, which they call ground-ash. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GRO'UND-BAIT. n. f. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it. Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your ground-bait, and to fish. Wal.

GRO'UND-FLOOR. n. f. [from ground and floor.] The lower part of a house.

GRO'UND-IVY. n. f. [hedera terrestris, Latin.] Alehoof, or tunhoof. Alehoof or ground-ivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.

GRO'UND-OAK. n. f. [from ground and oak.] If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the cooper's trade for the making of hoops, either of hael or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a ground-oak, would outlast six of the best ash. Mortimer.

GRO'UND-PINE. n. f. [chamaepitys, Latin.] A plant. The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name ground-pine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch banks by road sides. Hill.

GRO'UND-PLATE. n. f. [In architecture.] The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tenons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tenons of the joists, the summer and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney-way, and the binding joist. Harris. In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several sizes of the ground plates, breast summers, and beams. Mortimer.

GRO'UND-PLOT. n. f.

1. The ground on which any building is placed. Wretched Gynecia, where can'st thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon? Sidney. A ground plot square five hives of bees contains; Emblems of industry and virtuous gains. Harte.
2. The ichnography of a building

GRO'UND-RENT. n. f. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's ground. A foot in front, and thirty-three five sevenths deep, would bring in a ground-rent of five pounds. Arbutnot on Coins. The site was neither granted him, nor giv'n; 'Twas nature's, and the ground-rent due to Heav'n. Harte.

GRO'UND-ROOM. n. f. A room on the level with the ground. I beseeched him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room; for that otherwise it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him. Tatler.

GRO'UNDEDLY. adv. [from grounded.] Upon firm principles. He hath given the first hint of speaking groundedly, and to the purpose, upon this subject. Glanv.

GRO'UNDLESS. adj. [from ground.] Void of reason; wanting ground. But when vain doubt and groundless fear Do that dear foolish bosom tear. Prior. We have great reason to look upon the high pretensions which the Roman church makes to miracles as groundless, and to reject her vain and fabulous accounts of them. Atterbury. The party who distinguish themselves by their zeal for the present establishment, should be careful to discover such a reverence for religion, as may shew how groundless that reproach is which is cast upon them, of being averse to our national worship. Frecholder.

GRO'UNDLESSLY. adv. [from groundless.] Without reason; without cause; without just reason. Divers persons have produced the like by spirit of vitriol, or juice of lemons; but have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors. Boyle on Colours.

GRO'UNDLESSNESS. n. f. [from groundless.] Want of just reason. He durst not cite the words either of my book or sermons, lest the reader should have discovered the notorious falshood and groundlessness of his calumny. Tillotson.

GRO'UNDLING. n. f. [from ground.] A fish which keeps at the bottom of the water; hence one of the low vulgar. Hammer. It offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious perriwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

GRO'UNDLY. adv. [from ground.] Upon principles; solidly; not superficially. Not in use. A man, groundly learned already, may take much profit himself, in using by epitome to draw other mens' works, for his own memory sake, into shorter room. Ascham.

GRO'UNDSEL. n. f. [grund and rile, the basis, Saxon, perhaps from fella, Latin.] The timber or raised pavement next the ground. The window-frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame; and all these rabbets, but that on the groundsel, are grooved square; but the rabbet on the groundsel is levelled downwards, that rain or snow may the freelier fall off. Moxon.

GRO'UNDSEL. n. f. [senecio, Latin.] A plant.

GRO'UNDWORK. n. f. [from ground and work.]

1. The ground; the first stratum; the first part of the whole; that to which the rest is additional. A way there is in heav'n's expanded plain, Which, when the skies are clear, is seen below, And mortals by the name of milky know; The groundwork is of itars. Dryden's Fables.
2. The first part of an undertaking; the fundamentals. The main skill and groundwork will be to temper them such lectures and explanations, upon every opportunity, as may lead and draw them in willing obedience. Milton.
3. First principle; original reason. The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain, however they through ignorance disguise the same, or through vanity. Soenser. The morals is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction. Dryden.

GROUP. n. f. [groupe, French; gruppo, Italian.] A crowd; a cluster; a huddle; a number thronged together. In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden's Dufresnoy. I cannot doubt but the poet had here in view the picture of Zetus, in the famous group of figures which represents the two brothers binding Dirce to the horns of a mad bull. Addison. You should try your graving tools On this odious group of fools. Swift.

TO GROUP. v. a. [grouper, French.] To put into a crowd; to huddle together. The difficulty lies in drawing and disposing, or as the painters term it, in grouping such a multitude of different objects, preserving still the justice and conformity of style and colouring. Prior.

GROUSE. n. f. A kind of fowl; a heath-cock. The 'squires in scorn will fly the house For better game, and look for grouse. Swift.

GROUT. n. f. [gnut, Saxon. In Scotland they call it groats.]

1. Coarse meal; pollard. King Hardicute, 'midst Danes and Saxons stout, Carous'd in nut-brown ale, and din'd on grout: Which dish its pristine honour still retains, And when each prince is crown'd in splendour reigns. King.
2. That which purges off. Sweet honey some condense, some purge the grout; The rest, in cells apart, the liquid nectar shout. Dryden.
3. A kind of wild apple. [agriomelum, Latin.] To GROW. v. n. pret. grew; part. pass. grown. [gnopan, Sax. groyen, Dut.]
1. To vegetate; to have vegetable motion; to increase by vegetation. It is not the growing of fruit that nourisheth man; but it is thy word which preserveth them. Wisdom. He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man. Psalms.
2. To be produced by vegetation. In this country groweth abundance of that wood, which since is brought into Europe to discolour. Abbot. A bag, that groweth in the fields, at the first is hard like a tennis-ball, and white; and after groweth of a mushroom-colour, and full of light dust. Bacon's Natural History. But say, where grows the tree? from hence how far? Milton. In colder regions men compose Poison with art; but here it grows. Waller. Those tow'rs of oak o'er fertile plains might go, And visit mountains where they once did grow. Waller.
3. To shoot in any particular form. Children, like tender officers, take the bow; And as they first are fashion'd, always grow. Dryden's Juvenal.
4. To increase in stature. I long with all my heart to see the prince; I hope he is much grown since last I saw him. Shakspeare's Richard III. The poor man had nothing, save one little ewe-lamb, which he had bought and rear'd up; and it grew up together with him and with his children. 2 Samuel.
5. To come to manhood from infancy; commonly followed by up. Now the prince groweth up fast to be a man, and is of a sweet and excellent disposition. Bacon's Advice to Villiers. The main thing to be considered, in every action of a child, is how it will become him when he is bigger, and whither it will lead him when he is grown up. Locke. We are brought into the world children, ignorant and impotent; and we grow up in vanity and folly. Wake.
6. To issue, as plants from a soil, or as branches from the main trunk. They will seem not stuck into him, but growing out of him. Dryden's Æn. Dedication.
7. To increase in bulk; to become greater, or more numerous. Bones, after full growth, continue at a stay: as for nails they grow continually. Bacon. Then their numbers swell, And grow upon us. Denham.

Next came one

Who mourn'd in earnest, when the captive ark
Maim'd his brute image, heads and hands lopp'd off

In his own temple, on the grunsel edge,
Where he fell flat, and sham'd his worshippers.

Milton.

To GRUNT. } v. n. [grunio, Lat.]
To GRUNTLE. } To murmur like a hog.

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar and burn,

Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn.

Shakspeare.

Lament, ye swine! in gruntings spend your grief;

For you, like me, have lost your sole relief.

Thy brinded boars may slumber undismay'd,
Or grunt secure beneath the chestnut shade.

Tickel.

The scolding quean to louder notes doth rise,
To her full pipes the grunting hog replies;

The grunting hogs alarm the neighbours round.

Swift.

GRUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] The noise of a hog.

Swine's snouts, swine's bodies, took they,
bristles, grunts. Chapman.
Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In panick horror of pursuing dogs;

GU'DGEON. n. f. [goujon, French.]

1. A small fish found in brooks and rivers, easily caught, and therefore made a proverbial name for a man easily cheated.

'Tis true, no turbets dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords.
Pope.

2. A man easily cheated.

This he did to draw you in, like so many gudgeons, to swallow his false arguments. Swift.

3. Something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage; a bait; an allure-ment: gudgeons being commonly used as baits for pike.

But fish not with this melancholy bait,
For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion. Shakspeare.

GUE'RDON. n. f. [guerdon, gardon, Fr.]
A reward; a recompense, in a good and bad sense. Not in use.

But to the virgin comes, who all this while Amazed stands herself so mock'd to see,

By him who has the guerdon of his guile,
For so misfeigning her true knight to be. Spenser.

He shall, by thy revenging hand, at once receive the just guerdon of all his former villainies.
Knotles.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with th' abhorred sheers,
And flits the thin-spun life. Milton.

To GUESS. v. a. [ghissen, Dutch.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgment.

Incapable and shallow innocents!
You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.
Shakspeare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

—Hum! I guess at it. Shakspeare.

He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should he not very often guess rightly of things to come,
where God pleaseth not to give impediment?
Raleigh.

There issue swarming bands
Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and drefs,
To be Taxcallan enemies I guess. Dryden.

The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government. Swift.

Nor can imagination guess,
How that ungrateful charming maid
My purest passion has betray'd. Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly, or upon some just reason.

One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferiour deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God.
Stillingfleet.

To GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgment.

If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart. Locke.

GUESS. n. f. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:
Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces.
Shakspeare.

His guess was usually as near to prophecy as any man's. Fell.

A poet must confess
His art's like physick, but a happy guess. Dryd.

It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination. Locke.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,
Let us for once a child of truth confess. Prior.

No man is blest by accident, or guess,
True wisdom is the price of happiness. Young.

GUE'SSER. n. f. [from guess.] Conjectu-rer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the last fit will not be more violent than advantageous. Pope.

If fortune should please but to take such a crotchet,

To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,
To give thee lawn sleeves, a mitre and rochet, Whom would'st thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUE'SSINGLY. adv. [from guessing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly. Not in use.

I have a letter guessingly set down. Shakspeare.

GUEST. n. f. [gert, girt, Saxon;
gwest, Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house or at the table of another.

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner. Luke.

Methinks a father

Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest

That best becomes the table. Shakspeare.

Tell my royal guest

I add to his commands my own request. Dryden.

2. A stranger; one who comes newly to reside.

O defarts, defarts! how fit a guest am I for you, since my heart can people you with wild ravenous beasts, which in you are wanting?
Sidney.

Those happiest smiles

That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know

What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence

As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shakspeare.

GUE'STRITE. n. f. [from guest and rite.]
Offices due to a guest.

Ulysses so dear
A gift esteem'd it, that he would not bear
In his black fleete that guest-rite to the war.
Chapman.

GU'ESTCHAMBER. n. f. [guest and chamber.] Chamber of entertainment.

Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat
the passover with my disciples? Mark.

To GU'GGLE. v. n. [gorgolaire, Italian.]
To found as water running with inter-missions out of a narrow-mouthed vessel.

To sound as water running with inter-missions out of a narrow-mouthed vessel.

GU'DAGE. n. f. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide. Ainsworth.

GU'DANCE. n. f. [from guide.] Direction; government.

They charge me with neglecting the guidance of wiser men. Spenser.

As to those who lived under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead, would persuade them.

Particular application must be left to christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking. Rogers.

This to the young — but thy experienc'd age
Wants not the guidance of a former sage. Sewell.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he declines from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party. Swift.

To GUIDE. v. a. [guider, French.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide
you into all truth. John.

The new light served to guide them to their neighbours coffers. Decay of Piety.

Whosoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.

South.

2. To influence.

Upon these, or such like secular maxims, when nothing but the interest of this world guides men, they many times conclude that the slightest wrongs are not to be put up. Kettlewell.

3. To govern by counsel; to instruct.

For thy name's sake lead me and guide me.
Psalms.

4. To regulate; to superintend.

Women neglect that which St. Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house. Decay of Piety.

GUIDE. n. f. [guide, Fr. from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wisdom.

Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance

So far to make us wish for ignorance?
And rather in the dark to grope our way,
Than, led by a false guide, to err by day?
Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young, his father dy'd,
And left him to an happy guide. Waller.

They have all the same pastoral guides appointed, authorised, sanctified, and set apart by the appointment of God by the direction of the spirit, to direct and lead the people of God in the same way of eternal salvation. Pearson.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move, and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument:
nor is there any such knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,
But we have sure experience for our guide.
Dryden's Fables.

GUI'DELESS. adj. [from guide.] Having no guide; wanting a governour or superintendent.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,
Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,
To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd.
Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away,
Which guideless in those dark dominions stray.
Dryden.

GUI'DER. n. f. [from guide.] Director;
regulator; guide. Obsolete.

Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shakspeare.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an impostu-me, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his chirurgeon, and providence for the guider of his hand. South.

GUIDON. n. f. [French.] A standard-bearer; a standard. Obsolete.

GUILD. n. f. [gildreip, Saxon, a fellowship, a corporation.] A society;
a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word gild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution.
Cowell.

Towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the guild hall affords.
Shakspeare's Richard III.
In woolen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

As when the long-ear'd milky mothers wait
At some sick miser's triple bolted gate,
For their defrauded absent foals they make
A moan so loud, that all the guild awake. Pope.
GUILE. n. f. [guille, gille, old French,
the same with wile.] Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous subtilty.

With fawning words he courted her awhile,
And looking lovely, and oft sighing sore,
Her constant heart did court with divers guile;
But words and looks, and signs she did abhor.
Spenser.

When I have most need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. Shaks.
We may, with more successful hope, resolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milton.
Nor thou his malice and false guile condemn:
Subtile he needs must be who could seduce Angels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GUILEFUL. adj. [guile and full.]

1. Wily; insidious; mischievously artful.
The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skilful against guile. Hooker.

Without expence at all,
By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd.
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

He saw his guileful act
By eve, though all unweeting, seconded Upon her husband. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The guileful phantom now forsook the throud,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud.
Dryden's Æn.

2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.
I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corps of Bassianus lay. Shaks.
GUILEFULLY. adv. [from guileful.] Insidiously; treacherously.

To whom the tempter guilefully reply'd. Milt.
GUILEFULNESS. n. f. [from guileful.]
Secret treachery; tricking cunning.

GUILELESS. adj. [from guile.] Free from deceit; void of insidiousness; simply honest.

GUILER. n. f. [from guile. See BE-GUILE.] One that betrays into danger by insidious practices.

But he was wary wife in all his way,
And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
Ne suffered lust his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey.
Spenser.

GUILT. n. f. [gilt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.]

1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.

It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Bacon's Henry VII.

When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. A crime; an offence.

Close pent up guilts
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
These dreadful summoners grace. Shakspeare.

GUILTILY. adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.

Bloody and guilty; guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair, and die.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

GUI'LTINESS. n. f. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.

He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness.
Sidney.

The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness. Shakspeare.
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shaks.

GUI'LTLESS. adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.

I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Shaks.

Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shakspeare's Othello.
Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Numbers.

Thou, who do'st all thou wishest at thy will,
And never wishest aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.

Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
Nor knew nor wish'd he that those vows he made
On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.

The teeming earth yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprovok'd did fruitful stores allow. Dryd.
Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,

When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.

GUI'LTLESSLY. adv. [from guiltless.]
Without guilt; innocently.

GUI'LTLESSNESS. n. f. [from guiltless.]
Innocence; freedom from crime.

A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppress'd. Sidney.

I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than any man living could be. King Charles.

GUILTY. adj. [giltig, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]

1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.

Is there not a ballad of the king and the beggar?
—The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since. Shakspeare.

Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence death? Shakspeare.

We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear. Genesis.

With mortal hatred I pursu'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryd.

Farewel the stones
And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans.
Dryden.

There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson.

2. Wicked; corrupt.

All the tumult of a guilty world,
Toft by ungenerous passion, sinks away. Thomson.

GUINEA. n. f. [from Guinea, a country in Africa abounding with gold.] A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.

By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is, the last guinea that was coined. Locke.

Ladies, whose love is constant as the wind:
Cits, who prefer a guinea to mankind. Young.

GUI'NEADROPPER. n. f. [guinea and drop.] One who cheats by dropping guineas.

Who now the guineadropper's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards.
Gay.

GUI'NEAHEN. n. f. A fowl, supposed to be of Guinea.

GUI'NEAPEPPER. n. f. [capsicum, Latin.]
A plant. Miller.

GUI'NEAPIG. n. f. A small animal with a pig's snout, brought, I believe, from Africa.

GUISE. n. f. [The same with wife, guise,
French; pira, Saxon, the p or w being changed, as is common, into g.]

1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour.

His own fire, and master of his guise,
Did often tremble at his horrid view. Spenser.
Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,

T' enchant the valiant and beguile the wife.
Fairfax.

Lo you! here she comes: this is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep: observe her, stand close. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

They stand a horrid front
Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms in guise
Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty chief
Had to impose. Milton's Paradise Lost.

By their guise
Just men they seem, and all their study bent
To worship God a-right. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Back, shepherds, back:

Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes and such court guise
As mercury did first devise. Milton.

Their external shapes are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them. More.

2. Practice; custom; property.
I have drunk wine past my usual guise;
Strong wine commands the foole, and moves the wife. Chapman.

This would not be slept;
Old guise must be kept. Ben Jonson.
The swain reply'd, it never was our guise
To slight the poor, or aught humane despise. Pope.

3. External appearance; dress.

When I was very young, nothing was so much talked of as rickets among children, and consumptions among young people: after these the spleen came in play, and then the scurvy, which was the general complaint, and both were thought to appear in many various guises. Temple.

The Hugonots were engaged in a civil war, by the specious pretences of some, who, under the guise of religion, sacrificed so many thousands to their own ambition. Swift.

GUITA'R. n. f. [ghitara, Italian; gitterre,
Fr.] A stringed instrument of musick.

Sallads and eggs, and lighter fare,
Tune the Italian spark's guitar. Prior.

GULCH. } n. f. [from gulo, Latin.] A GU'LCHIN. } little glutton. Skinner.

GULES. adj. [perhaps from goule, the throat.] Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.

Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules;
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shakspeare.

He whose fable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the knight resemble,
When he laid couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now his dread and black complexion smear'd

With heraldry more dismal; head to foot,
Now he is total gules. Shakspeare.

GULF. n. f. [golfo, Italian.]

1. A bay; an opening into land.

The Venetian admiral withdrew himself farther off from the island Curfu, into the gulf of the Adriatick. Knolles.

2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.

Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy corse with easy pace
To yawning gulph of deep Avernus' hole. Spenser.

I know thou'd'st rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulph,
Than flatter him in a bower. Shakspeare. Coriolanus.
This is the gulf through which Virgil's Alecto shoots herself into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description. Addison on Italy.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abysses and unfathomable gulfs? Bentley.

3. A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.

England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shakspeare.

4. Any thing insatiable, as the mouth or stomach.

Scull of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witches mummy; maw and gulf
Of the ravening salt sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark. Shakspeare.

GULFY. adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; vorticosus.

Rivers arise; whether thou be the son
Of utmost Tweed, or Oose, or gulfy Dun. Milton.
At their native realms the Greeks arriv'd,
All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,
And scap'd the perils of the gulfy main. Pope.
High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian isle Fronts the deep roar of disemboguing Nile. Pope.

To GULL. v. a. [guiller, to cheat, old French.] To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.

If I do not gull him into a nay word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shakspeare.
Yet love these forc'ries did remove, and move
Thee to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.

He would have gull'd him with a trick,
But Mart was too too politick. Hudibras.
They are not to be gull'd twice with the same trick. L'Estrange.

The Roman people were grossly gull'd twice or thrice over, and as often enslaved in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryden.

By their designing leaders taught,
The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd. Dryden.
For this advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be out-riden, though out-run;
By fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:
Of him disposing in his own abode,
He sooth'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.

GULL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. [mergus.] A sea bird.

2. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.

I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it. Shakspeare's Much Ado.
Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not,
'tis an apparent cheat and gull. Gov. of Tongue.

3. A stupid animal; one easily cheated.

Being fed by us you us'd us so,
As that ungentele gull, the cuckow bird,
Useth the sparrow. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,

And made the most notorious geck and gull
That e'er invention plaid on. Shakspeare.

That paltry story is untrue,
And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you. Hudibras.

GU'LLCATCHER. n. f. [gull and catch.]

A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.

Here comes my noble gullcatcher. Shakspeare.

GU'LLER. n. f. [from gull.] A cheat;
an impostor.

GU'LLERY. n. f. [from gull.] Cheat;
imposture. Ainsworth.

GU'LLER. n. f. [goulet, Fr. gula, Lat.]

1. The throat; the passage through which the food passes; the meat-pipe;
the oesophagus.

It might be his doom,
One day to sing
With gullet in string. Denham.

Many have the gullet or feeding channel which have no lungs or windpipes; as fishes which have gills, whereby the heart is refrigerated; for such thereof as have lungs and respiration are not without whizzon, as whales and cetaceous animals. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. A small stream or lake. Not in use.

Nature has various tender muscles plac'd,
By which the artful gullet is embrac'd. Blackmore.

The liquor in the stomach is a compound of that which is separated from its inward coat, the spittle which is swallowed, and the liquor which distils from the gullet. Arbutnot.

The Euxine sea and the Mediterranean, small gullets, if compared with the ocean. Heylin.

meats. Brown.

To GULP. v. a. [golpen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.

He loosens the fish, gulps it down, and so soon as ever the morsel was gone wipes his mouth. L'Estrange.

I see the double flaggon charge their hand;
See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain. Gay.

GULP. n. f. [from the verb.] As much as can be swallowed at once.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love and sorrow. More.

As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,
And peep above the seas, he names the fair. Dryden's Fables.

GUM. n. f. [gummi, Latin.]

1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstruums; whereas resins, being more sulphurous, require a spirituous dissolvent. Quincy.

One whose eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakspeare's Othello.

He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gum,
Which from remotest regions hither come. Waller.

The clouds
Tine the slant light'ning; whose thwart flame
driv'n down,
Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milton.

3. Overgrown with gum.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays
His lazy limbs and dozy head to raise;
Then rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pate. Dryden.

GUN. n. f. [Of this word there is no satisfactory etymology. Lye observes that gun in Iceland signifies battle; but when guns came into use we had no commerce with Iceland. May not gun come by gradual corruption from canne, ganne, gunne? Canne is the original of cannon.] The general name for firearms; the instrument from which shot

Ungarter'd, and down gyred to his ankle. Shakspere.

GYVES. n. s. [from gwyn, Welsh.] Fetters; chains for the legs.

The villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on. Shakspere.

And knowing this, should I yet stay,
Like such as blow away their lives,
And never will redeem a day,

Enamour'd of their golden gyves? Ben Jonson.

The poor prisoners, boldly starting up, break off their chains and gyves. Knolles.

Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton.

But Telamon rush'd in, and hap'd to meet
A rising root, that held his fasten'd feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryden.

To GYVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to ensnare.

With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtship. Shakspere's Othello.

H

H

Is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, sounded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as house, behaviour: where it is followed by a

VOL. I.

HA

consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as right, bought.

HA. interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expression of wonder, surprise, sudden question, or sudden exertion.

You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard:
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see. Shakspere.

HA

Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headless trunk!

It is my Hastings! Roscoe's Jane Shore.

2. An expression of laughter. Used with reduplication.

He saith among the trumpets ha, ha, and he smelleth the battle afar off. Job.

Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and vow'd;
Our plots and delusions
Have wrought such confusions,
That the monarch's a slave to the crown. Dryden.

HAAK. n. f. A fish. Ainsworth.
HABEAS CORPUS. [Latin.] A writ, the which, a man indicted of some trespass, being laid in prison for the same, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own cost, and to answer the cause there. Cowell.

HABERDASHER. n. f. [This word is ingeniously deduced by Minsheu from habt ibr dast, German, have you this, the expression of a shopkeeper offering his wares to sale.] One who sells small wares; a pedlar.

Because these cunning men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop. Bacon.

A haberdasher who was the oracle of the coffee house, declared his opinion. Addison.

HA'BERDINE. n. f. A dried salt cod. Ainsworth.

HA'BERGEON. n. f. [haubergeon, French; halbergium, low Lat.] Armour to cover the neck and breast; breastplate; neck-piece; gorget.

And halbert some, and some a habergeon:
 So every one in arms was quickly dight. Fairfax.

The shot let fly, and graving
 Upon his shoulder, in the passing, Lodg'd in Magnano's brags habergeon. Hudib.

HABI'LIMENT. n. f. [habiliment, French.] Dress; clothes; garment.

He the fairest Una found,
 Strange lady, in so strange habiliment,
 Teaching the satyres. Fairy Queen.

My riches are these poor habiliments,
 Of which if you should here disfigure me,
 You take the sum and substance that I have. Shakespeare.

The clergy should content themselves with wearing gowns and other habiliments of Irish drapery. Swift.

To HABI'LITATE. v. n. [habilitare, Fr.] To qualify; to entitle. Not in use.

Divers persons in the house of commons were attainted, and thereby not legal, nor habilitate to serve in parliament, being disabled in the highest degree. Bacon.

HABILITA'TION. n. f. [from habilitate.] Qualification.

The things are but habilitations towards arms; and what is habilitation, without intention and act? Bacon.

HABI'LITY. n. f. [habilité, French.] Faculty; power: now ability.

HA'BIT. n. f. [habitus, Latin.]

1. State of any thing: as, habit of body.

2. Dress; accoutrement; garment.

I shifted
 Into a madman's rags, t'assume a semblance
 The very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit
 Met I my father. Shakespeare's King Lear.

If you have any justice, any pity;
 If ye be any thing but churchmen's habits. Shakespeare.

Both the poets being dressed in the same English habit, story compared with story, judgment may be made betwixt them. Dryden.

The scenes are old, the habits are the same
 We wore last year. Dryden.

Changes there are in veins of wit, like those of habits, or other modes. Temple.

There are among the statues several of Venus, in different habits. Addison on Italy.

The clergy are the only set of men who wear a distinct habit from others. Swift.

3. Habit is a power or ability in man of doing any thing, when it has been acquired by frequent doing the same thing. Locke.

He hath a better bad habit of frowning, than the count palatine. Shakespeare.

4. Custom; inveterate use.

The last fatal step is, by frequent repetition of the sinful act, to continue and persist in it, 'till at length it settles into a fixed confirmed habit of sin; which being that which the apostle calls the finishing of sin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infliction. South.

No civil broils have since his death arose,
 But faction now by habit does obey;
 And wars have that respect for his repose,
 As winds for halcyons when they breed at sea. Dryden.

The force of education is so great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what shape we please, and give the impressions of such habits, as shall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury.

To HA'BIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; to accoutre; to array.

Present yourself and your fair princess Before Leontes:
 She shall be habited as it becomes

The partner of your bed. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Having called to his memory sir George Villiers, and the cloaths he used to wear, in which at that time he seemed to be habited, he thought him to be that person. Clarendon.

They habited themselves like those rural deities, and imitated them in their rustick dances. Dryden.

HA'BITABLE. adj. [habitable, French; habitabilis, Latin.] Capable of being dwelt in; capable of sustaining human creatures.

By means of our solitary situation, we know well most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown. Bacon.

That was her torrid and inflaming time;
 This is her habitable tropique clime. Danne.

The torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.
 Look round the habitable world, how few Know their own good, or knowing it pursue. Dryden.

HA'BITABLENESS. n. f. [from habitable.] Capacity of being dwelt in.

The cutting of the equinoctial line decides that controversy of the habitableness of the torrid zone. More.

Those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth, the being of antipodes, and of the habitableness of the torrid zone, are abundantly demonstrated. Ray.

HA'BITANCE. n. f. [habitatio, Latin.] Dwelling; abode.

What art thou, man, if man at all thou art,
 That here in desert hast thine *habitan*ce?

And these rich heaps of wealth do't hide apart
 From the world's eye, and from her right usance. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

HA'BITANT. n. f. [habitant, French; habitans, Latin.] Dweller; one that lives in any place; inhabitant.

Not to earth are those bright luminaries
 Officious; but to the earth's habitant. Milton.

Powers celestial to each other's view
 Stand still confest, though distant far they lie,
 Or habitants of earth, or sea, or sky. Pope.

HABITA'TION. n. f. [habitation, French; habitatio, Latin.]

1. The state of a place receiving dwellers.
 Amplitude almost immense, with stars
 Numerous, and every star perhaps a world
 Of destin'd habitation. Milton.

2. Act of inhabiting; state of dwelling.
 Palaces,
 For want of habitation and repair,
 Dissolve to heaps of ruins. Denham.

Rocks and mountains, which in the first ages were high and craggy, and consequently then inconvenient for habitation, were by continual deterration brought to a lower pitch. Woodward.

3. Place of abode; dwelling.

Wisdom, to the end she might save many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all; she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us. Hooker.

God oft descends to visit men

Unseen, and through their habitations walks
 To mark their doings. Milton.

HABITATOR. n. f. [Latin.] Dweller; inhabitant.

The sun's presence is more continued unto the northern inhabitants; and the longest day in Cancer is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the southern habitators. Brown.

HABI'TUAL. adj. [habituel, from habit, French.] Customary; accustomed; inveterate; established by frequent repetition. It is used for both good and ill.

Sin, there in pow'r before
 Once actual; now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant. Milton.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims. South.

By length of time
 The scurf is worn away of each committed crime:

No speck is left of their habitual stains;
 But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden.

'Tis impossible to become an able artist, without making your art habitual to you. Dryden.

HABI'TUALLY. adv. [from habitual.] Customarily; by habit.

Internal graces and qualities of mind sanctify our natures, and render us habitually holy. Atterbury.

To HABI'TUATE. v. a. [habituare, Fr.] To accustom; to use one's self by frequent repetition: with to.

Men are first corrupted by bad counsel and company, and next they habituare themselves to their vicious practices. Tillotson.

Such as live in a rarer air are habituated to the exercise of a greater muscular strength. Arbutnot.

HA'BITUDE. n. f. [habitus, Latin; habitude, French.]

1. Relation; respect; state with regard to something else.

We cannot conclude this complexion of nations from the vicinity or habitude they hold unto the sun. Brown.

The will of God is like a freight unalterable rule, but the various comportments of the creature, either thwarting this rule, or holding conformity to it, occasions several habitudes of this rule unto it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

It results from the very nature of things, as they stand in such a certain habitude, or relation to one another. South.

As by the objective part of perfect happiness we understand that which is best and last, and to which all other things are to be referred, so by the formal part must be understood the best and last habitude of man toward that best object. Norris.

In all the habitudes of life,
 The friend, the mistress, and the wife,
 Variety we still pursue. Swift.

2. Familiarity; converse; frequent intercourse.

His knowledge in the noblest useful arts,
 Was such dead authors could not give;
 But habitudes with those who live. Dryden.

To write well, one must have frequent habitudes with the best company.

3. Long custom; habit; inveterate use. This is more properly habit.

Mankind is willing to continue in a pleasing error, strengthened by a long habitude. Dryden.

Thy ear, inur'd to charitable sounds,
 And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds
 Of jest obscene, and vulgar ribaldry,
 The ill-bred question, and the loud reply,
 Brought by long habitude from bad to worse:
 Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse. Prior.

4. The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.

It is impossible to gain an exact habitude without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice. Dryden.

HA'BNAB. adv. [hap ne hap, or nap; as would nould, or ne would; will nil, or ne will; that is, let it happen or not.] At random; at the mercy of chance; without any rule or certainty of effect.

He circles draws, and squares,
With cyphers, astral characters,
Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em,
Although set down habnab at random. Hudib.

To HACK. v. a. [haccan, Saxon; hacken, Dutch; bacher, French; from acape, an axe, Saxon.]

1. To cut into small pieces; to chop; to cut slightly with frequent blows; to mangle with unskilful blows. It bears commonly some notion of contempt or malignity.

He put on that armour, whereof there was no one piece wanting, though hacked in some places, bewraying some fight not long since passed. Sidney.

What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and say it was in fight! Shaksp.
Richard the second here was hack'd to death.

I'll fight 'till from my bones my flesh be hackt. Shaksp.

One flourishing branch of his most royal root
Is hackt down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe.

Burn me, hack me, hew me into pieces. Dryden.

Not the hack'd helmet, nor the dusty field,
But purple vests, and flow'ry garlands please. Addison.

But fate with butchers plac'd thy priestly stall,
Meek modern faith to murder, hack, and mawl. Pope.

2. To speak unready, or with hesitation. Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English. Shaksp.

To HACK. v. n. To hackney; to turn hackney or prostitute. Hanmer.

HA'CKLE. n. f. Raw silk; any flimsy substance unspun.

Take the hackle of a cock, or capon's neck, or a plover's top: take off one side of the feather, and then take the hackle silk, gold or silver thread, and make these fast at the bent of the hook. Walton's Angler.

To HA'CKLE. v. a. To dress flax.

HA'CKNEY. n. f. [hacknai, Welsh; hackneye, Teutonic; haquenee, French.]

1. A pacing horse.
2. A hired horse; hired horses being usually taught to pace, or recommended as good pacers.

Light and lewd persons were as easily suborned to make an affidavit for money, as post-horses and hackneys are taken to hire. Bacon.

Who, mounted on a broom, the nag
And hackney of a Lapland hag,
In quest of you came hither post. Hudibras.

3. A hireling; a prostitute. Three kingdoms rung With his accumulative and hackney tongue. Rowe.

That is no more than every lover
Does for his hackney lady suffer. Hudibras.
Shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,
Or each new pension'd fycophant, pretend
To break my windows. Pope.

4. Any thing let out for hire.

A wit can study in the streets;
Not quite so well, however, as one ought;
A hackney coach may chance to spoil a thought. Pope.

5. Much used; common.

These notions young students in physick derive from their hackney authors. Harvey.

To HA'CKNEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To practise in one thing; to accustom, as to the road.

He is long hackney'd in the ways of men. Shaksp.

HA'QUETON. n. f. [baquet, old French, a little horse.] Some piece of armour.

You may see the very fashion of the Irish horseman in his long hose, riding shoes of costly cordwain, his haqueton, and his habergeon. Spenser's State of Ireland.

HAD. The preterit and part. pass. of have. I had better, you had better, &c. means the same as, it would be better for me or you; or, it would be more eligible: it is always used potentially, not indicatively: nor is have ever used to that import. We say likewise, it had been better or worse.

I had rather be a country servant maid,
Than a great queen with this condition. Shaksp.
Had we not better leave this Utica,
To arm Numidia in our cause? Addison.

HA'DDOCK. n. f. [hadot, French.] A sea fish of the cod kind, but small.

The coast is plentifully stored with pilchards, herrings, and haddocks. Carew.

HAFT. n. f. [hæft, Saxon; heft, Dutch; from To have or hold.] A handle; that part of any instrument that is taken into the hand.

This brandish'd dagger
I'll bury to the haft in her fair breast. Dryden.

These extremities of the joints are the hafts and handles of the members. Dryden.

A needle is a simple body, being only made of steel; but a sword is a compound, because its haft or handle is made of materials different from the blade. Watts' Logick.

To HAFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To set in a haft. Ainsworth.

HAG. n. f. [hægerre, a goblin, Saxon; beckle, a witch, Dutch.]

1. A fury; a she-monster.

Thus spoke th' impatient prince, and made a pause:

His foul hags rais'd their heads, and clapt their hands;

And all the powers of hell, in full applause,
Flourish'd their snakes, and took their flaming brands. Craslow.

2. A witch; an enchantress.

Out of my door, you witch! you hag, you baggage, you poucat, you rannion. Shaksp.

3. An old ugly woman.

Such affectations may become the young;
But thou old hag of threescore years and three,
Is shewing of thy parts in Greek for thee? Dryden.

To HAG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment; to harass with vain terror.

That makes them in the dark see visions,
And hag themselves with apparitions. Hudib.

How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits with the fancy of omens, tales, and visions! L'Estrange.

HA'GARD. adj. [bagard, French.]

1. Wild; untamed; irreclaimable.

As hagard hawk, presuming to contend With hardy fowl above his able might,
His weary pounces all in vain doth spend,
To trust the prey too heavy for his flight. Fairy Queen.

She's too disdainful;
I know her spirits are as coy and wild,
As hagard as the rock. Shaksp.

2. [bager, German.] Lean; rugged; perhaps, ugly. To this sense I have put the following passage; for the author ought to have written bagard.

A hagg'd carion of a wolf, and a jolly sort of dog, with good flesh upon's back, fell into company together. L'Estrange.

3. Deformed with passion; wildly disordered.

Fearful besides of what in fight had pass'd,
His hands and hagard eyes to heav'n he cast. Dryden.

Where are the conscious looks, the face now pale,
Now flushing red, the down-cast hagard eyes,
Or fixt on earth, or slowly rais'd! Smith.

HA'GGARD. n. f.

1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.

I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass, which has as long lov'd me
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggard. Shaksp.

2. A species of hawk.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the south by thy direction fly? Sandys.
I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the aires, the brancher, the ramish hawk, and the haggard. Walton.

3. A hag. So Garth has used it for want of understanding it.

Beneath the gloomy cover of an yew,
In a dark grot, the baleful haggard lay,
Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day. Garth.

HA'GGARDLY. adv. [from haggard.] Deformedly; uglily.

For her the rich Arabia sweats her gum;
And precious oils from distant Indies come,
How haggardly soe'er she looks at home. Dryd.

HA'GGESE. n. f. [from hog or hack.] A mass of meat, generally pork chopped, and enclosed in a membrane. In Scotland it is commonly made in a sheep's maw of the entrails of the same animal, cut small, with suet and spices.

HA'GGISH. adj. [from bag.] Of the nature of a hag; deformed; horrid.

But on us both did haggish age steal on,
And wore us out of act. Shaksp.

To HA'GGLE. v. a. [corrupted from hackle or hack.] To cut; to chop; to mangle: always in a bad sense.

Suffolk first died, and York all haggled o'er,
Comes to him where in gore he lay inteept. Shaksp.

To HA'GGLE. v. n. To be tedious in a bargain; to be long in coming to the price.

HA'GGLER. n. f. [from haggle.]

1. One that cuts.

2. One that is tardy in bargaining.

HA'GIOGRAPHER. n. f. [ἅγιος and γράφω.] A holy writer.

The Jews divide the holy scriptures of the old testament into the law, the prophets, and the hagiographers.

HAH. interjed. An expression of sudden effort.

Her coats tuck'd up, and all her motions just,
She stamps, and then cries hah! at ev'ry thrust. Dryden.

HAIL. n. f. [hazel, Saxon.] Drops of rain frozen in their falling. Locke.

Thunder mix'd with hail,
Hail mix'd with fire, must rend th' Egyptian sky. Milton.

H A I

To HAIL. v. n. To pour down hail.

My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation when it shall hail, coming down on the forest.

Isaiah.

HAIL. interj. [hæl, health, Saxon: hail, therefore, is the same as salve of the Latins, or hygieia of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of salutation now used only in poetry; health be to you. It is used likewise to things inanimate.

Hail, hail, brave friend!

Say to the king the knowledge of the broil.

Shakspeare.

Her sick head is bound about with clouds: It does not look as it would have a hail, Or health wish'd in it, as on other morns.

Ben Jonson.

The angel hail

Bestow'd, the holy salutation us'd Long after to blest Mary, second Eve.

Milton.

Farewell, happy fields, Where joy for ever dwells! hail horrors! hail Infernal world! and thou profoundest hell Receive thy new possessor!

Milton.

All hail, he cry'd, thy country's grace and love; Once first of men below, now first of birds above.

Dryden.

Hail to the sun! from whose returning light The cheerful soldier's arms new lustre take.

Rowe.

To HAIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To salute; to call to.

A galley drawing near unto the shore, was hailed by a Turk, accompanied with a troop of horsemen.

Knolles.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast, And hail me thrice to everlasting rest.

Dryden.

HA'ILSHOT. n. f. [hail and shot.] Small shot scattered like hail.

The master of the artillery did visit them sharply with murdering hailshot, from the pieces mounted towards the top of the hill.

Hayward.

HA'ILSTONE. n. f. [hail and stone.] A particle or single ball of hail.

You are no surer, no, Than is the coal of fire upon the ice, Or hailstone in the sun.

Shakspeare.

Hard hailstones lie not thicker on the plain, Northaken oaks such show'rs of acorns rain.

Dryd.

HA'ILY. adj. [from hail.] Consisting of hail.

From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours, Which the cold north congeals to haily showers.

Pope.

HAIR. n. f. [hæp, Saxon.]

1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegument or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow.

Quincy.

My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shall the difference of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a different internal constitution between a changeling and a drill?

Locke.

2. A single hair.

H A L

Naughty lady,

These hairs which thou do'st ravish from my chin, Will quicken and accuse thee.

Shakspeare.

Much is breeding;

Which, like the courser's hair, hath yet but life, And not a serpent's poison.

Shakspeare.

3. Any thing proverbially small.

If thou tak'st more

Or less than just a pound; if the scale turn But in the estimation of a hair, Thou diest.

Shakspeare. Merch. of Venice.

He judges to a hair of little indecencies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written.

Dryden.

4. Course; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession.

Shakspeare.

HA'IRBEL. n. f. A flower; the hyacinth.

HA'IRBRAINED. adj. [This should rather be written harebrained, unconstant, unsettled, wild as a hare.] Wild; irregular; unsteady.

Let's leave this town; for they are hairbrain'd slaves,

And hunger will enforce them be more eager.

Shakspeare.

HA'IRBREADTH. n. f. [hair and breadth.]

A very small distance; the diameter of a hair.

Seven hundred chosen men left-handed could sling stones at an hairbreadth, and not miss.

Judges.

I spoke of most disastrous chances, Of moving accidents by flood and field; Of hairbreadth 'scapes in th' imminent deadly breach.

Shakspeare.

HA'IRCLOTH. n. f. [hair and cloth.] Stuff made of hair, very rough and prickly, worn sometimes in mortification.

It is composed of reeds and parts of plants woven together, like a piece of haircloth.

Grew.

HAIRLACE. n. f. [hair and lace.] The fillet with which women tie up their hair.

Some worms are commonly resembled to a woman's hairlace or fillet, thence called tenia.

Harvey.

If Molly happens to be careless, And but neglects to warm her hairlace, She gets a cold as sure as death.

Swift.

HA'IRLESS. adj. [from hair.] Wanting hair.

Whitebeards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps

Against thy majesty.

Shakspeare.

HA'IRINESS. n. f. [from hairy.] The state of being covered with hair, or abounding with hair.

HA'IRY. adj. [from hair.]

1. Overgrown with hair; covered with hair.

She his hairy temples then had rounded With coronet of flowers.

Shakspeare.

Children are not hairy, for that their skins are more perspirable.

Bacon.

2. Consisting of hair.

Storms have shed

From vines the hairy honours of their head.

Dryden.

HAKE. n. f. A kind of fish.

The coast is stored with mackrel and hake.

Carew.

HA'KOT. n. f. [from hake.] A kind of fish.

Ainsworth.

HAL, in local names, is derived like al from the Saxon healle, i. e. a hall, a palace. In Gothick alh signifies a temple, or any other famous building.

Gibson's Camden.

HA'LBARD. n. f. [halebarde, French; hallebarde, Dutch, from harde, an axe, and hale, a court, halberds being the common weapons of guards.] A battle-axe fixed to a long pole.

H A L

Advance thy halberd higher than my breast.

Shakspeare.

Our halberds did shut up his passage. Four knaves in garbs succinct, a trusly band, Caps on their heads, and halberds in their hand, Draw forth to combat on the velvet plain.

Pope.

HA'LBARDIER. n. f. [halberdier, French, from halberd.] One who is armed with a halberd.

The dukes appointed him a guard of thirty halberdiers, in a livery of murrey and blue, to attend his person.

Bacon.

The king had only his halberdiers, and fewer of them than used to go with him.

Clarendon.

HA'LCYON. n. f. [halcyo, Latin.] A bird, of which it is said that she breeds in the sea, and that there is always a calm during her incubation.

Such smiling rogues, as these, sooth ev'ry passion,

Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods; Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks

With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters.

Amidst our arms as quiet you shall be,

As halcyons brooding on a winter sea.

Dryden.

HALCYON. adj. [from the noun.] Placid; quiet; still; peaceful.

When great Augustus made war's tempest cease,

His halcyon days brought forth the arts of peace.

Denham.

No man can expect eternal serenity and halcyon days from so in competent and partial a cause, as the constant course of the sun in the equinoctial circle.

Bentley.

HALE. adj. [This should rather be written hail, from hal, health.] Healthy; sound; hearty; well complexioned.

My seely sheep like well below, For they been hale enough I trow,

And liken their abode.

Spenser.

Some of these wise partizans concluded the government had hired two or three hundred hale men, to be pinioned, if not executed, as the pretended captives.

Addison.

His stomach too begins to fail; Last year we thought him strong and hale,

But now he's quite another thing:

I wish he may hold out 'till spring.

Swift.

To HALE. v. a. [halen, Dutch; haler, French.] To drag by force; to pull violently and rudely.

Fly to your house;

The plebeians have got your fellow tribune, And hale him up and down.

Shakspeare.

My third comfort,

Star'd most unluckily, is from my breast Hal'd out to murder.

Shakspeare.

Give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him, lest he hale thee to the judge.

Luke.

He by the neck hath hal'd, in pieces cut, And set me as a mark on every butt.

Sandys.

Thither by harpy-footed furies hal'd, At certain revolutions, all the damn'd

Are brought.

Milton.

This sinistrous gravity is drawn that way by the great artery, which then subsideth, and haleth the heart unto it.

Brown.

Who would not be disgusted with any recreation, in itself indifferent, if he should with blows be haled to it when he had no mind?

Locke.

In all the tumults at Rome, though the people proceeded sometimes to pull and hale one another about, yet no blood was drawn, 'till the time of the Gracchi.

Swift.

HA'LER. n. f. [from hale.] He who pulls and hales.

HALF. n. f. plural halves. [healf, Sax; and all the Teutonic dialects. The l is often not sounded.]

1. A moiety; one part of two; an equal part.

An half acre of land. 1 Samuel.
Many might go to heaven with half the labour they go to hell, if they would venture their industry the right way. Ben Jonson.

Well chosen friendship, the most noble
Of virtues all our joys makes double,
And into halves divides our trouble. Denham

Or what but riches is there known
Which man can solely call his own;
In which no creature goes his half,
Unless it be to squint and laugh? Hudibras.

No mortal tongue can half the beauty tell;
For none but hands divine could work so well.
Dryden.

Of our manufacture foreign markets took off one half, and the other half were consumed amongst ourselves. Locke.

The council is made up half out of the noble families, and half out of the plebeian. Addison.

Half the misery of life might be extinguished, would men alleviate the general curse by mutual compassion. Addison.

Her beauty in thy softer half
Bury'd and lost, she ought to grieve. Prior.

Natural was it for a prince, who had proposed to himself the empire of the world, not to neglect the sea, the half of his dominions Arbuth.

2. It sometimes has a plural signification when a number is divided.

Had the land selected of the best,
Half had come hence, and let the world provide the rest. Dryden.

HALF. adv.

1. In part; equally.

I go with love and fortune, two blind guides,
To lead my way; half loth, and half consenting.
Dryden.

2. It is much used in composition to signify a thing imperfect, as the following examples will show.

HALF-BLOOD. n. f. One not born of the same father and mother.

Which shall be heir of the two male twins, who by the dissection of the mother, were laid open to the world? Whether a sister by the half- blood shall inherit before a brother's daughter by the whole-blood? Locke.

HALF-BLOODED. adj. [half and blood.]

Mean; degenerate.
The let alone lies not in your good will.
—Nor in thine, lord.
—Half-blooded fellow, yes. Shakespeare.

HALF-CAP. n. f. Cap imperfectly put off, or faintly moved.

With certain half-caps and cold moving nods,
They froze me into silence. Shakespeare.

HALF-PENDEAL. n. f. [half and pæl, Sax.] Part.

HALF-FACED. adj. [half and faced.]

Showing only part of the face; small faced: in contempt.
Proud incroaching tyranny
Burns with revenging fire, whose hopeful colours Advance a half-faced sun striving to shine. Shaks.
This same half-faced fellow, Shadow; give me this man: he presents no mark to the enemy;
the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife. Shakespeare.

HALF-HATCHED. adj. [half and hatch.]

Imperfectly hatched.
Here, thick as hailstones pour,
Turnips, and half-hatch'd eggs, a mingled show'r,
Among the rabble rain. Gay.

HALF-HEARD. adj. Imperfectly heard; not heard to an end.

Not added-years on years my task could close;
Back to thy native islands might'st thou sail,
And leave half-heard the melancholy tale. Pope.

HALF-MOON. n. f.

1. The moon in its appearance when at half increase or decrease.

2. Any thing in the figure of a half moon.
See how in warlike muster they appear,
In thombs and wedges, and half-moons and wings.
Milton.

HALF-PENNY. n. f. plural half-pence. [half and penny.]

1. A copper coin, of which two make a penny.

Bardolph stole a lute-case, bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three half-pence. Shaks.
I thank you; and sure, dear friend, my thanks are too dear of a half-penny. Shakespeare.

He cheats for half-pence, and he doffs his coat
To save a farthing in a ferryboat. Dryden.

Never admit this pernicious coin, no not so much as one single half-penny. Swift.

2. It has the force of an adjective conjoined with any thing of which it denotes the price.

There shall be in England seven half-penny loaves sold for a penny. Shakespeare.

You will wonder how Wood could get his majesty's broad seal for so great a sum of bad money, and that the nobility here could not obtain the same favour, and make our own half-pence as we used to do. Swift.

HALF-PIKE. n. f. [half and pike.] The small pike carried by officers.

The various ways of paying the salute with the half-pike. Tatler.

HALF-PINT. n. f. [half and pint.] The fourth part of a quart.

One half-pint bottle serves them both to dine;
And is at once their vinegar and wine. Pope.

HALF-SCHOLAR. n. f. One imperfectly learned.

We have many half-scholars now-a-days, and there is much confusion and inconsistency in the notions and opinions of some persons. Watts.

HALF-SEAS over. A proverbial expression for any one far advanced. It is commonly used of one half drunk.

I am half-seas o'er to death;
And since I must die once, I would be loth
To make a double work of what's half finish'd.
Dryden.

HALF-SIGHTED. adj. [half and sight.] Seeing imperfectly; having weak discernment.

The officers of the king's household had need be provident, both for his honour and thrift:
they must look both ways, else they are but half- sighted. Bacon.

HALF-SPHERE. n. f. [half and sphere.] Hemisphere.

Let night grow blacker with thy plots: and
day,
At shewing but thy head forth, start away
From this half-sphere. Ben Jonson.

HALF-STRAINED. adj. [half and strain.] Half-bred; imperfect.

I find I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,
But mungrel-mischievous; for my blood boil'd
To view this brutal act. Dryden.

HALF-SWORD. n. f. Close fight; within half the length of a sword.

I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. Shakespeare.

HALF-WAY. adv. [half and way.] In the middle.

Fearless he sees, who is with virtue crown'd,
The tempest rage, and hears the thunder found;
Ever the same, let fortune smile or frown:
Serenely as he liv'd resigns his breath;
Meets destiny half-way, nor shrinks at death.
Granville.

HALF-WIT. n. f. [half and wit.] A blockhead; a foolish fellow.

Half-wits are fleas, so little and so light,
We scarce could know they live, but that they bite. Dryden.

HALF-WITTED. adj. [from half-wit.] Imperfectly furnished with understanding.

I would rather have trusted the refinement of our language, as to sound, to the judgment of the women than of half-witted poets. Swift.

Jack had passed for a poor, well-meaning, half-witted, crack-brained fellow: people were strangely surprised to find him in such a roguery. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

When half is added to any word noting personal qualities, it commonly notes contempt.

HALIBUT. n. f. A sort of fish. Ains.

HALIDOM. n. f. [halig dom, holy judgment, or halig and dame, for lady.] Our blessed lady. In this it should be halidam.

thin and halituous liquor, much lighter than spirit of wine. Boyle.

HALL. n. f. [hal, Saxon; halle, Dutch.]

1. A court of justice; as Westminster Hall.

O lost too soon in yonder house or hall. Pope.

2. A manor-house so called, because in it were held courts for the tenants.

Captain Sentry, my master's nephew, has taken possession of the hall house, and the whole estate. Addison.

3. The public room of a corporation.

With expedition on the beadle call,
To summon all the company to the hall. Garth.

4. The first large room of a house.

That light we see is burning in my hall. Shaks.
Courtesy is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls
And courts of princes. Milton.

HALLELU'JAH. n. f. [הללויה] Praise ye the Lord. A song of thanksgiving.

Then shall thy saints
Unfained hallelujahs to Thee sing,
Hymns of high praise. Milton.

Singing those devout hymns and heavenly anthems, in which the church militant seems ambitious to emulate the triumphant, and echo back the solemn praises and hallelujahs of the celestial choirs. Boyle.

HALLOO. interj. [The original of this word is controverted: some imagine it corrupted from a lui, to him! others from allons, let us go! and Skinner from haller, to draw.] A word of encouragement when dogs are let loose on their game.

Some popular chief,
More noisy than the rest, but cries halloo,
And, in a trice, the bellowing herd come out.
Dryden.

To HALLOO. v. n. [haler, French.]

1. To cry as after the dogs.

A cry more tuneable
Was never halloo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn.
Shakespeare.

2. To treat as in contempt.

Country folks halloored and houted after me, as the airantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to his enemy. Sidney.

To HA'LLOO. v. a.

1. To encourage with shouts.

If, whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his hunting-horn and pole,
Though gout and age his speed detain,
Old John halloo his hounds again. Prior.

2. To chafe with shouts.

If I fly, Marcius,
Halloo me like a hare. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

3. To call or shout to.

When we have found the king, he that first lights on him
Halloo the other. Shakspeare's King Lear.

To HA'LLOW. v. a. [halgrian, haliz, Saxon, holy.]

1. To consecrate; to make holy.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, it is only to testify that we make them places of publick refort; that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.

It cannot be endured to hear a man profess that he putteth fire to his neighbour's house, but yet so halloweth the same with prayer that he hopeth it shall not burn. Hooker.

Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?

Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,
And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead. Shakspeare.

My prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet pray'rs and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

God from work
Now resting, blest'd and hallow'd the seventh
day,

As resting on that day from all his works,
But not in silence holy kept. Milton.

Then banish'd faith shall once again return,
And vestal fires in hallow'd temples burn. Dryd.

No satyr lurks within this hallow'd ground;
But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound. Granville.

2. To reverence as holy: hallowed be thy name.

HA'LUCINATION. n. f. [hallucinatio, Latin.] Errour; blunder; mistake; folly.

A wasting of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitched disease; but questionless a mere hallucination of the vulgar. Harvey.

This must have been the hallucination of the transcriber, who probably mistook the dash of the I for a T. Addison.

HALM. n. f. [healm, Saxon.] Straw: pronounced hawm: which see.

HA'LO. n. f. A red circle round the sun or moon.

If the hail be a little flatted, the light transmitted may grow so strong, at a little less distance than that of twenty-six degrees, as to form a halo about the sun or moon; which halo, as often as the hailstones are duly figured, may be coloured. Newton.

I saw by reflexion, in a vessel of stagnating water, three halo's, crowns or rings of colours about the sun, like three little rainbows concentric to his body. Newton.

HA'LSENING. adj. [hals, German; hals, Scottish, the neck.] Sounding harshly; inharmonious in the throat or tongue. Not in use.

This halssening horny name hath, as Cornuto in Italy, opened a gap to the scoffs of many. Carew.

HA'LSER. n. f. [from halz, neck, and reel, a rope. It is now in marine pronunciation corrupted to hawser.] A rope less than a cable.

A beechen mast then in the hollow bafe
They hoisted, and with well-wreath'd halfers hoise Chapman.

Their white sails. Chapman.
No halfers need to bind these vessels here,
Nor bearded anchors; for no storms they fear. Dryden.

To HALT. v. n. [healtz, Saxon, lame; healzan, to limp.]

1. To limp; to be lame.

And will she yet debate her eyes
On me, that halt and am mis-shapen thus? Shakspeare.

Thus inborn broils the factions would engage,
Or wars of exil'd heirs, or foreign rage,
'Till halting vengeance overtook our age. Dryd.
Spenser himself affects the obsolete,
And Sidney's verse halts ill on Roman feet. Pope.

2. To stop in a march.

I was forced to halt in this perpendicular march. Addison.

3. To hesitate; to stand dubious.

How long halt ye between two opinions? 1 Kings.

4. To fail; to falter.

A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashion'd to Beatrice. Shakspeare.

All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him. Jeremiah.

HALT. adj. [from the verb.] Lame; crippled.

Bring in hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind. Luke.

HALT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of limping; the manner of limping.

2. [alte, French.] A stop in a march.

The heav'nly bands
Down from a sky of jasper lighted now
In Paradise, and on a hill made halt. Milton.
Scouts each coast light armed scour
Each quarter to descry the distant foe,
Where lodg'd, or whither fled, or if for fight
In motion, or in halt. Milton.

Without any halt they marched between the two armies. Clarendon.

He might have made a halt 'till his foot and artillery came up to him. Clarendon.

HA'ALTER. n. f. [from halt.] He who limps.

HA'ALTER. n. f. [healtrpe, Saxon, from halz, the neck.]

1. A rope to hang malefactors.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;

And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shakspeare.

They were to die by the sword if they stood upon defence, and by the halter if they yielded; wherefore they made choice to die rather as soldiers than as dogs. Hayward.

Where I a drowsy judge, whose dismal note
Disgorgeth halter, as a juggler's throat
Doth ribbands. Cleaveland.

He gets renown, who, to the halter near,
But narrowly escapes, and buys it dear. Dryden.

2. A cord; a strong string.

Whom neither halter binds nor burthens charge. Sandys.

To HA'ALTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

To bind with a cord; to catch in a noose.

He might have employed his time in the frivolous delights of catching moles and haltering frogs. Atterbury.

To HALVE. v. a. [from half, halves.]

To divide into two parts.

HALVES. interj. [from half, halves being the plural.] An expression by which any one lays claim to an equal share.

Have you not seen how the divided dam
Runs to the summons of her hungry lamb?
But when the twin cities halves, she quits the first. Cleaveland.

HA'MLET. n. f. [ham, Saxon, and let, the diminutive termination.] A small village.

Within the self-same lordship, parish, or hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value. Bacon.

He pitch'd upon the plain
His mighty camp, and, when the day return'd,
The country wait'd and the hamlets burn'd. Dryden.

HAMMER. n. f. [hamep, Saxon; hammer, Danish.]

1. The instrument consisting of a long handle and heavy head, with which any thing is forged or driven.

The armourers,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakspeare.

The stuff will not work well with a hammer. Bacon.

It is broken not without many blows, and will break the best anvils and hammers of iron. Bacon.

Every morning he rises fresh to his hammer and his anvil. South.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke.
Dryden's Juvenal.

'Till he had hammer'd out a vast estate. Dryden.

I must pay with hammered money instead of milled. Dryden.

3. To work in the mind; to contrive by intellectual labour: used commonly in contempt.

Wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
To humble down thy husband and thyself? Shakspeare.

He was nobody that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witchcraft, and picture it accordingly. Camden.

Some spirits, by whom they were stirred and guided in the name of the people, hammer'd up the articles. Hayward.

To HA'MMER. v. n.

1. To work; to be busy: in contempt.

H A M

Nor need'st thou much importune me to that,
Whereon this month I have been hammering.

Shakespeare.

I have been studying how to compare
This prison where I live unto the world;
And, for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it; yet I'll hammer on 't.

Shaksp.

2. To be in agitation.

Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand;
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.

Shakespeare.

swinging bed.

Prince Maurice of Nassau, who had been accustomed to hammocks, used them all his life.

Temple.

HA'MPER. n. f. [Supposed by Minsheu to be contracted from hand panier; but hanaperium appears to have been a word long in use, whence banaper, hamper.]
A large basket for carriage.

What powder'd wigs! what flames and darts!
What hamper full of bleeding hearts!

Swift.

TO HA'MPER. v. a. [The original of this word, in its present meaning, is uncertain: Junius observes that hamplins in Teutonic is a quarrel: others imagine that hamper or hanaper, being the treasury to which fines are paid, to hamper, which is commonly applied to the law, means originally to fine.]

1. To shackle; to entangle, as in chains or nets.

O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!
That my free soul may use her wing,
Which now is pinion'd with mortality,
As an entangl'd, hamper'd thing.

Herbert.

We shall find such engines to assail,
And hamper thee, as thou shalt come of force.

Milton.

What was it but a lion hampered in a net!

L'Estrange.

Wear under vizard-masks their talents,
And mother wits before their gallants;
Until they're hamper'd in the noose,
Too fast to dream of breaking loose.

Hudibras.

They hamper and entangle our souls, and hinder their flight upwards.

Tillotson.

five-rails placed on bannisters on the poop and quarterdeck down to the gangway.

Harris.

HA'NCES. [In architecture.] The ends of elliptical arches; and these are the arches of smaller circles than the scheme, or middle part of the arch.

Harris.

The sweep of the arch will not contain above fourteen inches, and perhaps you must cement pieces to many of the courses in the hance, to make them long enough to contain fourteen inches.

Moxon.

HAND. n. f. [hand, hond, Saxon, and in all the Teutonic dialects.]

1. The palm with the fingers; the mem- ber with which we hold or use any in- strument.

Time is the measure of business; money of wares: business is bought at a dear hand, where there is small dispatch.

Bacon.

8. Terms; conditions; rate.

With simplicity admire and accept the mystery; but at no hand by pride, ignorance, interest, or vanity wrest it to ignoble senses.

Taylor.

It is either an ill sign or an ill effect, and therefore at no hand consistent with humility.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

9. Act; deed; external action.

Thou sawest the contradiction between my heart and hand.

King Charles.

10. Labour; act of the hand.

Alnaschar was a very idle fellow, that never would set his hand to any business during his father's life.

Addison.

I rather suspect my own judgment than I can believe a fault to be in that poem, which lay so long under Virgil's correction, and had his last hand put to it.

Addison.

11. Performance.

H A N

Where are these porters,
These lazy knaves? Y'ave made a fine hand!
fellows,

Shakespeare.

There 's a trim rabble let in.

As her majesty hath received great profit, so may she, by a moderate hand, from time to time reap the like.

Bacon.

15. Workmanship; power or act of ma- nufacturing or making.

An intelligent being, coming out of the hands of infinite perfection, with an aversion or even indifference to be reunited with its Author, the source of its utmost felicity, is such a shock and deformity in the beautiful analogy of things, as is not consistent with finite wisdom and perfection.

Cheyne.

16. Manner of acting or performing.

The master saw the madness rise;
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;
And while he heav'n and earth defy'd,
Chang'd his hand, and check'd his pride.

Dryd.

17. Agency; part in action.

God must have set a more than ordinary esteem upon that which David was not thought fit to have an hand in.

South.

Addison.

19. Act of receiving any thing ready to one's hand, when it only waits to be taken.

His power reaches no farther than to compound and divide the materials that are made to his hand; but can do nothing towards the making or destroying one atom of what is already in being.

Locke.

Many, whose greatness and fortune were not made to their hands, had sufficient qualifications and opportunities of rising to these high posts.

Addis.

20. Care; necessity of managing.

Jupiter had a farm a long time upon his hands, for want of a tenant to come up to his price.

L'Estrange.

When a statesman wants a day's defence,
Or envy holds a whole week's war with sense,
Or simple pride for flattery makes demands,
May dunces by dunces be whistled off my hands.

Pope.

21. Discharge of duty.

Let it therefore be required, on both parts, at the hands of the clergy, to be in meanness of estate like the apostles; at the hands of the laity, to be as they who lived under the apostles.

Hooker.

22. Reach; nearness: as, at hand, with- in reach, near, approaching.

Your husband is at hand, I hear his trumpet.

Shakespeare.

Cousins, I hope the days are near at hand,
That chambers will be safe.

Shakespeare.

He is at hand, and Pindarus is come
To do you salutation.

Shakespeare.

The sight of his mind was like some lights off eyes; rather strong at hand than to carry afar off.

Bacon.

Any light thing that moveth, when we find no wind, sheweth a wind at hand.

Bacon.

A very great sound near hand hath stricken many deaf.

Bacon.

It is not probable that any body should effect that at a distance; which, nearer hand, it cannot perform.

Brown.

When mineral or metal is to be generated, nature needs not to have at hand salt, sulphur, and mercury. Boyle.

In my Lucia's absence
Life hangs upon me, and becomes a burden. Addison.

10. To be compact or united: with together.

In the common cause we are all of a piece; we hang together. Dryden.

Your device hangs very well together; but is it not liable to exceptions? Addison.

11. To adhere, unwelcomely or incommodiously.

A cheerful temper shines out in all her conversation, and dissipates those apprehensions which hang on the timorous or the modest, when admitted to her presence. Addison.

Shining landscapes, gilded triumphs, and beautiful faces, disperse that gloominess which is apt to hang upon the mind in those dark disconsolate seasons. Addison.

12. To rest; to reside.

Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid. Shakspeare.

13. To be in suspense; to be in a state of uncertainty.

Thy life shall hang in doubt before thee, and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life. Deuteronomy.

14. To be delayed; to linger.

A noble stroke he lifted high,
Which hung not, but so swift with tempest fell
On the proud crest of Satan. Milton.
She thrice essay'd to speak: her accents hung,
And sputtering dy'd unfinish'd on her tongue. Dryden.

15. To be dependant on.

Oh, how wretched
Is that poor man that hangs on princes' favours!
Great queen! whose name strikes haughty monarchs pale,
On whose just sceptre hangs Europa's scale. Prior.

16. To be fixed or suspended with attention.

Though wood'ring senates hung on all he spoke,
The club must hail him master of the joke. Pope.

19. To decline; to tend down.

His neck obliquely o'er his shoulders hung,
Press'd with the weight of sleep that tames the strong. Pope.

HANGER. n. f. [from hang.] That by which any thing hangs: as, the pot hangers.

HANGER. n. f. [from hang.] A short broad sword.

HANGER-ON. n. f. [from hang.] A dependant; one who eats and drinks without payment.

If the wife or children were absent, their rooms were supplied by the umbræ, or hangers-on. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

They all excused themselves save two, which two he reckoned his friends, and all the rest hangers-on. L'Estrange.

He is a perpetual hanger-on, yet nobody knows how to be without him. Swift.

HANGING. n. f. [from hang him.]

1. Drapery hung or fastened against the walls of rooms by way of ornament.

Like rich hangings in an homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakspeare.
Being informed that his breakfast was ready, he drew towards the door, where the hangings were held up. Clarendon.

Now purple hangings cloath the palace walls,
And sumptuous seats are made in splendid halls. Dryden.

Lucas Van Leyden has infected all Europe with his designs for tapestry, which, by the ignorant, are called ancient hangings. Dryden.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.

2. Any thing that hangs to another. Not in use.

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,
And left me bare to weather. Shakspeare.

HANGING. participial adj. [from hang.]

1. Forboding death by the halter.

Surely, fir, a good favour you have; but that you have a hanging look. Shakspeare.
What Ethiops lips he has!
How full a snout, and what a hanging face! Dryden.

2. Requiring to be punished by the halter: a hanging matter.

HANGMAN. n. f. [from hang and man.]

1. The publick executioner.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows; in his right hand he was painted hold-

Who makes that noise there? who are you?
—Your friend, fir, the hangman: you must be so good, fir, to rise, and be put to death. Shakspeare.

Men do not stand
In so ill case, that God hath with his hand
Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate;

Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate. Donne.

I never knew a critick, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself; as the hangman is generally a worse malefactor than the criminal that suffers by his hand. Addison.

2. A term of reproach, either serious or ludicrous.

One cried, God bless us! and Amen! the other;

As they had seen me with these hangman's hands:
Listening their fear, I could not say Amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakspeare.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. Shakspeare.

HANK. n. f. [from bank, Islandick, a chain or coil of rope.]

1. A skain of thread.

2. A tie; a check; an influence. A low word.

Do we think we have the hank that some gallants have on their trusting merchants, that, upon peril of losing all former scores, he must still go on to supply? Decay of Piety.

TO HANKER. v. n. [from hankeren, Dutch.]

To long importunately; to have an incessant wish: it has commonly after before the thing desired. It is scarcely used but in familiar language.

And now the saints began their reign,
For which th' had yearn'd so long in vain,
And felt such bowel hankering,
To see an empire all of kings. Hudibras.

Among women and children, care is to be taken that they get not a hankering after these juggling astrologers and fortune-tellers. L'Estrange.

The shepherd would be a merchant, and the merchant hankers after something else. L'Estrange.

Do'st thou not hanker after a greater liberty in some things? If not, there's no better sign of a good resolution. Calamy.

The wife is an old coquette, that is always hankering after the diversions of the town. Addison.

The republick that fell under the subjection of the duke of Florence, still retains many hankering after its ancient liberty. Addison.

HAN'T, for has not, or have not.

That roguish ker of your's makes a pretty woman's heart ache: you han't that simper about the mouth for nothing. Addison.

HAP. n. f. [from anbap, in Welsh, is misfortune.]

1. Chance; fortune.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,
As through the flow'ring forest path she fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. Spenser.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Curst be good haps, and curst be they that build
Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair
For all these certain blows the swift shield. Sidney.

To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see their example followed. Hooker.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot still have the like hap. Hooker.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knolles.

A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estrange.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.

Nor feared she among the bands to stray
Of armed men; for often had she seen
The tragick end of many a bloody fray:
Her life had full of haps and hazards been. Fairfax.

HAP-HAZARD. n. f. Chance; accident: perhaps originally hap hazard.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all shun it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by hap-hazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge' sake. Hooker.

We live at hap-hazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at hap-hazard upon trust, and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Locke.

TO HAP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To happen; to have the casual consequence.

It will be too late to gather ships or soldiers, which may need to be presently employed, and whose want may hap to hazard a kingdom. Spenser.

2. To come by chance; to befall casually.

Run you to the citadel,
And tell my lord and lady what hath hap'd. Shakspeare.

In destructions by deluge, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant people. Bacon.

HAPLESS. adj. [from hap.] Unhappy; unfortunate; luckless; unlucky.

Hapless Ægeon, whom the fates have mark'd
To bear th' extremity of dire mishap! Shakspeare.
Here hapless Icarus had found his part,
Had not the father's grief restrain'd his art. Dryden.
Did his hapless passion equal mine,
I would refuse the bliss. Smith.

HAPPLY. adv. [from hap.]

1. Perhaps; peradventure; it may be.

This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply when they have judg'd me fast asleep. Shakspeare.

To warn
Us, haply too secure, of our discharge
From penalty, because from death releas'd
Some days. Milton.

Then haply yet your breast remains untouch'd,
Though that seems strange. Rowe.

Let us now see what conclusions may be found for instruction of any other state, that may haply labour under the like circumstances. Swift.

2. By chance; by accident.

Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest, that swim the ocean stream,
Him haply slumb'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
Deeming some island off, as seamen tell,
Who fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side. Milton.

TO HAPPEN. v. n. [from hap.]

1. To fall out; to chance; to come to pass.

Bring forth your strong reasons, and shew us what shall happen. Isaiah.
Say not I have sinned, and what harm hath happened unto me. Ecclesi.

If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surprized, as if some unexpected thing had happened to thee. Tillotson.

2. To light; to fall by chance.

I have happened on some other accounts relating to mortalities. Graunt.

HAPPILY. adv. [from happy.]

1. Fortunately; luckily; successfully.

I come to wive it wealthily in Padua:

If wealthily, then happily in Padua. Shakspeare.

Preferr'd by conquest, happily o'erthrown,
Falling they rise to be with us made one. Waller.

Neither is it so trivial an undertaking to make a tragedy end happily; for 'tis more difficult to save than kill. Dryden.

2. Addressfully; gracefully; without labour.

Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer

From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. In a state of felicity: as he lives happily.4. By chance; peradventure. In this sense happily is written erroneously for haply.

One thing more I shall wish you to desire of them, who happily may peruse these two treatises. Digby.

HAPPINESS. n. f. [from happy.]

1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.

Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth in it after an eminent sort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hooker.

Oh! happiness of sweet retir'd content,
To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.

Philosophers differ about the chief good or happiness of man. Temple.

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Locke.

2. Good luck; good fortune.

3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.

Certain graces and happineffes, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words. Denham.

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare;
For there's a happineff as well as care. Pope.

Form'd by some rule that guides but not constrains,

And finish'd more through happineff than pains. Pope.

HAPPY. adj. [from hap; as lucky for luck.]

1. In a state of felicity; in a state where the desire is satisfied.

At other end Uran did Strephon lend Her happy making hand. Sidney.

Am I happy in thy news?

—If to have done the thing you gave in charge,
Beget your happiness, be happy then;
For it is done. Shakspeare.

Truth and peace, and love, shall ever shine
About the supreme throne

Of him, t' whose happy making sight alone,
Our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.

Though the presence of imaginary good cannot make us happy, the absence of it may make us miserable. Addison.

2. Lucky; successful; fortunate.

Chymists have been more happy in finding experiments than the causes of them. Boyle.

Yet in this agony his fancy wrought,
And fear supply'd him with this happy thought. Dryden.

3. Addressful; ready.

One gentleman is happy at a reply, and another excels in a rejoinder. Swift.

HAQUETON. n. f. A coat of mail.

Spenser.

HARANGUE. n. f. [harangue, French.]

The original of the French word is much questioned: Menage thinks it a corruption of bearing, English; Junius imagines it to be discours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringo seems to favour. Perhaps it may be from orare, or orationare, orationer, oraner, aranger, haranguer.] A speech; a popular oration.

Gray-headed men, and grave, with warriors
mix'd,

Assemble, and harangues are heard, but soon
In factious opposition. Milton.

Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues, against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.

Many preachers neglect method in their harangues. Watts.

To HARANGUE. v. n. [haranguer, Fr.]

To make a speech; to pronounce an oration.

To HARANGUE. v. a. To address by an oration: as, he harangued the troops.HARANGUER. n. f. [from harangue.]

An orator; a publick speaker: generally with some mixture of contempt.

To HARASS. v. a. [harasser, French, from harasse, a heavy buckler, according to Du Cange.] To weary; to fatigue; to tire with labour and uneasiness.

These troops came to the army but the day before, harassed with a long and wearisome march. Bacon.

Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain;
The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching,

And harass'd out with duty. Dryden.

Nature oppress'd, and harass'd out with care,
Sinks down to rest. Addison.

Out increases the force of the verb.

HA'RASS. n. f. [from the verb.] Waste; disturbance.

The men of Judah, to prevent
The harass of their land, beset me round. Milton.

HA'RBINGER. n. f. [herberger, Dutch, one who goes to provide lodgings or an harbour for those that follow.] A fore-runner; a precursor.

Make all our trumpets speak, give them all
breath,

Those clam'rous harbingers of blood and death. Shakspeare.

I'll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful
The hearing of my wife with your approach. Shak.

Sin, and her shadow death, and misery,
Death's harbinger. Milton.

And now of love they treat, 'till th' evening star,

Love's harbinger, appear'd. Milton.

Before him a great prophet, to proclaim
His coming, is sent harbinger, who all Invites. Milton.

As Ormond's harbinger to you they run;
For Venus is the promise of the Sun. Dryden.

HA'RBOUR. n. f. [herberge, French; herberg, Dutch; albergo, Italian.]

1. A lodging; a place of entertainment.

For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd;

They are sent by me,
That they should harbour where their lord would be. Shakspeare.

Southwards they bent their flight,
And harbour'd in a hollow rock at night:
Next morn they rose, and set up ev'ry sail;
The wind was fair, but blew a mackrel gale. Dryden.

Let me be grateful; but let far from me
Be fawning cringe, and false dissembling look,
And servile flattery, that harbours oft
In courts and gilded roofs. Philips.

To HA'RBOUR. v. a.

1. To entertain; to permit to reside.

My lady bids me tell you, that though she har-bours you as her uncle, she's nothing allied to your disorders. Shakspeare.

Knave I know, which in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,

Than twenty silky ducking observants. Shakspeare.

Let not your gentle breast harbour one thought
Of outrage from the king. Rowe.

We owe this old house the same kind of gratitude that we do to an old friend who harbours us in his declining condition, nay even in his last extremities. Pope.

How people, so greatly warmed with a sense of liberty, should be capable of harbouring such weak superstition; and that so much bravery and so much folly can inhabit the same breasts. Pope.

2. To shelter; to secure.

Harbour yourself this night in this castle: this country is very dangerous for murdering thieves to trust a sleeping life among them. Sidney.

HA'BOURAGE. n. f. [herbergage, French, from harbour.] Shelter; entertainment.

Let in us, your king, whose labour'd spirits,
Forewearing in this action of swift speed,

Crave harbourage within your city walls. Shakspeare.

Set folks together by the ears. Hudibras.

'Tis hard to say if Clymens were mov'd
More by his pray'r, whom she so dearly lov'd,

Or more with fury fix'd. Dryden.

As for the hard words, which I was obliged to use, they are either terms of art, or such as I substituted in place of others that were too
low. Arbutnot.

3. Difficult of accomplishment; full of difficulties.

Is any thing too hard for the Lord? Genesis.

As lords a spacious world, t' our native heav'n Little inferior, by my adventure hard

With peril great achiev'd. Milton.

Long is the way

And hard, that out of hell leads up to light:
Our prison strong. Milton.

He now discern'd he was wholly to be on the defensive, and that was like to be a very hard part too. Clarendon.

Nervous and tendinous parts have worse symptoms, and are harder of cure, than fleshy ones. Wifensda.

All the wide-extended sky,

And all the harmonious worlds on high,

And Virgil's sacred work shall dye.

Cowley.

God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we must bring it home piece-meal.

Locke.

2. Having sounds concordant to each other; musical; symphonious.

Thoughts that voluntary move harmonious numbers.

Milton.

The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us: they who lived with him, thought it musical.

Dryden.

HARMONIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]

1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.

Not chaos-like, together crush'd and bruis'd;
But as the world, harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree.
Pope.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom.
Bentley.

2. Musically; with concord of sounds.

If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not to worship the instrument, but him that makes the music.
Stillingfleet.

HARMO'NIOSNESS. n. f. [from harmonious.] Proportion; musicalness.

To HAR'MONIZE. v. a. [from harmony.] To adjust in fit proportions; to make musical.

Through the sweet musick which his harp did make,
Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease. Spens.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton.

Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire;
The muses sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre. Dryd.

2. A constellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies

The shell, as lightest, first begins to rise;
Thus when sweet Orpheus struck, to lift'ning rocks
He sentes gave, and ears to wither'd oaks.
Greech.

To HARP. v. n. [harper, French, from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. Revelations.

Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped-or harped? 1 Cor.

The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to heav'n's new-born beir. Milton.

You harp a little too much upon one string.
Collier.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear. Shakspeare.

For thy good caution, thanks:
Thou'lt harp'd my fear aright. Shakspeare.
He seems

Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. Shakspeare.

HARPER. n. f. [from harp.] A player on the harp.

Never will I trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue;
Nor woo in rhyme, like a blind harper's song.
Shakspeare.

I'm the god of the harp: stop my fairest:—in vain;
Nor the harp, nor the harper, could fetch her again. Tickell.

HAR'PING Iron. n. f. [from harpago, Latin.] A bearded dart with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go,
Struck with a harping iron the younger foe:
Who, when he felt his side so rudely goar'd,
Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd.
Waller.

HARPONE'ER. n. f. [harponeur, French, from harpoon.] He that throws the harpoon in whalefishing.

HARPO'ON. n. f. [harpon, French.] A harping iron.

HARPSICORD. n. f. A musical instrument, strung with wire, and played by striking keys.

HAR'PY. n. f. [harpyia, Latin; harpie, French.]

1. The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures, which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured. Raleigh.

That an harpy is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle.
Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch; an extortioner.

I will do you any ambassage to the pigmies, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy. Shakspeare.

HAR'QUEBUSS. n. f. [See ARQUEBUSE.] A hand-gun.

HAR'QUEBUSSIER. n. f. [from harquebuss.] One armed with a harquebuss.

Twenty thousand nimble harquebussiers were ranged in length, and but five in a rank. Knolles.

HARRIDA'N. n. f. [corrupted from harridelle, Fr. a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed strumpet.

She just endur'd the winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk:
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk.
Swift.

HAR'ROW. n. f. [charroue, French; hærcke, German, a rake.] A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods, and throw the earth over the seed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows. Dryden.

Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down. Mortim.

To HAR'ROW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with earth by the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,

Not only thy peason, but also thy beans. Tupper.

2. To break with the harrow.

Can'st thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee? Job.

Let the Volscians
Plow Rome, and harrow Italy. Shakspeare.

3. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young
blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres. Shakspeare.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack. Rowe.

4. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scottish is the same thing.

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners: and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather. Bacon.

5. To invade; to harass with incursions. [from heprian, Saxon.] Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy frowe,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre. Fairy Queen.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day
Did'st make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, did'st bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenser.

6. To disturb; to put into commotion.
[This should rather be written harry,
harer, French.]

Most like; it harrows me with fear and wonder.
Shakspeare.

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and care.
Milton.

HARROW. interj. An exclamation of sudden distress. Now out of use.

Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light,
To see my lord so deadly damnify'd? Spenser.

HARROWER. n. f. [from harrow.]

1. He who harrows.

2. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth.

TO HARRY. v. a. [harer, French.]

1. To tease; to hare; to ruffle.

Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.

—I repent me much

That I so harried him. Shakspeare.

2. In Scotland it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress: as, one harried a nest; that is, he took the young away: as also, he harried me out of house and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See TO HAR- ROW.

HARSH. adj. [hervische, Germ. Skinner.]

1. Austere; roughly four.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine:
So age's gravity may seem severe,

But nothing harsh or bitter ought to appear. Danb.
Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh and salt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes. Locke.

The same defect of heat which gives a fierce-ness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language, which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder countries. Swift.

2. Rough to the ear.

A name unmusical to Volscian ears,
And harsh in sound to thine. Shakspeare.

Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;
But satire needs not that, and wit will shine
Through the harsh cadence of a rugged line.

Dryden.

The unnecessary consonants made their spelling tedious, and their pronunciation harsh. Dryden.

Thy lord commands thee now

With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,

To servile duties. Dryden.

3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.

He was a wise man and an eloquent; but in his nature harsh and haughty. Bacon.

Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Taylor.

No harsh reflection let remembrance raise;
Forbear to mention what thou can'st not praise.

Prior.

A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but, for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harsh word proceed from him.

Atterbury.

4. Rugged to the touch; rough.

Black feels as if you were feeling needles points, or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth.

Boyle.

5. Unpleasing; rigorous.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher
charm'd. Dryden.

HARSHLY. adv. [from harsh.]

VOL. I.

1. Sourly; austere to the palate, as unripe fruit.

2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripe.

'Till, like ripe fruit, thou drop Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton.

3. Severely; morosely; crabbedly.

I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature. Addison.

4. Unpleasantly to the ear.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day;

I tell you, 'twould sound harshly in her ears.

Shakspeare.

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dang'rous lunacy. Shaksp.

The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryd.

HARSHNESS. n. f. [from harsh.]

1. Sourness; austere taste.

Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard:
the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness. Bacon.

2. Roughness to the ear.

Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.

Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound. Dryden.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;

The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

3. Ruggedness to the touch.

Harshness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon.

4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.

Thy tender hefted nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine

Do comfort and not burn. Shakspeare.

HART. n. f. [heort, Saxon.] A he deer;
the male of the roe.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakspeare.

The deer

And fearful harts do wander every where

Amidst the dogs. May's Virgil.

HART-ROYAL. n. f. A plant. A species of buckthorn plantain.

HARTSHORN. n. f. A drug.

Hartshorn is a drug that comes into use many ways, and under many forms. What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorific, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies:
It is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Hill.

Ramose concretions of the volatile salts are ob-servable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn. Woodw.

HARTSHORN. n. f. An herb. Ainsw.

HARTSTONGUE. n. f. [lingua cervina,
Latin.] A plant.

It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe.

Miller.

Hartstongue is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Mortimer.

HARTWORT. n. f. [tordylium, Latin.]

An umbelliferous plant. Miller.

HARVEST. n. f. [hæpfer, Saxon.]

1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.

As it ebbs, the seedsmen
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakspeare.
With harvest work he is worse than in spring.
L'Estrange.

2. The corn ripened, gathered, and innd.

From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd.
Shakspeare.

When the father is too fondly kind,
Such seed he sows, such harvest shall he find.

Dryden.

3. The product of labour.

Let us the harvest of our labour eat;
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden.

HARVEST-HOME. n. f.

1. The song which the reapers sing at the feast made for having innd the harvest.

Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;

Come, my boys, come,

Come, my boys, come,

And merrily roar out harvest-home. Dryden.

2. The time of gathering harvest.

At harvest-home, and on the shearing day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay.

Dryden.

3. The opportunity of gathering treasure.

His wife I will use as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer; and there's my harvest-home. Shaksp.

HARVEST-LORD. n. f. The head reaper at the harvest.

Grant harvest-lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tupper.

HARVESTER. n. f. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.

HARVESTMAN. n. f. [harvest and man.]

A labourer in harvest.

Like to a harvest-man that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakspeare.

TO HASH. v. n. [hacher, French.] To mince; to chop into small pieces and mingle.

He rais'd his arm
Above his head, and rain'd a storm
Of blows so terrible and thick,

As if he meant to hash her quick. Hudibras.

What have they to complain of but too great variety, though some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order and politeness; but hashed up in haste? Garth.

HASK. n. f. This seems to signify a case or habitation made of rushes or flags. Obsolete.

Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,

Established hath his steeds in lowly lay,

And taken up his inn in fishes hask. Spenser.

HASLET. } n. f. [hasla, Islandick, a

HARSLET. } bundle; hasterel, hastereau, hastier, French.] The heart, liver, and lights, of a hog, with the windpipe, and part of the throat to it.

HASP. n. f. [hæp, Saxon, whence in some provinces it is yet called hapse.] A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.

Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Mortimer.

TO HASP. v. n. [from the noun.] To shut with a hasp.

HAS-SOCK. n. f. [hasack, Germ.] Skinner.

1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church.

He found his parishioners very irregular: and in order to make them kneel, and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book. Addison.

2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet, on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that hassock and hask are the same.

HAST. The second person singular of have.

HASTE. n. f. [haste, Fr. haste, Dut.]

1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.

Spare him, death!
But O, thou wilt not, can'st not spare!
Haste hath never time to hear. Crahan.
Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,
Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;
But as the present, so the last age writ;
In both we find like negligence and wit.

In as much haste, as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden.

The wretched father running to their aid
With pious haste, but vain, they next invade. Dryden.

2. Passion; vehemence.

I laid in my haste all men are liars. Psalms.

To HASTE. } v. n. [haster, French;
To HA'STEN. } hasten, Dutch.]

1. To make haste; to be in a hurry; to be busy; to be speedy.

I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee. Jeremiah.

2. To move with swiftness, eagerness, or hurry.

'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you to? Shakspeare.

They were troubled and hasted away. Psalms.
All those things are pass'd away like a shadow,
and as a post that hasted by. Wisdom.
Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,
Like mortal life to meet eternity. Denham.

These rites perform'd, the prince, without delay,
Hastes to the nether world, his destin'd way. Dryden.

To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste
Of sandy Pyle, the royal youth shall haste. Pope.
Soon as the sun awakes, the sprightly court
Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport. Prior.

To HASTE. } v. a. To push forward;
To HA'STEN. } to urge on; to precipitate; to drive a swifter pace.

Let it be so hasted, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. Shakspeare.

All hopes of succour from your arms are past;
To save us now, you must our ruin haste. Dryden.
Each sees his lamp with diff'rent lustre crown'd;
Each knows his course with diff'rent periods bound;
And in his passage through the liquid space,
Nor hastens nor retards his neighbour's race. Prior.

HA'STENER. n. f. [from hasten.] One that hastens or hurries.

HA'STILY. adv. [from hasty.]

1. In a hurry; speedily; nimbly; quickly.

A voice that called loud and clear,
Come hither, hither, O come hastily! Spenser.
If your grace incline that we should live,
You must not, sir, too hastily forgive. Waller.
The next to danger hot pursu'd by fate,
Half cloth'd, half naked, hastily retire. Dryden.

2. Rashly; precipitately.

Without considering consequences, we hastily engaged in a war which hath cost us sixty millions. Swift.

3. Passionately; with vehemence.

HA'STINESS. n. f. [from hasty.]

1. Haste; speed.

2. Hurry; precipitation.

A fellow being out of breath, or seeming to be for haste, with humble hastiness told Basilus. Sidney.

3. Rash eagerness.

The turns of his verse, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers, and his gravity, I have as far imitated as the poverty of our language, and the hastiness of my performance, would allow. Dryden.

There is most just cause to fear, lest our hastiness to embrace a thing of so perilous consequence, should cause posterity to feel those evils. Hooker.

4. Angry testiness; passionate vehemence.
HA'STINGS. n. f. [from hasty.] Peas that come early.

The large white and green hastings are not to be set till the cold is over. Mortimer.

HA'STY. adj. [hastif, French, from haste; haestig, Dutch.]

1. Quick; speedy.

Is this the counsel that we two have shar'd,
The sisters vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty footed time
For parting us! Shakspeare.

2. Passionate; vehement.

He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding; but he that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly. Proverbs.

3. Rash; precipitate.

Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words?
There is more hope of a fool than of him. Prov.
Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God. Eccles.

4. Early ripe.

Beauty shall be a fading flower, and as the hasty fruit before the summer. Isaiah.

HA'STY-PUDDING. n. f. A pudding made of milk and flower, boiled quick together; as also of oatmeal and water boiled together.

Sure hasty-pudding is thy chiefest dish,
With bullock's liver or some stinking fish. Dorset.

HAT. n. f. [hæz, Saxon; hatt, Germ.] A cover for the head.

She's as big as he is; and there's her thrum hat, and her muffler too. Shakspeare.

Out of mere ambition you have made

Your holy hat be stamp on the king's coin. Shak.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero. Bacon.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
And with soft words his drooping spirits cheer'd;
His hat adorn'd with wings disclos'd the god,
And in his hand he bore the sleep-compelling rod. Dryden.

HA'TBAND. n. f. [hat and band.] A string tied round the hat.

They had hats of blue velvet, with fine plumes of divers colours, set round like hatbands. Bacon.

Room for the noble gladiator! see

His coat and hatband shew his quality. Dryden.

HA'TCASE. n. f. [hat and case.] A slight box for a hat.

I might mention a hatcase, which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain. Addison.

To HATCH. v. a. [hecken, German, as Skinner thinks, from beghen, eghen, æg, egg, Saxon.]

1. To produce young from eggs by the warmth of incubation.

He kindly spreads his spacious wing,
And hatches plenty for th' ensuing spring. Denham.

The tepid caves, and fens and shores,
Their brood as numerous hatch from th' eggs,
that soon

Bursting with kindly rapture, forth disclos'd Their callow young. Milton.

2. To quicken the egg by incubation.

When they have laid such a number of eggs as they can conveniently cover and hatch, they give over, and begin to sit. Ray.

Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth, 'till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

3. To produce by precedent action.

Which thing they very well know, and, I doubt not, will easily confess, who live to their great both toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Arians are renewed by them; who, to hatch their heresy, have chosen those churches as fittest nests, where Athanasius's creed is not heard. Hooker.

4. To form by meditation; to contrive.

He was a man harmless and faithful, and one who never hatched any hopes prejudicial to the king, but always intended his safety and honour. Hayward.

5. [from hacher, French, to cut.] To shade by lines in drawing or graving.

Who first shall wound, through others arms,
his blood appearing fresh,

Shall win this sword, silver'd and hatcht. Chapman.

Such as Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brags; and such again
As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,

Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree

On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears
To his experienc'd tongue. Shakspeare.

Those tender hairs, and those hatching strokes of the pencil, which make a kind of minced meat in painting, are never able to deceive the fight. Dryden.

To HATCH. v. n.

1. To be in a state of growing quick.

He observed circumstances in eggs, whilst they were hatching, which varied. Boyle.

2. To be in a state of advance toward effect.

HATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A brood excluded from the egg.

2. The act of exclusion from the egg.

3. Disclosure; discovery.

Something's in his soul,
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
And, I do doubt, the hatch and the disclosure
Will be some danger. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

4. [hæca, Saxon; hecke, Dutch, a bolt.]

A half door; a door with opening over it; perhaps from hacher, to cut, as a hatch is part of a door cut in two.

Something about, a little from the right,
In at the window, or else o'er the hatch. Shakspeare.

5. [In the plural.] The doors or openings by which they descend from one deck or floor of a ship to another.

To the king's ship, invisible as thou art,
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep

Under the hatches. Shakspeare's Tempest.

There he's hid;

The mariners all under hatches stow'd. Shakspeare.

So seas, impell'd by winds with added pow'r,
Assault the sides, and o'er the hatches tow'r. Dryden.

A ship was fasten'd to the shore;

The plank was ready laid for safe ascent,

For shelter there the trembling shadow bent,

And skipp'd and skulk'd, and under hatches went. Dryden.

6. To be under HATCHES. To be in a state of ignominy, poverty, or depression.

He assures us how this fatherhood continued its course, 'till the captivity in Egypt, and then the poor fatherhood was under hatches. Locke.

7. Hatches. Floodgates. Ainsworth.

To HA'TCHEL. v. a. [hachelen, Germ.]

To beat flax so as to separate the fibrous from the brittle part.

1. Chance; accident; fortuitous hap.

I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shaksp.
I will upon all hazards well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well.
Shakespeare.

Where the mind does not perceive connection, there men's opinions are not the product of judgment, but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction.
Locke.

2. Danger; chance of danger.

We are bound to yield unto our Creator, the Father of all mercy, eternal thanks, for that he hath delivered his law unto the world; a law wherein so many things are laid open, as a light which otherwise would have been buried in darkness, not without the hazard, or rather not with the hazard, but with the certain loss of thousands of souls, most undoubtedly now saved.
Hooker.

The hazard I have run to see you here, should inform you that I love not at a common rate.
Dryden.

Men are led on from one stage of life to another in a condition of the utmost hazard, and yet without the least apprehension of their danger.

Unrestrained; violent; ungovernable;
resolute to run his own way; as a horse whose head cannot be held in.

An example, for headstrong and inconsiderate zeal, no less fearful than Achitophel for proud and irreligious wisdom.

Hooker.

How now, my headstrong! where have you been gadding?

—Where I have learnt me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition.

Shakspeare.

But such a headstrong potent fault it is,
That it but mocks reproof.

Shakspeare.

He ill aspires to rule
Cities of men or headstrong multitudes, Subject himself to anarchy within.

Milton.

There's no opposing the torrent of a headstrong multitude.

L'Estrange.

Now let the headstrong boy my will controul:
Virtue's no slave of man; no sex confines the soul:

I, for myself, th' imperial seat will gain,
And he shall wait my leisure for his reign.

Dryd.

Your father's folly took a headstrong course;
But I'll rule yours, and teach you love by force.

Dryden.

Can we forget how the mad headstrong rout
Defy'd their prince to arms, nor made account
Of faith or duty, or allegiance sworn?

Philips.

I'll try if yet I can reduce to reason

This headstrong youth, and make him spurn at Cato.

Addison.

You'll be both judge and party: I am sorry thou discoverest so much of thy headstrong humour.

Arbuthnot.

HE'ADWORKMAN. n. f. [head, work, and man.] The foreman, or chief servant over the rest. Properly two words.

mechanick, the headworkman, to prepare furnace and stamps?

Swift.

HE'ADY. adj. [from head.]1. Rash; precipitate; hasty; violent;
ungovernable; hurried on with passion.

Take pity of your town and of your people,
While yet the cool and temp'rate wind of grace

O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of heady murder, spoil, and villany. Shakspeare.

I am advised what I say:

Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,
Nor, heady rash, provok'd with raging ire;
Albeit my wrongs might make one wifer mad.

Shakspeare.

I'll forbear,

And am fall'n out with my more heady will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
For the found man.

Shakspeare.

Wives, the readiest helps
To betray heady husbands, rob the easy.

Ben Jonson.

Those only are regarded who are true to their party; and all the talent required is to be hot, to be heady, to be violent on one side or other.

Temple.

Men, naturally warm and heady, are transported with the greatest flush of good-nature.

Addison.

2. Apt to affect the head.

I was entertained with a sort of wine which was very heady, but otherwise seemed to be sack.

Boyle.

Since hearty beef and mutton will not do,
Here's julip-dance, ptisan of song and show:
Give you strong sense, the liquor is too heady;
You're come to farce, that's asses milk, already.

Dryden.

Flow, Wellsted! flow, like thine inspirer, beer;
Heady, not strong; and foaming, though not full.

Pope.

3. Violent; impetuous.

Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current scow'ring faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat.

Shakspeare.

To HEAL. v. a. [hælan, Gothick; hælan, Saxon; heelen, Dutch.]1. To cure a person; to restore from hurt or sickness.

I will restore health, and heal thee of thy wounds.

Jeremiah.

Who would not believe that our Saviour healed
the sick, and raised the dead, when it was published by those who themselves often did the same miracles?

Addison.

Physicians, by just observations, grow up to a honourable degree of skill in the art of healing.

Watts.

2. To cure a wound or distemper.

My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me, and art so far from my health, and from the words of my complaint? Psalms.

4. Wish of happiness used in drinking.

Come, love and health to all;

I drink to th' general joy of the whole table.

Shakspeare.

He asked leave to begin two healths; the first was to the king's mistress, and the second to his wife. Howel.

For peace at home, and for the public wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl to Cæsar's health. Dryd.

HEALTHFUL. adj. [health and full.]

1. Free from sickness.

Adam knew no disease, so long as temperance from the forbidden fruit secured him: Nature was his physician, and innocence and abstinence would have kept him healthful to immortality. South.

2. Well disposed.

Such an exploit have I in hand,
Had you an healthful ear to hear it. Shakspeare.

3. Wholesome; salubrious.

Many good and healthful airs do appear by habitation and proofs, that differ not in smell from other airs. Bacon.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness; worthily since they God's image did not reverence in themselves. Milton.

Our healthful food the stomach labours thus,
At first embracing what it straight doth crush. Dryden.

Lies slumb'ring sullen in the white abyss. Thomson.

TO HEAR. v. n. [hýnan, Saxon; hooren, Dutch.]

1. To enjoy the sense by which sounds are distinguished.

Sound is nothing but a certain modulation of the external air, which, being gathered by the external ear, beats, as is supposed, upon the membrana tympani, which moves the four little bones in the tympanum: in like manner as it is beat by the external air, these little bones move the internal air which is in the tympanum and vestibulum; which internal air makes an impression upon the auditory nerve in the labyrinth and cochlea, according as it is moved by the little bones in the tympanum: so that, according to the various reflexions of the external air, the internal air makes various impressions upon the auditory nerve, the immediate organ of hearing; and these different impressions represent different sounds. Quincy.

The object of hearing is sound, whose variety is so great, that it brings in admirable store of intelligence. Holder.

Princes cannot see far with their own eyes,
nor hear with their own ears. Temple.

2. To listen; to hearken: as, he heard with great attention.

So spake our mother Eve, and Adam heard,
Well-pleas'd, but answer'd not. Milton.

dismayed at the seeing of it. Hosea.

Hear of such a crime
As tragick poets, since the birth of time, Ne'er feign'd. Tate's Juvenal.

This, of eldest parents, leaves us more in the dark, who, by divine institution, has a right to civil power, than those who never heard any thing at all of heir or descent. Locke.

TO HEAR. v. n.

1. To perceive by the ear.

The trumpeters and singers were as one sound to be heard in praising the Lord. 2 Chronicles.
And sure he heard me, but he would not hear. Dryden.

2. To give an audience, or allowance to speak.

Infallible? Milton.

7. To acknowledge a title. A Latin phrase.

Or hear'st thou rather pure ethereal stream,
Whose fountain who shall tell? Milton.
Hear'st thou submissive, but a lowly birth? Prior.

HEARD signifies a keeper, and is sometimes initial; as heard-beard, a glorious keeper: sometimes final, as cyneheard, a royal keeper. Gilson's Camden. It is now written herd: as, cowherd, a cow-keeper; hýnd, Saxon.

HEARER. n. f. [from hear.]

Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop;
but a good word maketh it glad. Proverbs.
Ye greatly rejoice; though now for a season ye are in heaviness, through manifold temptations. Peter.

3. Inaptitude to motion or thought; sluggishness; torpidness; dulness of spirit; languidness; languor.

Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight. Shakspeare.
What means this heaviness that hangs upon me?
This lethargy that creeps through all my senses? Aldison.

He would not violate that sweet recess,
And found besides a welcome heaviness,
Which seiz'd his eyes. Dryden.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbuthnot.

4. Oppression; crush; affliction: as, the heaviness of taxes.

5. Deepness or richness of soil.

As Alexandria exported many commodities, so it received some, which, by reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce; such as metals, wood, and pitch. Arbuthnot.

HE'AVY. adj. [heaviz, Saxon.]

1. Weighty; ponderous; tending strongly to the centre; contrary to light.

Mersennus tells us, that a little child, with an engine of an hundred double pulleys, might move this earth, though it were much heavier than it is. Wilkins.

2. Sorrowful; dejected; depressed.

Let me not be light;
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband. Shakspeare.

3. Grievous; oppressive; afflictive.

Menelaus bore an heavy hand over the citizens, having a malicious mind. 2 Mac.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard. Shakspeare.

If the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make. Shakspeare.

Pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakspeare.

Chartres, at the levee,
Tells with a sneer the tyding heavy. Swift.

4. Wanting alacrity; wanting briskness of appearance.

My heavy eyes, you say, confess
A heart to love and grief inclin'd. Prior.

5. Wanting spirit or rapidity of sentiment; unanimated.

A work was to be done, a heavy writer to be encouraged, and accordingly many thousand copies were bespoke. Swift.

6. Wanting activity; indolent; lazy.

Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd;
But of a heavy, dull, degenerate mind. Dryden.

7. Drowsy; dull; torpid.

Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep. Luke.

8. Slow; sluggish.

But let thy spiders that suck up thy venom,
And heavy gaited toads lie in their way. Shaksp.

9. Stupid; foolish.

This heavy headed revel, east and west
Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations. Shakspeare.

I would not be accounted so base minded, or heavy headed, that I will confess that any of them is for valour, power, or fortune better than myself. Knolles.

10. Burdensome; troublesome; tedious.

I put into thy hands what has been the diversion of some of my idle and heavy hours. Locke.

When alone, your time will not lie heavy upon your hands for want of some trifling amusement. Swift.

11. Loaded; incumbered; burdened.

Hearing that there were forces coming against him, and not willing that they should find his men heavy and laden with booty, he returned unto Scotland. Bacon's Henry VII.

12. Not easily digested; not light to the stomach.

Such preparations as retain the oil or fat, are most heavy to the stomach, which makes baked meat hard of digestion. Arbuthnot.

13. Rich in soil; fertile: as, heavy lands.

14. Deep; cumbersome: as, heavy roads.

HE'AVY. adv. As an adverb it is only used in composition; heavily.

Your carriages were heavy laden; they are a burden to the weary beast. Isaiah.

Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Matthew.

HE'BDOMAD. n. f. [hebdomas, Latin.]

A week; a space of seven days.

Computing by the medical month, the first hebdomad or septenary consists of six days, seventeen hours and a half. Brown.

HEBDO'MADAL. } adj. [from hebdomas,

HEBDO'MADARY. } Latin.] Weekly; consisting of seven days.

As for hebdomadal periods, or weeks, in regard of their sabbaths, they were observed by the Hebrews. Brown.

To HEBETATE. v. a. [hebeto, Latin;
hebeter, French.] To dull; to blunt;
to stupify.

The eye, especially if hebetated, might cause
the same perception. Harvey on Consumptions.

Beef may confer a robustness on the limbs of my son, but will hebetate and clog his intellects.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

HEBETATION. n. f. [from hebetate.]

1. The act of dulling.

2. The state of being dulled.

HE'BETUDE. n. f. [hebetudo, Latin.]

Dulness; obtuseness; bluntness.

The pestilent seminaries, according to their grossness or subtilty, activity or hebetude, cause more or less truculent plagues. Harvey.

HE'BRAISM. n. f. [hebraisme, French;
hebraismus, Latin.] A Hebrew idiom.

Milton has infused a great many latinisms, as well as græcisms, and sometimes hebraisms, into his poem. Spectator.

HE'BRAIST. n. f. [hebraeus, Latin.] A man skilled in Hebrew.

HE'BRICIAN. n. f. [from Hebrew.] One skilful in Hebrew.

The words are more properly taken for the air or ether than the heavens, as the best hebrician understand them. Raleigh.

The nature of the hebrew verse, as the meanest
hebrician knoweth, consists of uneven feet.
Peachment.

HE'CATOMB. n. f. [hecatombe, French;
ἑκατόμβη.] A sacrifice of a hundred cattle.

In rich mens homes

I bid kill some beasts, but no hecatombs;
None starve, none surfeit so. Donne.

One of these three is a whole hecatomb,
And therefore only one of them shall die. Dryden.
Her triumphant sons in war succeed,
And slaughter'd hecatombs around him bleed. Aldison.

HE'CTICAL. } adj. [hectique, French,

HE'CTICK. } from ἥκω.]

1. Habitual; constitutional.

This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual, and ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fullness from obstruction. It is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vessels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot. Quincy.

A hectick fever hath got hold

Of the whole substance, not to be controul'd.
Donne.

2. Troubled with a morbid heat.

No hectick student fears the gentle maid.

Taylor.

HE'CTICK. n. f. A hectick fever.

Like the hectick in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

HE'CTOR. n. f. [from the name of Hecktor, the great Homeric warrior.] A bully;
a blustering, turbulent, perversacious, noisy fellow.

H E D

Those usurping hectors, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lye a blot not to be washed out but by blood. South.

We'll take one cooling cup of nectar,
And drink to this celestial hector. Prior.

TO HECTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To threaten; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.

They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be hectored out of it. Gov. of Tongue.

The weak low spirit fortune makes her slave;
But she's a drudge, when hector'd by the brave. Dryden.

An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, hectoring his servants, and calling for supper. Arbutnot.

TO HECTOR. v. n. To play the bully; to bluster.

They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and hectoring, others scolding and reviling. Stillingfleet.

One would think the hectoring, the storming, the fullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured. Spektor.

Don Carlos made her chief director,
That she might o'er the servants hector. Swift.

HEDERA'CEOUS. adj. [hederaceus, Latin.] Producing ivy. Dict.

HEDGE. n. f. [hegge, Saxon.] A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes, or woven twigs.

It is a good wood for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stakes in hedges. Mortimer.

The gardens unfold variety of colours to the eye every morning, and the hedges breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.

Through the verdant maze
Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomp.

HEDGE, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile, of the lowest class; perhaps from a hedge, or hedge-born man, a man without any known place of birth.

There are five in the first shew: the pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy. Shakspeare.

The clergy do much better than a little hedge, contemptible, illiterate vicar can be presumed to do. Swift.

A person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-priest in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.

TO HEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To enclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing.

Hedge thy possession about with thorns. Ecclus.
Those alleys must be hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon.

2. To obstruct.

I will hedge up thy way with thorns. Heser.

3. To encircle for defence.

England, hedg'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes. Shakspeare.

There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would. Shakspeare.

4. To shut up within an enclosure.

It must not be paid and exported in ready money; so says our law; but that is a law to hedge in the cuckoo, and serves for no purpose: for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange? Locke.

5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but hedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a hedge.

H E D

You forget yourself

To hedge me in. Shakspeare. Jul. Cæs.

When I was hasty, thou delay'd'st me longer:
I pr'ythee, let me hedge one moment more Into thy promise; for thy life preserv'd. Dryden.

When you are sent on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own. Swift.

TO HEDGE. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.

I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shakspeare.

HEDGE-BORN. adj. [hedge and born.] Of no known birth; meanly born.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this fort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain,
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shakspeare.

HEDGE-CREEPER. n. f. [hedge and creep.] One that skulks under hedges for bad purposes.

HEDGE-FUMITORY. n. f. A plant; fumaria sepium. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HOG. n. f. [hedge and hog; crinaceus.] 1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in a hedge.

Like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their prickles at my foot-fall. Shakspeare.

Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience, the collyrium of Albertus; that is to make one see in the dark: yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brazen vessel, effect. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole under part, head, belly and legs, within his thickest of prickles. Ray.

2. A term of reproach.

Did'st thou not kill this king?
—I grant ye.
—E'st grant me, hedge-hog? Shakspeare.

3. A plant; trefoil; medica echinata. Ainsworth.

4. The globe-fish; orbis echinatus. Ainsw.

HEDGE-HYSSOP. n. f. [hedge and hyssop.] A species of willowwort; gratiola.

Hedge-hyssop is a purging medicine, and a very rough one: externally it is said to be a vulnerary. Hill's Mat. Medica.

HEDGE-MUSTARD. n. f. A plant.

HEDGE-NETTLE. n. f. A plant; galeopsia. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-NOTE. n. f. [hedge and note.] A word of contempt for low writing.

When they began to be somewhat better bred, they left these hedge-notes for another sort of poem, which was also full of pleasant raillery. Dryden.

HEDGE-PIG. n. f. [hedge and pig.] A young hedge-hog.

Thrice the brindled cat hath mew'd,
Thrice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakspeare.

HEDGE-ROW. n. f. [hedge and row.] The series of trees or bushes planted for enclosures.

Sometime walking not unseen
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green. Milton.
The fields in the northern side are divided by hedge-rows of myrtle. Berkley to Pope.

HEDGE-SPARROW. n. f. [hedge and sparrow; curruca.] A sparrow that lives in bushes, distinguished from a sparrow that builds in thatch.

H E E

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had it's head bit off by its young. Shakspeare.

HE'DGING-BILL. n. f. [hedge and bill.] A cutting-hook used in making hedges.

Comes master Dametas with a hedging-bill in his hand, chaffing and swearing. Sidney.

HE'DGER. n. f. [from hedge.] One who makes hedges.

The labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came,
And the swink'd hedger at his supper sat. Milton.

He would be laughed at, that should go about to make a fine dancer out of a country hedger at past fifty. Locke.

TO HEED. v. a. [hedan, Saxon.] To mind; to regard; to take notice of; to attend.

With pleasure Argus the musician heeds;
But wonders much at those new vocal reeds. Dry.

He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular ideas of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it, and with attention heed all the parts of it. Locke.

HEED. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Care; attention.

With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running. Milton.
Take heed that, in their tender years, ideas, that have no natural cohesion, come not to be united in their heads. Locke.

Thou must take heed, my Portius;
The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Addis.

2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.

Either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught as men catch diseases, one of another; therefore, let men take heed of their company. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Take heed; have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakspeare.

3. Care to avoid.

We should take heed of the neglect or contempt of his worship. Tillotson.

4. Notice; observation.
Speech must come by hearing and learning; and birds give more heed, and mark words more than beasts. Bacon.

5. Seriousness; staidness.

He did unseal them; and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed
Was in his countenance. Shakspeare.

6. Regard; respectful notice.

It is a way of calling a man a fool, when no heed is given to what he says. L'Estrange.

HE'DFUL. adj. [from heed.]

1. Watchful; cautious; suspicious.

Give him heedful note;
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;
And, after, we will both our judgments join,
In censure of his seeming. Shakspeare.

2. Attentive; careful; observing; with of.

I am commanded
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
Where fame, late ent'ring at his heedful ears,
Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue. Shakspeare.

To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other. Shakspeare.

Thou, heedful of advice, secure proceed;
My praise the precept is, be thine the deed. Pope.

HE'DFULLY. adv. [from heedful.] Attentively; carefully; cautiously.

Let the learner maintain an honourable opinion of his instructor, and heedfully listen to his instructions, as one willing to be led. Watts.

HE'DFULNESS. n. f. [from heedful.]

Caution; vigilance; attention.

HE'DILY. adv. Cautiously; vigilantly. Dict.

HE'EDINESS. n. f. Caution; vigilance. Diſt.

HE'EDLESS. adj. [from heed.] Negligent; inattentive; careless; thoughtless; regardless; unobserving; with of.

The heedless lover does not know Whose eyes they are that wound him so. Waller.
Heedless of verse, and hopeless of the crown,
Scarce half a wit, and more than half a clown. Dryden.

Some ideas which have more than once offered themselves to the senses, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind being either heedless, as in children, or otherwise employed, as in men. Locke.

Surprises are often fatal to heedless unguarded innocence. Sherlock.

HE'EDLESSLY. adv. [from heedless.] Carelessly; negligently; inattentively.

Whilst ye discharge the duties of matrimony, ye heedlessly slide into sin. Arbutnot and Pope.

HE'EDLESSNESS. n. f. [from heedless.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; inattention.

In the little harms they suffer from knocks and falls, they should not be pitied, but bid do so again; which is a better way to cure their heedlessness. Locke.

HEEL. n. f. [hele, Saxon.]

1. The part of the foot that protuberates behind.

If the luxated bone be distorted backward, it lieth over the heel bone. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. The whole foot of animals.

The stag recalls his strength, his speed,
His winged heels, and then his armed head;
With these t' avoid, with that his fate to meet;
But fear prevails, and bids him trust his feet. Dentham.

Pegasus appeared hanging off the side of a rock, with a fountain running from his heel. Addis.

3. The feet, as employed in flight.

Nothing is commoner, in times of danger, than for men to leave their masters to bears and tigers, and shew them a fair pair of heels for 't. L'Esfrange.

4. To be at the HEELS. To pursue closely; to follow hard.

Sir, when comes your book forth?
—Upon the heels of my presentment. Shakspeare.
But is there no sequel at the heels of this Mother's admiration? Shakspeare's Hamlet.

5. To attend closely.

Could we break our way
By force, and at our heels all hell should rise
With blackest insurrection, to confound Heav'n's purest light. Milton.

6. To pursue as an enemy.

The Spaniards fled on towards the north to seek their fortunes, being still chased by the English navy at their heels, until they were fain to give them over for want of powder. Bacon.
Want! hungry want! that hungry meagre fiend,
Is at my heels, and chaces me in view. Otway.

7. To follow close as a dependant.

Through proud London he came fighting on,
After th' admired heels of Bolingbroke. Shakspeare.

8. To lay by the HEELS. To fetter; to shackle; to put in gyves.

If the king blame me for 't, I'll lay ye all
By th' heels, and suddenly; and on your heads
Clap round fines for neglect. Shakspeare.
One half of man, his mind,
Is sui juris, unconfin'd,
And cannot be laid by the heels. Hudibras.

I began to smoke that they were a parcel of mummers; and wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels. Addison.

9. Any thing shaped like a heel.

At the other side is a kind of heel or knob, to break clots with. Mortimer's Husbandry.

10. The back part of a stocking: whence the phrase to be out at heels, to be worn out.

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels. Shakspeare.

To HEEL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance.

I cannot sing,

Nor heel the high lavoit, nor sweeten talk. Shakspeare.

2. To lean on one side: as, the ship heels.

To HEEL. v. a. To arm a cock.

HEELER. n. f. [from heel.] A cock that strikes well with his heels.

To HEEL-PIECE. v. a. [heel and piece.] To put a piece of leather on a shoe heel.

Some blamed Mrs. Bull for new heel-piecing her shoes. Arbutnot.

HEFT. n. f. [from heave.]

1. Heaving; effort.

May be in the cup

A spider steep'd, and one may drink; depart,
And yet partake no venom; for his knowledge
Is not infected: but if one present
Th' abhorrent ingredient to his eye, make known
How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his sides
With violent hefts. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

2. [for haft.] Handle.

His oily side devours both blade and heft. Waller.

HE'GIRA. n. f. [Arabick.] A term in chronology, signifying the epocha, or account of time, used by the Arabians and Turks, who begin their computation from the day that Mahomet was forced to make his escape from the city of Mecca, which happened on Friday, July 16, A. D. 622, under the reign of the emperor Heraclius. Harris.

HEIFER. n. f. [heafone, Saxon.] A young cow

Who finds the heifer dead and bleeding fresh,
And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,
But will suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter? Shakspeare.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against the rain. Bacon.
For her the flocks refuse their verdant food,
Nor thirsty heifer seek the gliding flood. Pope.

1. An expression of slight languor and uneasiness.

Heigh ho! an't be not four by the day, I'll be hang'd. Shakspeare.

2. It is used by Dryden, contrarily to custom, as a voice of exultation.

We'll toff off our ale 'till we cannot stand,
And heigh-ho for the honour of Old England. Dryden.

HEIGHT. n. f. [from high.]

1. Elevation above the ground: indefinite.

Into what pit thou see'st,

From what height fall'n! Milton.
An amphitheatre's amazing height
Here fills the eye with terror and delight. Addis.

2. Altitude; definite space measured upward.

Abroad I'll study thee,
As he removes far off, that great heights takes. Donne.

There is in Ticinium a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty. Bacon.

An amphitheatre appear'd
Rais'd in degrees, to sixty paces rear'd;
That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.

3. Degree of latitude. Latitudes are higher as they approach the pole.

Guinea lieth to the north sea, in the same height as Peru to the south. Abbot.

4. Summit; ascent; towering eminence; high place.

From Alpine heights the father first descends;
His daughter's husband in the plain attends. Dry.

5. Elevation of rank; station of dignity; great degree of excellence.

By him that rais'd me to this careful height,
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd. Shakspeare.
Ten kings had from the Norman conqueror reign'd,
When England to her greatest height attain'd,
Of pow'r, dominion, glory, wealth, and state. Daniel.

Every man of learning need not enter into their difficulties, nor climb the heights to which some others have arrived. Watts.

6. The utmost degree; full completion.

Putrefaction doth not rise to its height at once. Bacon.

Did not she

Of Timna first betray me, and reveal
The secret, wrested from me in the height
Of nuptial love profess'd? Milton.

Hide me from the face

Of God, whom to behold was then my height
Of happiness! Milton.
Despair is the height of madness. Sherlock.

7. Utmost exertion.

Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height
Of your breeding. Shakspeare.

8. State of excellence; advance toward perfection.

Social duties are carried to greater heights, and enforced with stronger motives, by the principles of our religion. Addison.

To HE'IGHTEN. v. a. [from height.]

1. To raise higher.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

3. To aggravate.

Foreign states used their endeavours to heighten our confusions, and plunge us into all the evils of a civil war. Addison.

4. To improve by decorations.

As in a room, contrived for state, the height of the roof should bear a proportion to the area; so in the heightenings of poetry, the strength and vehemence of figures should be suited to the occasion. Dryden.

HE'INOUS. adj. [haineux, French, from hane, hate; or from the Teutonick, boon, shame.] Atrocious; wicked in a high degree.

To abrogate or innovate the gospel of Christ, if men or angels should attempt, it were most heinous and accursed sacrilege. Hooker.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakspeare.

As it is a most heinous, so it is a most dangerous impiety to despise him that can destroy us. Tillotson.

HE'INOUSLY. adv. [from heinous.] Atrociously; wickedly.

HE'INOUSNESS. n. f. [from heinous.] Atrociousness; wickedness.

He who can treat offences, provoking God, as jests and trifles, must have little sense of the heinousness of them. Rogers.

HEIR. n. f. [heire, old French; heres, Latin.]

1. One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.

An heir signifies the eldest, who is, by the laws of England, to have all his father's land. Locke.

What lady is that?

—The heir of Alanfon, Rosaline her name. Shakspeare.

That I'll give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent,
God knows, I will not do it. Shakspeare.
Being heirs together of the grace of life. 1 Pet.
Sunk is the hero, and his glory lost,
And I his heir in misery alone. Pope.

The heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and a tenderness in their constitutions. Swift.

2. One newly inheriting an estate.

The young extravagant heir had got a new steward, and was resolved to look into his estate.
Swift.

To HEIR. v. a. [from the noun.] To inherit.

His son in blooming youth was snatch'd by fate,
One only daughter heir'd the royal state. Dryden.

HEIRESS. n. f. [from heir.] An inheritrix; a woman that inherits.

An heiress she, while yet alive;
All that was her's to him did give. Waller.

Aeneas, though he married the heiress of the crown, yet claimed no title to it during the life of his father-in-law. Dryden.

HEIRLESS. adj. [from heir.] Without an heir; wanting one to inherit after him.

I still think of
The wrong I did myself; which was so much,
That heirless it hath made my kingdom. Shakspeare.

HEIRLOOM. n. f. [heir and geloma, goods, Saxon.] Any furniture or moveable decreed to descend by inheritance, and therefore inseparable from the freehold.

Achilles' sceptre was of wood,
Transmitted to the hero's line;
Thence through a long descent of kings
Came an heirloom, as Homer sings. Swift.

HEIRSHIP. n. f. [from heir.] The state,
character, or privileges of an heir.

A layman appoints an heir or an executor in his will, to build an hospital within a year, under pain of being deprived of his heirship. Ayliffe.

HELD. The preterit and part. pass. of hold.

A rich man beginning to fall, is held up of friends. Ecclesiastes.

If Minerva had not appeared and held his hand, he had executed his design. Dryden.

HELIACAL. adj. [heliacque, Fr. from ἥλιος.] Emerging from the lustre of the sun, or falling into it.

Had they ascribed the heat of the season to this star, they would not have computed from its heliacal ascent. Brown.

HELIACALLY. adv. [from heliacal.]

From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, its emergence from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their canicular days. Brown.

He is tempestuous in the summer, when he rises heliacally; and rainy in the winter, when he rises achronically. Dryden.

HELICAL. adj. [helice, Fr. from ἥλιος.]
Spiral; with many circumvolutions.

The screw is a kind of wedge, multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vectis at one end of it. Wilkins.

HELIOCENTRICK. adj. [heliocentrique,
French; ἥλιος and κέντρον.]

The heliocentrick place of a planet is said to be such as it would appear to us from the sun, if our eye were fixed in its centre. Harris.

HELIOD Parabolæ in mathematicks, or the parabolick spiral, is a curve which arises from the supposition of the axis of the common Apollonian parabola being bent round into the periphery of a circle, and is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which do now converge toward the centre of the said circle. Harris.

HELIOSCOPE. n. f. [helioscope, Fr. ἥλιος and σκοπέω.] A sort of telescope fitted so as to look on the body of the sun, without offence to the eyes. Harris.

HELIOTROPE. n. f. [ἥλιος and τρέπω;
heliotrope, Fr. heliotropium, Lat.] A plant that turns toward the sun; but more particularly the turnsol, or sunflower.

'Tis an observation of flatterers, that they are like the heliotrope; they open only towards the sun, but shut and contract themselves at night, and in cloudy weather. Gov. of the Tongue.

HELISPHERICAL. adj. [helix and sphere.]
The helisppherical line is the rhomb line in navigation, and is so called because on the globe it winds round the pole spirally, and still comes nearer and nearer to it, but cannot terminate in it.
Harris.

HELIX. n. f. [helice, Fr. ἥλιξ.] Part of a spiral line; a circumvolution.

Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the quantity of water which every helix does contain. Wilkins.

HELL. n. f. [helle, Saxon.]

1. The place of the devil and wicked souls.

For it is a knell
That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. Shakspeare.
If a man were a porter of hell gates, he should have old turning the key. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Let none admire

That riches grow in hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. Milton.

Hell's black tyrant trembled to behold
The glorious light he forfeited of old. Cowley.

2. The place of separate souls, whether good or bad.

I will go down to my son mourning to hell.
Genesis.
He descended into hell. Apostles Creed.

3. Temporal death.

The pains of hell came about me; the snares of death overtook me. Psalms.

4. The place at a running play to which those who are caught are carried.

Then couples three be straight allotted there;
They of both ends the middle two do fly;
The two that in mid-place, hell called were,
Must strive with waiting foot and watching eye,
To catch of them, and them to hell to bear,
That they, as well as they, hell may supply.
Sidney.

5. The place into which the tailor throws his shreds.

This trusty squire, he had as well
As the bold Trojan knight seen hell;
Not with a counterfeited pass
Of golden bough, but true gold-lace. Hudibras.
In Covent-garden did a taylor dwell,
Who might deserve a place in his own hell.
King's Cookery.

6. The infernal-powers.

Much danger first, much toil did he sustain,
While Saul and hell crost his strong fate in vain.
Cowley.

7. It is used in composition by the old writers more than by the modern.

HELL-BLACK. adj. Black as hell.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
In hell-black night endur'd, would have boil'd up,
And quench'd the stelled fires. Shakspeare.

HELL-BRED. adj. [hell and bred.] Produced in hell.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,
With foul enfolded smoak and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth into the skies.
Spenser.

HELL-BROTH. n. f. [hell and broth.] A composition boiled up for infernal purposes.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing;
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble. Shakspeare.

HELL-DOOMED. adj. [hell and doom.]
Consigned to hell.

And reckon'st thou thyself with spirits of heav'n,
Hell-doom'd! and breath'st defiance here and scorn,

Where I reign'd king? Milton.

HELL-GOVERNED. adj. Directed by hell.

Earth gape open wide and ate him quick,
As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butcher'd.
Shakspeare.

HELL-HATED. adj. Abhorred like hell.

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head,
With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart.
Shakspeare.

HELL-HAUNTED. adj. [hell and haunt.]
Haunted by the devil.

Fierce Osmond clos'd me in the bleeding bark,
And bid me stand exposed to the bleak winds,
Bound to the fate of this hell-haunted grove. Dryden.

HELL-HOUND. n. f. [helle hund, Sax.]

1. Dog of hell.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death. Shakspeare.
Now the hell-hounds with superior speed
Had reach'd the dame, and, fastning on her side,
The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd.
Dryden.

2. Agent of hell.

I call'd
My hell-hounds to lick up the draff, and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton.

HELL-KITE. n. f. [hell and kite.] Kite of infernal breed. The term hell prefixed to any word notes detestation.

Did you say all? What all? Oh, hell-kite! all?
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop? Shakspeare's Macbeth.

HELLEBORE. n. f. [belleborus, Latin.]
Christmas flower.

HELLEBORE White. n. f. [veratrum,
Latin.] A plant.

There are great doubts whether any of its species be the true hellebore of the ancients. Miller.

HELLENISM. n. f. [ἑλληνισμός.] A Greek idiom. Ainsworth.

HELLISH. adj. [from hell.]

1. Sent from hell; belonging to hell.

O thou celestial or infernal spirit of love, or what other heavenly or hellish title thou list to have, for effects of both I find in myself, have compassion of me. Sidney.

Victory and triumph to the Son of God,
Now entering his great duel, not of arms,
But to vanquish by wisdom hellish wiles. Milton.

2. Having the qualities of hell; infernal;
wicked; detestable.

No benefits shall ever allay that diabolical rancor that ferments in some hellish breasts, but that it will foam out at its foul mouth in slander. South.

HELLISHLY. adv. [from hellish.] Infernally; wickedly; detestably.

HELLISHNESS. n. f. [from hellish.]
Wickedness; abhorred qualities.

HELLWARD. adv. [from hell.] Toward hell.

Be next thy care the fable sheep to place
Full o'er the pit, and hellward turn their face.
Pope.

HELM denotes defence: as Eadhelm, happy defence; Sigheilm, victorious defence;

Berthelm, eminent defence: like Amyntas and Boetius among the Greeks.

Gibson's Camden.

HELM. n. f. [helm, Saxon, from helan, to cover, to protect.]

1. A covering for the head in war; a helmet; a morion; a headpiece.

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land!
With plumed helm the slayer begins his threats.

Shakspeare.

HEMISPHERE. n. f. [ἡμισφαῖον;
hemisphere, French.] The half of a globe when it is supposed to be cut through its centre in the plane of one of its greatest circles.

That place is earth, the seat of man, that light
His day, which else, as th' other hemisphere, Night would invade. Milton.

A hill

Of Paradise, the highest from whose top
The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken Stretch'd out to th' amplest reach of prospect lay.

Milton.

The sun is more powerful in the northern hemisphere, and in the apogee; for therein his motion is slower. Brown.

In open prospect nothing bounds our eye,
Until the earth seems join'd unto the sky;
So in this hemisphere our utmost view
Is only bounded by our king and you. Dryden.

HEMISPHERICAL. } adj. [from hemi- HEMISPHERICK. } sphere] Half round;

HEMLOCK. n. f. [hemloc, Saxon.] An herb.

The leaves are cut into many minute segments:
the petals of the flower are bifid, heart-shaped,
and unequal: the flower is succeeded by two short channeled seeds. One sort is sometimes used in medicine, though it is noxious; but the hemlock of the ancients, which was such deadly poison, is generally supposed different. Miller.

He was met even now,

Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
With bardocks, hemlock. Shakespeare.

We cannot with certainty affirm, that no man can be nourished by wood or stones, or that all men will be poisoned by hemlock. Locke.

HEMORRHAGY. } morragie, French.] A violent flux of blood.

Great hemorrhage succeeds the separation. Ray.
Twenty days fasting will not diminish its quantity so much as one great hemorrhage. Arbutnot.

HEMORRHOIDS. n. f. [αιμορροειδης;
hemorrhoids, French.] The piles; the emroids.

I got the hemorrhoids. Swift.

HEMORRHOIDAL. adj. [hemorrhoidal, French, from hemorrhoids.] Belonging to the veins in the fundament.

Besides there are hemorrhages from the nose and hemorrhoidal veins, and fluxes of rheum.

Ray on the Creation

Emboss upon the field, a battle flood
Of leeches, spouting hemorrhoidal blood. Garth.

HEMP. n. f. [hænep, Saxon; hampe,

Dutch; cannabis.] A fibrous plant of which coarse linen and ropes are made.

It hath digitated leaves opposite to one another:
the flowers have no visible petals; it is male and female in different plants. Its bark is useful for cordage and cloth. Miller.

Let gallows go for dog; let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate. Shaksp.

Hemp and flax are commodities that deserve encouragement, both for their usefulness and profit. Mortimer.

HEMP Agrimony. n. f. A plant.

The common hemp agrimony is found wild by ditches and sides of rivers. Miller.

HE'MPEN. adj. [from hemp.] Made of hemp.

In foul reproach of knighthood's fair degree,
About his neck a hempen rope he wears.

Fairy Queen.

Behold

Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing.

Shakespeare.

Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the help of a hatchet. Shakespeare.

I twitch'd his dangling garter from his knee;
He wist not when the hempen string I drew. Gay.

HEN. n. f. [henne, Saxon; han, German,
a cock.]

1. The female of a house-cock.

2. The female of any land fowl.

The peacock, pheasant, and goldfinch cocks have glorious colours; the hens have not. Bacon.

Whilst the hen bird is covering her eggs, the male generally takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough within her hearing, and by that means diverts her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting. Addison.

O'er the trackless waste

The heath hen flutters. Thomson.

HEN-DRIVER. n. f. [hen and driver.] A kind of hawk.

The hen-driver I forbear to name. Walton.

HEN-HARRIER. } kind of kite. Ainsw.
So called probably from destroying chickens.

HEN-WEARTED. adj. [hen and heart.]
Dastardly; cowardly; like a hen. A low word.

HEN-PECKED. adj. [hen and pecked.]
Governed by the wife.

A stepdame too I have, a cursed she,
Who rules my hen-peck'd sire, and orders me. Dry.

The neighbours reported that he was hen-pecked, which was impossible, by such a mild-spirited woman as his wife. Arbutnot.

HEN-ROOST. n. f. [hen and roost.] The place where the poultry rest.

Many a poor devil stands to a whipping post for the pilfering of a silver spoon, or the robbing of a hen-roost. L'Estrange.

Her house is frequented by a company of rogues, whom she encourageth to rob his hen-roosts.

Swift.

If a man persecutes gypsies with severity, his hen-roost is sure to pay for it. Addison.

They oft have sallied out to pillage
The hen-roosts of some peaceful village. Tickel.

HENBANE. n. f. [hyoscyamus, Latin.]
A plant.

It is very often found growing upon the sides of banks and old dunghills. This is a very poisonous plant. Miller.

That to which old Socrates was curs'd,
Or henbane juice, to swell 'em till they burst.

Dryden.

HE'NBIT. n. f. [alsine foliis hederacis.]
A plant.

In a scarcity in Silesia a rumour was spread of its raining millet-feed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit. Derham's Phys. Theolog.

HENCE. adv. or interj. [heonan, Sax. hennes, old English.]

1. From this place to another.

Discharge my follow'rs; let them hence away,
From Richard's night to Bolingbroke's fair day.
Shakspeare.

Th' Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy; will not drive us hence. Milton.
A fullen prudence drew thee hence
From noise, fraud, and impertinence. Roscom.

2. Away; to a distance. A word of command.

Be not found here: hence with your little ones.

Shakspeare.

Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse. Milton.

3. At a distance; in another place. Not in use.

Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth?
Shakspeare.

All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are infixed to this action. Shakspeare.

4. From this time; in the future.

He who can reason well to-day about one sort of matters, cannot at all reason to-day about others, though perhaps a year hence he may. Locke.
Let not posterity a thousand years hence look for truth in the voluminous annals of pedants.

Arbuthnot.

5. For this reason; in consequence of this.

Hence perhaps it is, that Solomon calls the fear of the Lord the beginning of wisdom.

Tillotson.

6. From this cause; from this ground.

By too strong a projectile motion the aliment tends to putrefaction: hence may be deduced the force of exercise in helping digestion. Arbuthnot.

7. From this source; from this original; from this store.

My Flora was my fun; for as One fun, so but one Flora was;
All other faces borrowed hence

Their light and grace as stars do thence. Suckling.

8. From hence is a vitious expression, which crept into use even among good authors, as the original force of the word hence was gradually forgotten. Hence signifies from this.

An ancient author prophesy'd from hence,
Behold on Latian shores a foreign prince! Dryd.

To HENCE. v. a. [from the adverb.]

To send off; to dispatch to a distance.
Obsolete.

Go, bawling cur! thy hungry maw go fill
On yon foul flock, belonging not to me;
With that his dog he henc'd, his flock he curs'd.

Sidney.

HENCEFORTH. adv. [henonforð, Sax.]

From this time forward.

Thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be earls. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Never henceforth shall I joy again;
Never, oh never, shall I see more joy. Shakspeare.

Happier thou may'st be, worthier can't it not be;
Taste this, and be henceforth among the gods,
Thyself a goddess. Milton.

I never from thy side henceforth will stray,
Till day droop. Milton.

If we treat gallant soldiers in this sort,
Who then henceforth to our defence will come?

Dryden.

HENCEFORTHWARD. adv. [hence and forward.]

From this time to futurity.

Henceforward will I bear Upon my target three fair shining suns. Shakspeare.

Pardon, I beseech you;
Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you. Shakspeare.

The royal academy will admit henceforward
only such who are endued with good qualities.

Dryden.

H E R

HE'NCHMAN. n. f. [hync, a servant, and man, Skinner; hengre, a horse, and man, Spelman.] A page; an attendant.

Obsolete.

Why should Titania cross her Oberon:

I do but beg a little changeling boy,

To be my henchman. Shakspeare.

Three henchmen were for ev'ry knight assign'd,
All in rich livery clad, and of a kind. Dryden

To HEND. v. a. [hendan, Saxon, from bendo, low Latin, which seems borrowed from hand or bond, Teutonic.]

1. To seize; to lay hold on.

With that the sergeants hent the young man stout,
And bound him likewise in a worthless chain.

Fairfax.

2. To crowd; to surround. Perhaps the following passage is corrupt, and should be read hemmed; or it may mean to take possession.

The generous and gravest citizens
Have hent the gates, and very near upon
The duke is entering. Shakspeare.

HENDE'CAGON. n. f. [ἑνδεκά and γωνία.] A figure of eleven sides or angles.

HEPA'TICK. } tique, Fr. from ἥπαρ.]

Belonging to the liver.

If the evacuated blood be florid, it is stomach blood; if red and copious, it is hepatick. Harvey.

The cystick gall is thick, and intensely bitter;
the hepatick gall is more fluid, and not so bitter.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

HEPS. n. f. The berries of the brier or dogrose, commonly written hips. Ainsw.

In hard winters there is observed great plenty of heps and haws, which preserve the small birds from starving. Bacon.

HEPTACA'PSULAR. adj. [ἑπτά and capsu-
la.] Having seven cavities or cells.

HEPTAGON. n. f. [heptagone, French;
ἑπτά and γωνία.] A figure with seven sides or angles.

HEPTA'GONAL. adj. [from heptagon.]

Having seven angles or sides.

HEPTARCHY. n. f. [heptarchie, French;
ἑπτά and ἀρχή.] A sevenfold government.

In the Saxon heptarchy I find little noted of arms, albeit the Germans, of whom they descended, used shields. Camden.

England began not to be a people, when Alfred reduced it into a monarchy; for the materials thereof were extant before, namely, under the heptarchy. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The next returning planetary hour
Of Mars, who shar'd the heptarchy of pow'r,
His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent. Dryd.

HER. pron. [hepa, hep, in Saxon, stood for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth. Shakspeare. As you like it.

Still new favourites she chose,
'Till up in arms my passion rose,
And cast away her yoke. Cowley.

One month, three days, and half an hour,
Judith held the sov'reign pow'r;
Wond'rous beautiful her face;
But so weak and small her wit,
That she to govern were unfit,
And so Susanna took her place. Cowley.

H E R

2. The oblique case of she.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not. Shakspeare. Henry v.

She cannot seem deform'd to me,
And I would have her seem to others so. Cowley.

The moon arose clad o'er in light,
With thousand stars attending on her train;
With her they rise, with her they set again.

Cowley.

Should I be left, and thou be lost, the sea,
That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me. Dryd.

HERS. pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, such are her charms, such charms as hers.

This pride of hers,
Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her.

Shakspeare.

Thine own unworthiness,
Will still that thou art mine not hers confess.

Cowley.

Some secret charm did all her acts attend,
And what his fortune wanted, hers could mend.

Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
Indeed to save a crown, not hers but yours. Dryd.

HERALD. n. f. [herault, Fr. herald, German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace.

May none, whose scatter'd names honour my book,
For strict degrees of rank or title look;

'Tis 'gainst the manners of an epigram,
And I a poet here, no herald am. Ben Jonson.

When time shall serve let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Embassador of peace, if peace you chuse;
Or herald of a war, if you refuse. Dryden.

Please thy pride and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree.

Dryden.

2. A precursor; a forerunner; a harbinger.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shakspeare.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn.

Shakspeare.

3. A proclaimer; a publisher.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shakspeare.

To HERALD. v. a. [from the noun.]

To introduce as by a herald. Not used.

We are sent from our royal master,
Only to herald thee into his fight,
Not pay thee. Shakspeare.

HERALDRY. n. f. [heraulderie, Fr. from herald.]

1. The art or office of a herald.

I am writing of heraldry. Peacham.

Grant her, besides, of noble blood that ran
In ancient veins, ere heraldry began. Dryden.

2. Registry of genealogies.

'Twas no false heraldry when madness drew
Her pedigree from those who too much knew.

Denham.

3. Blazonry.

Metals may blazon common beauties; she Makes pearls and planets humble heraldry.

Cleaveland.

HERB. n. f. [herbe, Fr. herba, Latin.]

Herbs are those plants whose stalks are soft, and have nothing woody in them; as grass and hemlock. Locke.

In such a night
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Ælon. Shakspeare.

HER

With sweet-smelling herbs

Espos'd Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed. Milt.

Unhappy, from whom still conceal'd does lie

Of herbs and roots the harmless luxury. Cowley.

If the leaves are of chief use to us, then we call them herbs; as sage and mint. Watts.

Herb-eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbutnot.

HERB Christopher, or bane-berries. n. f.

A plant.

HERBA'CEOUS. adj. [from herba, Lat.]

1. Belonging to herbs.

Ginger is the root of neither tree nor trunk;

but an herbaceous plant, resembling the water

flower-de-luce. Brown.

2. Feeding on vegetables: perhaps not properly.

Their teeth are fitted to their food, the rapacious to catching, holding, and tearing their prey; the herbaceous to gathering and comminution of vegetables. Derham.

HERBAGE. n. f. [herbage, French.]

1. Herbs collectively; grafs; pasture.

Rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow;

Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields.

Dryden.

At the time the deluge came, the earth was loaded with herbage, and throng'd with animals. Woodward.

2. The tithe and the right of pasture.

Ainsworth.

HERBAL. n. f. [from herb.] A book containing the names and descriptions of plants.

We leave the description of plants to herbals,

and other like books of natural history. Bacon.

Such a plant will not be found in the herbal of nature. Brown.

As for the medicinal uses of plants, the large

herbals are ample testimonies thereof. Moore.

Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants.

Baker.

HERBALIST. n. f. [from herbal.] A man skilled in herbs.

Herbalists have distinguished them, naming that the male whose leaves are lighter, and fruit rounder. Brown.

HERBAR. n. f. [A word, I believe,

only to be found in Spenser.] Herb;

plant.

The roof hereof was arch'd over head,

And deck'd with flowers and herbars daintily.

Fairy Queen.

HERBARIST. n. f. [herbarius, from her- ba, Latin.] One skilled in herbs.

Herbarists have exercised a commendable curiosity in subdividing plants of the same denomination. Boyle.

He was too much sway'd by the opinions then current amongst herbarists, that different colours, or multiplicity of leaves in the flower, were sufficient to constitute a specific difference. Ray.

As to the fuci, their seed hath been discovered and shew'd me first by an ingenious herbarist.

Derham.

HERBELET. n. f. [diminutive of herb,

or of herbula, Latin.] A small herb.

These herbelets, which we upon you strow.

Shakspeare.

HERBESCENT. adj. [herbescens, Latin.]

Growing into herbs.

HERBID. adj. [herbidus, Latin.] Covered with herbs.

HERBORIST. n. f. [from herb.] One curious in herbs. This seems a mistake for herbarist.

A curious herborist has a plant, whose flower perishes in about an hour. Ray.

HERBOROUGH. n. f. [herberg, German.]

Place of temporary residence. Now

HER

The German lord, when he went out of Newgate into the cart, took order to have his arms set up in his last herborough. Ben Jonson.

HERBOUS. adj. [herbosus, Lat.] Abounding with herbs.

HERBULENT. adj. [from herbula, Lat.]

Containing herbs. Diſt.

HERBWOMAN. n. f. [herb and woman.]

A woman that sells herbs.

I was like to be pulled to pieces by brewer, butcher, and baker; even my herbwoman dunned me as I went along. Arbutnot.

HERBY. adj. [from herb.] Having the nature of herbs.

No substance but earth, and the procedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any moss or herby substance. Bacon.

HERD. n. f. [heord, Saxon.]

1. A number of beasts together. It is peculiarly applied to black-cattle.

Flocks and herds are sheep and oxen or kine.

Note a wild and wanton herd,

Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,

Fetching mad bounds. Shakspeare.

There find a herd of heifers, wand'ring o'er

The neighbouring hill, and drive them to the shore.

Addison.

2. A company of men, in contempt or detestation.

Survey the world, and where one Cato shines,

Count a degenerate herd of Catilines. Dryden.

I do not remember where ever God delivered his oracles by the multitude, or nature truth by the herd. Locke.

3. It antiently signified a keeper of cattle, and in Scotland it is still used. [hyrd,

Saxon.] A sense still retained in composition: as, goat-herd.

To HERD. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run in herds or companies.

Weak women should, in danger, herd like deer.

Dryden.

It is the nature of indigency, like common danger, to endear men to one another, and make them herd together, like fellow-sailors in a storm.

Norris.

2. To associate; to become one of any number or party.

I'll herd among his friends, and seem

One of the number. Addison's Cato

Run to towns, to herd with knaves and fools,

And undistinguish'd pass among the crowd.

Walsh.

To HERD. v. a. To throw or put into a herd.

The rest,

However great we are, honest and valiant,

Are herded with the vulgar. Ben Jonson.

HERDGROOM. n. f. [herd and groom.]

A keeper of herds. Not in use.

But who shall judge the wager won or lost?

That shall yonder herdgroom, and none other.

Spenser.

HERDMAN. } n. f. [herd and man.]

HERDSMAN. } One employed in tending herds: formerly, an owner of herds.

A herdsman rich, of much account was he,

In whom no evil did reign, or good appear.

Sidney.

And you, enchantment,

Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou

These rural latches to his entrance open,

I will devise a cruel death for thee. Shakspeare.

Scarce themselves know how to hold

A shephook, or have learn'd ought else the least

That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs.

Milton.

There oft the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,

Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds

At loop-holes cut through thickest shade. Milt.

HER

So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear

Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear.

Dryden.

The herdsman, round

The chearful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd. Dryden.

When their herdsmen could not agree, they parted by consent. Locke.

HERE. adv. [hest, Saxon; hier, Dutch.]

1. In this place.

Before they here approach,

Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,

All ready at a point, was setting forth. Shaksp.

I, upon my frontiers here,

Keep residence. Milton.

Here nature first begins

Her farthest verge. Milton.

How wretched does Prometheus' state appear,

While he his second mis'ry suffers here! Cowley.

To day is ours, we have it here. Cowley.

2. In the present state.

Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon.

3. It is used in making an offer or attempt.

Then here's for earnest:

'Tis finish'd. Dryden.

4. In drinking a health.

However, friend, here's to the king, one cries;

To him who was the king, the friend replied.

Prior.

5. It is often opposed to there; in one place, distinguished from another.

Good-night, mine eyes do itch;

Doth that bode weeping?

'Tis neither here nor there. Shakspeare.

We are come to see thee fight, to see thee foigne, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakspeare.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave,

implore;

Post here for help, seek there their followers.

Daniel.

I would have in the heath some thickets made only of sweet-briar, and honey-suckle, and some wild vine amongst; and the ground set with violets; for these are sweet, and prosper in the shade; and these to be in the heath here and there, not in order. Bacon.

The devil might perhaps, by inward suggestions, have drawn in here and there a single pro-felyte. Government of the Tongue.

Your city, after the dreadful fire, was rebuilt, not presently, by raising continued streets; but at first here a house, and there a house, to which others by degrees were joined. Sprat's Sermons.

He that rides post through a country may be able to give some loose description of here a mountain and there a plain, here a morass and there a river, woodland in one part, and savanas

in another. Locke.

6. Here seems, in the following passage, to mean this place.

Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;

Thou lovest here, a better where to find. Shaksp.

HEREABOUTS. adv. [here and about.]

About this place.

I saw hereabouts nothing remarkable, except Augustus's bridge. Addison on Italy.

HEREAFTER. adv. [here and after.]

1. In time to come; in futurity.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing. Shakspeare.

The grand-child, with twelve sons increas'd,

departs

From Canaan, to a land hereafter call'd

Egypt. Milton.

Hereafter he from war shall come,

And bring his Trojans peace. Dryden.

2. In a future state.

You shall be happy here, and more happy

hereafter. Bacon.

HEREAFTER. n. f. A future state. This is a figurative noun, not to be used but in poetry.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;
'Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison's Cato.
I still shall wait
Some new hereafter, and a future state. Prior.

HEREA'T. adv. [here and at.] At this. One man coming to the tribune, to receive his donative, with a garland in his hand, the tribune, offended hereat, demanded what this singularity could mean? Hooker.

HEREBY. adv. [here and by.] By this. In what estate the fathers rested, which were dead before, it is not hereby either one way or other determined. Hooker.

Hereby the Moors are not excluded by beauty, there being in this description no consideration of colours. Brown.

The acquisition of truth is of infinite concernment: hereby we become acquainted with the nature of things Watts.

HERE'DITABLE. adj. [heres, Lat.] Whatever may be occupied as inheritance.

Adam being neither a monarch, nor his imaginary monarchy hereditary, the power which is now in the world is not that which was Adam's. Locke.

HE'REDITAMENT. n. f. [heredium, Lat.] A law term denoting inheritance, or hereditary estate.

HERE'DITARILY. adv. [from hereditary.] By inheritance.

Here is another, who thinks one of the greatest glories of his father was to have distinguished and loved you, and who loves you hereditarily. Pope to Swift.

HERE'DITARY. adj. [hereditaire, Fr. hereditarius, Lat.] Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.

To thee and thine, hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shakspeare.

These old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary. Shakspeare.

He shall ascend
The throne hereditary, and bound his reign
With earth's wide bounds, his glory with the heavens. Milton.

Thus while the mute creation downward bend
Their sight, and to their earthly mother tend,
Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden's Ovid.

When heroic verse his youth shall raise,
And form it to hereditary praise. Dryden's Virgil.

HEREIN. adv. [here and in.] In this. How highly soever it may please them with words of truth to extol sermons, they shall not herein offend us. Hooker.

My best endeavours shall be done herein. Shakspeare.

Since truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves, herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

HEREINTO. adv. [here and into.] Into this.

Because the point about which we strive is the quality of our laws, our first entrance hereinto cannot better be made than with consideration of the nature of law in general. Hooker.

HEREO'F. adv. [here and of.] From this; of this.

Hereof comes it that prince Harry is valiant. Shakspeare.

HEREO'N. adv. [here and on.] Upon this. If we should strictly insist hereon, the possibility might fall into question. Brown's Vulg. Err.

HEREO'UT. adv. [here and out.]

1. Out of this place.

A bird all white, well feather'd on each wing,
Here-out up to the throne of God did fly. Spens.

2. All the words compounded of here and a preposition, except hereafter, are obsolete, or obsolescent; never used in poetry, and seldom in prose, by elegant writers, though perhaps not unworthy to be retained.

HEREMI'TICAL. adj. [It should be written eremitical, from eremite, of ἐρημικός, a desert; heremitique, French.] Solitary; suitable to a hermit.

You describe so well your heremitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you for a cave in a rock. Pope.

HE'RESIARCH. n. f. [heresiarche, French; ἡρεσιάρχης, Greek.] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of hereticks.

The pope declared him not only an heretick, but an heresiarch. Stillingsfleet.

HE'RESY. n. f. [heresie, French; heresis, Latin; ἡρεσις, Greek.] An opinion of private men different from that of the catholick and orthodox church.

Heresy prevaileth only by a counterfeit shew of reason, whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest remonstrance clearly true, and unable to be withstood. Hooker.

As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon men's wits; yet do not produce great alterations in states. Bacon.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgment, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and disloyalty. King Charles.

HE'RETICK. n. f. [heretique, French; ἡρετικός, Greek.]

1. One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholick church.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretick or schismatick be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

No hereticks desire to spread Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Davies.
Bellarmine owns, that he has quoted a heretick instead of a father. Baker on Learning.

When a papist uses the word hereticks, he generally means protestants; when a protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentiously obstinate in fundamental errors. Watts.

2. It is or has been used ludicrously for any one whose opinion is erroneous.

I rather will suspect the sun with cold
Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands,
In him that was of late an heretick,
As firm as faith. Shakspeare.

HE'RETICAL. adj. [from heretick.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be, as touching his own personal persuasion, heretical, who, in their opinion, not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hooker.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning. Decay of Piety.

HE'RETICALLY. adv. [from heretical.] With heresy.

HERETO'. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.

HERETOFORE. adv. [hereto and fore.] Formerly; anciently.

I have long desired to know you heretofore, with honouring your virtue, though I love not your person. Sidney.

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South.

We now can form no more Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.

HEREUNTO. adv. [here and unto.] To this.

They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man hereunto is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that who so assenteth to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are. Hooker.

Agreeable hereunto might not be amiss to make children often to tell a story of any thing they know. Locke.

HEREWI'TH. adv. [here and with.] With this.

You, fair sir, be not herewith dismay'd,
But constant keep the way in which ye stand. Spenser.

Herewith the castle of Hame was suddenly surprised by the Scots. Hayward.

HE'RIOT. n. f. [hepexilo, Saxon.] A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, commonly the best thing in the landholder's possession.

This he detains from the ivy; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof, but the olive dispenseth with his conscience to pass it over with a compliment and an heriot every year. Howel.

Though thou consume but to renew,
Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heriot due. Cleveland.

I took him up, as your heriot, with intention to have made the best of him, and then have brought the whole produce of him in a purse to you. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

HE'RITABLE. adj. [heres, Lat.] Capable to inherit whatever may be inherited.

By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable, according to the laws of England. Hale's Common Law.

HE'RITAGE. n. f. [heritage, French.]

1. Inheritance; estate devolved by succession; estate in general.

Let us our father's heritage divide. Hub. Tale.
He considers that his proper home and heritage is in another world, and therefore regards the events of this with the indifference of a guest that tarries but a day. Rogers.

2. [In divinity.] The people of God.

O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heritage. Common Prayer.

HERMAPHRODITE. n. f. [hermaphrodite, Fr. from ἑρμῆς and ἀφροδίτη.]

An animal uniting two sexes.
Man and wife make but one right Canonical hermaphrodite. Cleveland.

Monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness hermaphrodites. Arbuth. & Pope.

HERMAPHRODITICAL. adj. [from hermaphrodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality of different forms. Brown.

HERMETICAL. } adj. [from Hermes,
HERMETICK. } or Mercury, the imagined inventor of chymistry; hermetique, French.] Chymical.

An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass 'till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together. Quincy.

The tube was closed at one end with diachylon, instead of an hermetical seal. Boyle.

HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.] According to the hermetical or chymick art.

He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glasses, and vessels close covered with paper; and not only so, but in vessels covered fine lawn, so as to admit the air, and keep out the insects; no living thing was ever produced there. Bentley.

HERMIT. n. f. [hermite, French; contracted from eremite, ἐρημίτης.]

1. A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.

A wither'd hermit, fivescore winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shaksp.

You lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place: I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit rather than a courtier can render. Bacon.

He had been duke of Savoy, and, after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot. Addison.

2. A beadsman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.

For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermit. Shaksp.

HERMITAGE. n. f. [hermitage, French.]

The cell or habitation of a hermit.

By that painful way they pass Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;
On top whereof a sacred chapel was,
And eke a little hermitage thereby. Fairy Queen.

Go with speed
To some forlorn and naked hermitage, Remote from all the pleasures of the world. Shaksp.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of ev'ry star that heav'n doth shew,
And ev'ry herb that sips the dew. Milton.

About two leagues from Fribourg we went to see a hermitage: it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks. Addison.

HERMITESS. n. f. [from hermit.] A woman retired to devotion.

HERMITICAL. adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

HERMODACTYL. n. f. [ἡρμόδαιτυλον and δάκτυλον.]

Hermodyctyl is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in length. This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots are a gentle purge, now little used. Hill.

HERN. n. f. [contracted from HERON, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, hern, and bittern. Peachment.

HERNHILL. n. f. [hern and hill.] An herb. Ainsworth.

HERNIA. n. f. [Latin.] Any kind of rupture, diversified by the name of the part affected.

A hernia would certainly succeed. Wifeman.

HERO. n. f. [heros, Latin; ἦρως.]

1. A man eminent for bravery.

I sing of heroes and of kings,
In mighty numbers mighty things. Cowley.

Heroes in animated marble frown.
In this view he ceases to be an hero, and his return is no longer a virtue. Pope's Odyssey.

These are thy honours, not that here thy bust
Is mix'd with heroes, or with kings thy dust. Pope.

2. A man of the highest class in any respect: as, a hero in learning.

HEROESS. n. f. [from hero; heroies, Lat.]

A heroine; a female hero. Not in use.

In which were held, by sad disease,
Heroes and heroesses. Chapman.

HEROICAL. adj. [from hero.] Befitting a hero; noble; illustrious; heroic.

Musidorus was famous over all Asia for his heroic enterprises. Sidney.

Though you have courage in an heroic degree,
I ascribe it to you as your second attribute. Dryden.

HEROICALLY. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of a hero; suitably to a hero.

Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin. Sidney.

Free from all meaning, whether good or bad;
And, in one word, heroically mad. Dryden.

HEROICK. adj. [from hero; heroique, Fr.]

1. Productive of heroes.

Bolingbroke
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that heroick line. Shaksp.

2. Noble; suitable to a hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.

Not that which justly gives heroick name
To person, or to poem. Milton.

Verse makes heroick virtue live,
But you can life to verses give. Waller.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes. Used of poetry.

Methinks heroick poetry, 'till now,
Like some fantastick fairy land did shew. Cowley.

I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and successes of a most just and necessary war. Dryd.

An heroick poem is the greatest work which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.

HEROICKLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to a hero. Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.

Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroickly hath finish'd
A life heroick. Milton.

HEROINE. n. f. [from hero; heroine, French.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heroess.

But inborn worth, that fortune can controul,
New-strung, and stiffer bent her softer soul;
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

Then shall the British stage
More noble characters expose to view,
And draw her finish'd heroines from you. Addison.

HEROISM. n. f. [heroisme, French.] The qualities or character of a hero.

If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. Broome.

HERON. n. f. [heron, French.]

1. A bird that feeds upon fish.

So lords, with sport of stag and heron full,
Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull. Sidney.

The heron, when she soareth high, sheweth winds. Bacon.

2. It is now commonly pronounced hern.

The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing,
Who terror bears upon his soaring wing;
Let them on high the frighted hern survey,
And lofty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay.

HERONRY. } n. f. [from heron, com-
HERONSHAW. } monly pronounced hern-

ry.] A place where herons breed.

They carry their load to a large heronry above three miles. Derham's Physico-Theology.

HERPES. n. f. [ἑρπης.] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds: miliaris, or pustularis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and excedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers. Quincy.

A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and, if the access of acrimony be very great, it maketh an herpes excedens. Wifeman.

HE'RRING. n. f. [hareng, Fr. hæring, Saxon.] A small sea fish.

The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, herring, mackrel, and cod. Carew.

Buy my herring fresh. Swift.

HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is her house, this house is hers. See HER.

How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears;

If so, my eyes are oftner wash'd than hers. Shaksp.

Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers;

For all the miserable are made hers. Waller.

I see her rowling eyes;

And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries;
With words not hers, and more than human sound,
She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

HERSE. n. f. [herfia, low Latin; supposed to come from hepian, to praise.] This is likewise written hearse; see HEARSE.

1. A temporary monument raised over a grave.

2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.

When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' herse,

Who does not weep that reads the moving verse? Roscommon.

On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,

And frequent herfes shall besiege your gates. Pope.

To HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a herse.

I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would she were hers'd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin. Shaksp.

Shaksp.'s Merchant of Venice.

The Grecians spitefully drew from the darts the corse,

And hers'd it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman.

The house is hers'd about with a black wood,

Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree. Crashaw.

HERSELF. pronoun.

1. A female individual, as distinguished from others.

The jealous o'er-worn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shaksp.

2. Being in her own power; mistress of her own thoughts.

The more she looks, the more her fears increase,

At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryd.

3. The oblique case of the reciprocal pronoun: as, she hurt herself.

The daughter of Pharaoh came down wash herself.

She returned answer to herself. Judges.

HERSELIKE. adj. [herse and like.] Funereal; suitable to funerals.

Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herse-like airs as carols. Bacon.

To HERY. v. a. [hepian, Saxon, to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.

Thenot, now nis the time of merrymake,
Nor Pan to hery, nor with love to play;
Like mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser.

But were thy years green as now be mine,
Then wouldst thou learn to carol of love,
And hery with hymns thy last's glove. Spenser.
HE'SITANCY. n. f. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspense.

The reason of my hesitancy about the air is, that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals, exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopped. Boyle.

Some of them reasoned without doubt or hesi- tancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to show that they believed their own reasonings. Atterbury.

To HE'SITATE. v. a. [hesito, Latin;
hesiter, French.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.

A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Gre-cians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Pope.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HESITATION. n. f. [from hesitate.]

1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.
I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each peruser. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. Intermision of speech; want of volu-bility.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HEST. n. f. [hæst, Saxon.] Command; precept; injunction. Obsolete, or written behest.

Thou dost afflict the not deserver,
As him that doth thy lovely hests despise. Spenser.
Thou wast a spirit too delicate

To act her earthy and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand hests. Shakspeare.

HE'TEROCLITE. n. f. [heteroclite, Fr.
heteroclitum, Latin; ἑτεροκλίτης and κλίτης.]

1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect, or otherwise. Clarke.

The heteroclite nouns of the Latin should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Watts.

2. Any thing or person deviating from the common rule.

HETEROCLITICAL. adj. [from heteroclite.]
Deviating from the common rule.

In the mention of fins heteroclitical, and such as want either name or precedent, there is oft times a sin, even in their histories. Brown.

HETERODOX. adj. [heterodoxe, French; ἑτεροδοξ and δόξα.] Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.

Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar,
in others to heterodox tenets. Locke.

HETERODOX. n. f. An opinion peculiar.
Not only a simple heterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated into the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HETEROGE'NEAL. adj. [heterogene, Fr.
ἑτερογενής and γένος.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.

Let the body adjacent and ambient be not commaterial, but merely heterogeneal towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Bacon.

The light whose rays are all alike refrangible,
I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneal, and dissimilar. Newton.

HETEROGENE'ITY. n. f. [heterogeneité,
French, from heterogeneous.]

1. Opposition of nature; contrariety or dissimilitude of qualities.

2. Opposite or dissimilar part.

Guaiacum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is sequestered into ashes and soot; whereas the same wood, distilled into a retort, does yield far other heterogeneities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water, and charcoal. Boyle.

HETEROGE'NEOUS. adj. [ἑτερος and γένος.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature.

I have observed such heterogeneous bodies, which I found included in the mass of this sandstone. Woodward.

HETERO'SCIANS. n. f. [ἑτερος and σκία.]
Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the tropick fall at noon always to the north.

To HEW. v. a. part. hewn or hewed.
[heapan, Saxon; hauwen, Dutch.]

1. To cut by blows with an edged instrument; to hack.

Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain
Spenser.

I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose my arm for 't. Shakspeare.
He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends.
Hayward.

One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured. Hayward.

2. To chop; to cut.

He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew.
Dryden.

3. To cut, as with an axe: with the particles down, when it signifies to fell;
up, to excavate from below; off, to separate.

He that depends Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakspeare.
Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny
wood,
Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.
Shakspeare.

Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:
Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint.
Shakspeare.

Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.
He from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of a huge bulk. Milton.
We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And hew down all that would oppose our passage.
Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe: with out.

Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that hewed him out a sepulchre on high. Isaiah.
Nor is it so proper to hew out religious reformations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations. King Charles.
This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks. Addison on Italy.

5. To form laboriously.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame;
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god. Dryden's Fables.
Next unto bricks are prefer'd the square hewn
stone. Mortimer.

I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than hewing out new.

Pope to Swift.

HE'WER. n. f. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains.
Brown.

HEXAGON. n. f. [hexagone, French;
ἑξ and γωνία.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.

HEXA'GONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered. Brown.

Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal. Ray.

HEXA'GONY. n. f. [from hexagon.] A

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonies, or sexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians?

HEXA'METER. n. f. [ἑξ and μέτρον.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroick. Dryden.

HEXA'NGULAR. adj. [ἑξ and angulus,
Latin.] Having six corners.

Hexangular sprigs or shoots of crystal. Woodward.

HE'XAPOD. n. f. [ἑξ and πόδες.] An animal with six feet.

I take those to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come, for that sort of hexapods are eaten in America. Ray.

HEXA'STICK. n. f. [ἑξ and στίχος.] A poem of six lines.

HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation: the contrary to the Latin hei.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bless the town with peaceful lyric;
Then hey for praise and panegyrick. Prior.

HEY'DAY. interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolick and exultation, and sometimes of wonder.

Thou'lt say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such heyday wit in praising him.
Shakspeare.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday! Hudibras.

HEY'DAY. n. f. A frolick; wildness.

At your age
The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment. Shakspeare.

HEYDEGIVES. n. f. A wild frolick dance. Obsolete.

But friendly fairies met with many graces,
And light-foot nymphs can chase the ling'ring night

With heydegives, and trimly trodden traces.
Spenser.

HIA'TION. n. f. [from hio, Latin.] The act of gaping.

Men observing the continual hiation, or holding open the camelion's mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HIA'TUS. n. f. [hiatus, Latin.]

1. An aperture; a gaping breach.

Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below opens into and communicates with it. Woodward.

2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.

The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself. Pope.

HIBERNAL. adj. [hibernus, Lat.] Belonging to the winter.

This star should rather manifest its warming power in the winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conversion. Brown.

HICCIUS DOCCIUS. n. s. [Corrupted, I fancy, from hic est doctus, this, or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull sot, who told the clock
For many years at Bridewell dock,
At Westminster and Hick's hall,
And hiccus doccus play'd in all;
Where, in all governments and times,
H' had been both friend and foe to crimes.

Hudibras.

HICCOUGH. n. s. [hicken, Danish.] A convulsion of the stomach producing sobs.

So by an abbey's skeleton of late
I heard an echo supererogate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if he had the hiccough o'er and o'er. Cleveland.
Sneezing cures the hiccough, and is profitable unto women in hard labour. Brown.
If the stomach be hurt, singultus or hiccough follows. Wiseman.

To HICCOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.]

To sob with convulsion of the stomach.

To HICKUP. v. n. [corrupted from hiccough.] To sob with a convulsed stomach.

Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My beard to grow, my ears to prick up,
Or, when I'm in a fit, to hickup. Hudibras.

HICKWALL. } n. s. A bird. Ainsworth.

HICKWAY. }

HID. }

HIDDEN. } The part. pass. of hide.

Thus fame shall be achiev'd, renown on earth;
And what most merits fame, in silence hid. Milton.

Other hidden cause

Left them superior. Milton.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night:
God said, Let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

To HIDE. v. a. pret. hid; part. pass. hid or hidden. [hidan, Sax.] To conceal; to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.

Avant, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee! Shakspeare.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakspeare.

Nile hears him knocking at his sev'nfold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates. Dryden.

Thus the fire of gods and men below;
What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.

The sev'ral parts lay hidden in the piece;
Th' occasion but excited that, or this. Dryden.

Then for my corps a homely grave provide,
Which love and me from publick scorn may hide. Dryden.

Seas hid with navies, chariots passing o'er
The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore. Dryden.

With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted sources of perfection? Addison.

The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himself under a greater variety of shapes. Addison.

VOL. I.

Hell trembles at the sight, and hides its head
In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart Is fill'd with peace. Rowe's Royal Convert.

To HIDE. v. n. To lie hid; to be concealed.

A fox, hard run, begged of a countryman to help him to some hiding place. L'Estrange.

Our bolder talents in full view display'd;
Your virtues open fairest in the shade:
Bred to disguise, in publick 'tis you hide, Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride, Weakness or delicacy. Pope.

HIDE and SEEK. n. s. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.

The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in my hair. Gulliver.

HIDE. n. s. [hyde, Sax. haude, Dut.]

1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.

The trembling weapon past
Through nine bull hides each under other plac'd
On his broad shield. Dryden.
Pisistratus was first to grasp their hands,
And spread soft hides upon the yellow sands. Pope.

2. The human skin: in contempt.

Oh, tyger's heart, wrapt in a woman's hide!
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child? Shakspeare.

His mantle, now his hide, with rugged hairs
Cleaves to his back; a famish'd face he bears. Dryden.

3. A certain quantity of land. [Hide, hyde, French; bida, barbarous Latin,
as much as one plough can till.] Ainsw.

One of the first things was a more particular inquisition than had been before of every hide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Wotton.

HIDBOUND. adj. [hide and bound.]

1. A horse is said to be hidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from overriding, or a surfeit. Farrier's Dict.

2. [In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.
A root of a tree may be hidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it. Bacon's Natural History.

Like stunted hidebound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Swift.

3. Harsh; untractable.

And still the harsher and hidebinder
The damsels prove, become the fonder. Hudib.

4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious. Ainsworth.

HIDEOUS. adj. [hideux, French.]

1. Horrible; dreadful; shocking.

If he could have turned himself to as many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made hideous. Sidney.

Some monster in thy thoughts,
Too hideous to be shewn. Shakspeare's Othello.

I fled, and cry'd out death!
Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back re-founded death. Milton.

Her eyes grew stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn;
Her hideous looks and hellish form return;
Her curling snakes with hissing fill the place,
And open all the furies of her face. Dryden.

2. It is commonly used of risible objects:
the following use is less authorized.

'Tis forced through the hiatuses at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible disorder, making it rage and roar with a most hideous and amazing noise. Woodward's Natural Hist.

3. It is used by Spenser in a sense not now retained; detestable.

O hideous hanger of dominion! Spenser.

HIDEOUSLY. adv. [from hideous.] Hor-ribly; dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.

I arm myself

To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakspeare.

This, in the present application, is hideously profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier.

HIDEOUSNESS. n. s. [from hideous.]
Horribleness; dreadfulness; terror.

HIDER. n. s. [from the verb.] He that hides.

To HIE. v. n. [hiegan, Saxon.]

1. To hasten; to go in haste.

When they had mark'd the changed skies,
They wist their hour was spent; then each to rest him hies. Fairy Queen.

My will is even this,
That presently you hie you home to bed. Shak.

Well, I will hie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Shakspeare.

Some to the shores do fly,
Some to the woods, or whither fear advis'd;
But running from, all to destruction hie. Daniel.

The snake no sooner hie,
But virtue heard it, and away she hy'd. Crashaw.

Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a cursed hour, he hies. Milton.

Thus he advis'd me, on yon aged tree
Hang up thy lute, and hie thee to the sea. Waller.

The youth, returning to his mistress, hies. Dryden.

2. It was anciently used with or without the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.

Auster spy'd him;
Cruel Auster thither hy'd him. Crashaw.

HIERARCH. n. s. [hieros and arche; hier- rarque, French.] The chief of a sacred order.

Angels, by imperial summons call'd,
Forthwith from all the ends of heav'n appear'd,
Under their hierarchs in orders bright. Milton.

HIERARCHICAL. adj. [hierarchique, Fr.]
Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.

HIERARCHY. n. s. [hierarchie, French.]

1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings.

Out of the hierarchies of angels shewn,
The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the rest. Fairfax.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes

In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

Jehovah, from the summit of the sky,
Environ'd with his winged hierarchy,
The world survey'd. Sandys.

These the supreme king
Exalted to such pow'r, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright. Milton.

The blessedest of mortal wights, now questionless the highest saint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so importuned, that a great part of the divine liturgy was addressed solely to her. Howel.

2. Ecclesiastical establishment.

The presbytery had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.

While the old Levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to slay the sacrifices.

Consider what I have written, from regard for the church established under the hierarchy of bishops.

HIEROGLYPH. } n. f. [hieroglyph, French; ἱερό, sacred, and γλύφω, to carve.]

1. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied. Hieroglyphicks were used before the alphabet was invented. Hieroglyph seems to be the proper substantive, and hieroglyphick the adjective.

This hieroglyphick of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire.

A lamp amongst the Egyptians is the hieroglyphick of life.

The first writing men used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyphick.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd, And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd.

2. The art of writing in picture.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign any animals as patrons of punch.

HIEROGLYPHICAL. } adj. [hieroglyphique, French; from the noun.] Emblematical; expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.

In this place stands a stately hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble.

The Egyptian serpent figures time, And stripp'd, returns into his prime; If my affection, thou would'st win, First cast thy hieroglyphick skin.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and, by a process of tradition, stole into a total verity, which was but partly true in its morality.

HIEROGLYPHICALLY. adv. [from hieroglyphical.] Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically as the Egyptians, and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun.

HIEROGRAPHY. n. f. [ἱερός and γράφω.] Holy writing.

HIEROPHANT. n. f. [ἱεροφάντης.] One who teaches rules of religion; a priest.

Herein the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests and hierophants, abundantly gratified the fancies of the people.

TO HIGGLE. v. n. [of uncertain etymology, probably corrupted from haggle.]

1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain. In good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to higgle and dodge in the amends.

Base thou art! To higgle thus for a few blows, To gain thy knight an op'lent spouse. Why all this higgling with thy friend about such a paltry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull?

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning, such provisions being cut into small quantities.

HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY. adv. A cant word, corrupted from higgle, which denotes any confused mass, as higglers carry a huddle of provisions together.

HIGGLER. n. f. [from higgle.] One who sells provisions by retail.

HIGH. adj. [heah, Saxon; hoog, Dut.] 1. Long upward; rising above from the surface, or from the centre: opposed to deep, or long downward.

Their Andes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining, they must of necessity at length come to an equality.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft: opposed to low.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them,

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,

That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabrick; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal being.

3. Exalted in nature. The highest faculty of the soul.

4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest.

He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor.

O mortals! blind in fate, who never know To bear high fortune, or endure the low.

5. Exalted in sentiment. Solomon liv'd at ease, nor aim'd beyond Higher design than to enjoy his state.

6. Difficult; abstruse. They meet to hear, and answer such high things.

7. Boastful; ostentatious. His forces, after all the high discourses, amounted really but to eighteen hundred foot.

8. Arrogant; proud; lofty. The governor made himself merry with his high and threatening language, and sent him word he would neither give nor receive quarter.

9. Severe; oppressive. When there appeareth on either side an high hand, violent prosecution, cunning advantages taken, and combination, then is the virtue of a judge seen.

10. Noble; illustrious. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

11. Violent; tempestuous; loud. Applied to the wind. More ships in calms on a deceitful coast, Or unseen rocks, than in high storms are lost.

12. Tumultuous; turbulent; ungovernable. Not only tears Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds worse within, Began to rise; high passions, anger, Mistrust, suspicion, discord, hate, shook fore Their inward state of mind.

Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show,

Or exercise their spite in human woe? Dryden.

13. Full; complete: applied to time; now used only in cursory speech.

High time now 'gan it wax for Una fair, To think of those her captive parents dear.

Sweet warrior, when shall I have peace with you?

High time it is this war now ended were.

It was high time to do so, for it was now certain that forces were already upon their march towards the west.

It was high time for the lords to look about them.

14. Raised to any great degree: as, high pleasure; high luxury; a high performance; a high colour.

Solomon liv'd at ease, and full Of honour, wealth, high fare.

High fauces and spices are fetch'd from the Indies.

15. Advancing in latitude from the line. They are forced to take their course either high to the north, or low to the south.

16. At the most perfect state; in the meridian: as, by the sun it is high noon: whence probably the foregoing expression, high time.

It is yet high day, neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered.

17. Far advanced into antiquity. The nominal observation of the several days of the week is very high, and as old as the ancient Egyptians, who named the same according to the seven planets.

18. Dear; exorbitant in price. If they must be good at so high a rate, they know they may be safe at a cheaper.

19. Capital; great; opposed to little: as, high treason, in opposition to petty.

HIGH. n. f. High place; elevation; superior region: only used with from and on.

Which when the king of gods beheld from high,

He sigh'd.

ON HIGH. adv. Aloft; above; into superior regions.

Wide is the fronting gate, and raised on high, With adamant columns threats the sky.

HIGH is much used in composition with variety of meaning.

HIGH-BLEST. adj. Supremely happy.

The good which we enjoy from heav'n descends; But that from us ought should ascend to heav'n, So prevalent, as to concern the mind

Of God high-blest, or to incline his will, Hard to belief may seem.

HIGH-BLOWN. Swelled much with wind; much inflated.

I have ventur'd, Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders, These many summers on a sea of glory;

But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride

At length broke under me, and now has left me, Weary, and old with service, to the mercy

Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.

HIGH-BORN. Of noble extraction.

Cast round your eyes Upon the high-born beauties of the court;

There chuse some worthy partner of your heart.

HIGH-BUILT. adj.

1. Of lofty structure. I know him by his stride, The giant Harapha of Gath; his look Haughty as is his pile, high-built and proud.

H. Covered with lofty buildings.

In dreadful wars
The high-built elephant his castle rears,
Looks down on man below, and strikes the stars.
Greech.

She openly professeth herself to be a high-flier; and it is not improbable she may also be a papist at heart.
Swift.

HIGH-FLOWN. adj. [high and flown, from fly.]1. Elevated; proud.

This stiff neck'd pride nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-flown hopes to reason's lure descend.
Denham.

2. Turgid; extravagant.

This fable is a high-flown hyperbole upon the miseries of marriage.
L'Estrange.

HIGH-FLY'ING. Extravagant in claims or opinions.

Clip the wings
Of their high-flying arbitrary kings.
Dryden.

HIGH-HE'APED. *adj.1. Covered with high piles.

The plenteous board high-heap'd with cates divine,
And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine.
Pope.

2. Raised into high piles.

I saw myself the vast unnumber'd store
Of brags, high-heap'd amidst the regal dome.
Pope.

HIGH-HE'ELED. Having the heel of the shoe much raised.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench:
Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots. Shakspeare.
This idle toy, this hilding scorns my power,
And sets us all at nought. Rowe's Jane Shore.

HILL. n. f. [hil, Saxon.] An elevation of ground less than a mountain.

My sheep are thoughts, which I both guide and serve;
Their pasture is fair hills of fruitless love. Sidney.
Jerusalem is seated on two hills,
Of height unlike, and turned side to side. Fairf.

Three sides are sure imbar'd with craggs and hills,
The rest is easy, scant to rise espy'd;
But mighty bulwarks fence the plainer part:
So art helps nature, nature strengtheneth art.

Fairfax.

When our eye some prospect would pursue,
Descending from a hill, looks round to view.

Granville.

A hill is nothing but the nest of some metal or mineral which, by a plastick virtue, and the efficacy of subterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their substance, do increase and grow.

Cheyne.

HILLOCK. n. f. [from hill.] A little hill.

Yet weigh this, alas! great is not great to the greater:

What, judge ye, doth a hillock show by the lofty Olympus.

Sidney.

Sometime walking not unseen,
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green.

Milton.

This mountain, and a few neighbouring hillocks that lie scattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of these dominions.

Addison.

HILLY. adj. [from hill.] Full of hills; unequal in the surface.

Towards the hilly corners of Druina remain her very yet aborigines, thrust amongst an assembly of mountains.

Howel.

Climbing to a hilly steep,
He views his herds in vales afar.

Dryden.

Lo! how the Norrick plains
Rise hilly, with large piles of slaughter'd knights.

Philips.

Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, though a man would chuse to travel through a plain one.

Addison.

HILT. n. f. [hilt, Saxon, from healdan, to hold.] The handle of any thing, particularly of a sword.

Now sits expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial; crowns and coronets.

Shakespeare.

Take thou the hilt,
And when my face is cover'd as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword.
Be his this sword, whose blade of brags displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt, a silver blaze.

Pope's Odyssey.

HIM. [him, Saxon.]

1. The oblique case of he.

Me he restored unto my office, and him he hanged.

Genesis.

2. Him was anciently used for it in a neutral sense.

The subjunctive mood hath evermore some conjunction joined with him.

Accidence.

HIMSELF. pron. [him and self.]

1. In the nominative the same as he, only more emphatical, and more expressive of individual personality.

It was a sparing speech of the ancients to say, that a friend is another himself; for that a friend is far more than himself.

Bacon.

With shame remembers, while himself was one
Of the same herd, himself the same had done.

Denham.

2. It is added to a personal pronoun or noun, by way of emphatical discrimination.

He himself returned again.

Judges.

3. In ancient authors it is used neutrally for itself.

She is advanc'd
Above the clouds as high as heav'n himself.

Shakespeare.

4. In the oblique cases it has a reciprocal signification.

David hid himself in the field.

Samuel.

5. It is sometimes not reciprocal.

I perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit set a work by a reproveable badness in himself.

Shakespeare.

Nothing in nature can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy.

South.

By HIMSELF. Alone; unaccompanied.

Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself.

Kings.

HIN. n. f. [hin, Saxon.] A measure of liquids among Jews, containing about ten pints.

With the one lamb a tenth deal of flour, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil.

Exodus.

HIND. adj. compar. hinder; superl. hindmost. [hýndan, Saxon.] Backward; contrary in position to the face: as, hind legs. See HINDER and HINDMOST.

Bringing its tail to its head, it bends its back so far till its head comes to touch its hind part, and so with its armour gathers itself into a ball.

Ray.

The stag Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more,
And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore.

Pope.

HIND. n. f. [hinde, Saxon, from hinnus, Latin.]

1. The she to a stag; the female of red deer.

How he flew, with glancing dart amiss,
A gentle hind, the which the lovely boy
Did love as life.

Fairy Queen.

Can'st thou mark when the hinds do calve?

Job.

Nor Hercules more lands or labours knew,
Not though the brazen-footed hind he flew.

Dryden.

2. [hine, Saxon.] A servant.

A couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their mistress, to carry me in the name of foul cloaths to Datchet-lane.

Shaksp.

3. [hineman, Saxon.] A peasant; a boor; a mean rustick.

The Dutch, who came like greedy hinds before,
To reap the harvest their ripe years did yield,
Now look like those, when rolling thunders roar,
And sheets of lightning blast the standing field.

Dryden.

He cloath'd himself in coarse array,
A lab'ring hind in shew.

Dryden's Fables.

HINDBERRIES. n. f. The same as raspberries.

Ainsworth.

To HINDER. v. a. [hindyrian, Saxon.]

To obstruct; to stop; to let; to impede.

Hinder me not, seeing the Lord hath prospered my way.

Genesis.

The whole world shined with clear light, and none were hindered in their labour.

Wisdom.

If the alms were hindered only by entreaty, the hinderer is not tied to restitution, because entreaty took not liberty away from the giver.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Solitude damps thought and wit; too much company dissipates and hinders it from fixing.

Temple.

What hinders younger brothers, being fathers of families, from having the same right.

Locke.

To HINDER. v. n. To raise hinderances; to cause impediment.

You minimus of *hinder*ing knot-grafs made!

Shakespeare.

This objection hinders not but that the heroick action of some commander, enterprised for the christian cause, and executed happily, may be written.

Dryden.

HINDER. adj. [from hind.] That is in a position contrary to that of the face: opposed to fore.

Bears, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet; and so this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement.

Sidney.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back.

Addison.

HINDERANCE. n. f. [from hinder.] Impediment; let; stop; obstruction: with of, sometimes with to, before the thing hindered; with to before the person.

False opinions, touching the will of God to have things done, are wont to bring forth mighty and violent practices against the hinderances of them, and those practices new opinions, more pernicious than the first: yea, most extremely sometimes opposite to the first.

Hooker.

They must be in every christian church the same, except mere impossibility of so having it be the hinderance.

Hooker.

What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of what is well done?

Dryden.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove.

His fellow's hinderance in pursuit of love? Dryd.

He must conquer all these difficulties, and remove all these hinderances out of the way that leads to justice.

Atterbury.

HINDERER. n. f. [from hinder.] He or that which hinders or obstructs.

Brakes, great hinderers of all plowing, grow.

May.

HINDERLING. n. f. [from hind or hinder.] A paltry, worthless, degenerate animal.

HINDERMOST. adj. [This word seems to be less proper than hindmost.] Hindmost; last; in the rear.

He put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindermost.

Genesis.

Like to an enter'd tide they all rush by,
And leave you hindermost.

Shakespeare.

HINDMOST. adj. [hind and most.] The last; the lag; that comes in the rear.

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,
Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

He met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind.

Deuteronomy.

Let him retire, betwixt two ages cast,
The first of this, and hindmost of the last,
A losing gamester.

Dryden.

The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;
So take the hindmost, hell—he said, and run.

Pope.

HINGE. n. f. [or hingle, from hangle or hang.]

1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.

At the gate
Of heav'n arriv'd, the gate self-open'd wide,
On golden hinges turning.

Milton.

Then from the hinge their strokes the gates divorce,
And where the way they cannot find, they force.

Denham.

Heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high;
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd.

Dryden.

2. The cardinal points of the world, east, west, north, and south.

If when the moon is in the hinge at east,
The birth breaks forward from its native rest;
Full eighty years, if you two years abate,
This station gives.

Creech's Manilius.

3. A governing rule or principle.

The other hinge of punishment might turn upon a law, whereby all men, who did not marry

H I P

By the age of five and twenty, should pay the third part of their revenue. Temple.

4. To be off the HINGES. To be in a state of irregularity and disorder.

The man's spirit is out of order, and off the hinges; and till that be put into its right frame, he will be perpetually disquieted. Tillotson.

Methinks we stand on ruins, nature shakes About us, and this universal frame So loose, that it but wants another push To leap from off its hinges. Dryden.

To HINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with hinges.

2. To bend as a hinge.

Be thou a flatt'rer now, and hinge the knee, And let his very breath, whom thou'lt observe, Blow off thy cap. Shakspeare.

To HINT. v. a. [enter, French, Skinner.]

To bring to mind by a slight mention, or remote allusion; to mention imperfectly.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike, Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike. Pope.

In waking whispers, and repeated dreams, To hint pure thought, and warn the favour'd soul. Thomson.

To HINT at. To allude to; to touch slightly upon.

Speaking of Augustus's actions, he still remembers that agriculture ought to be some way hinted at throughout the whole poem. Addison.

HINT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Faint notice given to the mind; remote allusion; distant insinuation.

Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations, the first hints and whispers of good and evil, that pass in his heart. South.

2. Suggestion; intimation.

On this hint I spake, She lov'd me for the dangers I had past. Shakspeare.

Actions are so full of circumstances, that, as men observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put different interpretations on them. Addison.

HIP. n. f. [from heopa, Saxon.] The fruit of the brier or the dogrose.

Eating hips, and drinking wat'ry foam.

Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots; Hubbard's Tale.

Years of store of haws and hips do commonly portend cold winters. Bacon's Natural History.

HIP. n. f. [hype, Saxon.]

1. The joint of the thigh.

How now, which of your hips has the most profound sciatica? Shakspeare.

Hippocrates affirmeth of the Scythians, that, using continual riding, they were generally molested with the sciatica or hip gout. Brown.

2. The haunch; the flesh of the thigh.

So shepherds use

To set the same mark on the hip

Both of their sound and rotten sheep. Hudibras.

Against a stump his tusks the monster grinds,

And ranch'd his hips with one continu'd wound. Dryden.

3. To have on the HIP. [A low phrase.]

To have an advantage over another.

It seems to be taken from hunting, the hip or haunch of a deer being the part commonly seized by the dogs.

If this poor brach of Venice, whom I cherish

For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,

I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip. Shakspeare.

To HIP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sprain or shoot the hip.

His horse was hipp'd. Shakspeare.

2. HIP-HOP. A cant word formed by the reduplication of hop.

H I R

Your different tastes divide our poet's cares; One foot the sock, t'other the buskin wears: Thus, while he strives to please, he's forc'd to do 't,

Like Volscius hip-hop in a single boot. Congreve.

Hir. interject. An exclamation, or calling to one; the same as the Latin cho, heus! Ainsworth.

HIP. } adj. A corruption of hypo-
HIPPISH. } chondriack. Ainsworth.

HIPPOCENTAUR. n. f. [ἵππος and ταύρος; hippocentaure, Fr.] A fabulous monster, half horse, and half man.

How are poetical fictions, how are hippocentaurs and chimeras to be imagined, which are things quite out of nature, and whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.

HIPPOCRAS. n. f. [hypocras, Fr. quasi vinum Hippocratis.] A medicated wine.

Sack and the well-spiced hippocras, the wine, Waffail the bowl, with ancient ribbands fine. King.

Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him. Sidney.

To Hiss. v. n. [hissen, Dutch.]

1. To utter a noise like that of a serpent and some other animals. It is remarkable, that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noise which it signifies.

In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames and cooled glowing hot, in that furge, like a horseshoe; think of that; hissing
hot. Shaksp.

The merchants shall hiss at thee. Ezekiel.

See the furies arise:

See the snakes that they rear,
How they hiss in their hair. Dryden.

Against the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierced through the yielding planks. Dryden.

2. To condemn at a publick exhibition; which is sometimes done by hissing.

Men shall pursue with merited disgrace!

Hiss, clap their hands, and from his country
chace. Sandys.

To Hiss. v. a. [hircan, Saxon.]

1. To condemn by hissing; to explode.

Every one will hiss him out to his disgrace.

Eccles.

She would so shamefully fail in the last act, that, instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hissed off the stage. More.

I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off, and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.

Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hissed out of all the courts as ridiculous?
Collier on Duelling.

2. To procure hisses or disgrace.

Thy mother plays, and I Play too; but so disgrac'd a part, whose issue Will hiss me to my grave. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

What's the newest grief?
—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker,
Each minute teems a new one. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Hiss. n. s. [from the verb.]

other animals.

He hiss for hiss return'd, with forked tongue.
To forked tongue. Milton.

2. Censure; expression of contempt used in theatres.

He heard

On all sides, from innumerable tongues,
A dismal universal hiss, the sound
Of publick scorn! Milton.

Fierce champion fortitude, that knows no fears

Of hisses, blows, or want, or loss of ears. Pope.

Hist. interj. [Of this word I know not the original: some thought it a corruption of hush, hush it, hush it, hush; but I have heard that it is an Irish verb commanding silence.] An exclamation commanding silence.

Mute silence hiss along!

'Lest philomel will deign a song,
In her sweetest saddest plight,
Smoothing the rugged brow of night. Milton.
Hiss, hiss, says another that stood by, away, doctor; for here's a whole pack of dismals coming. Swift.

HISTORIAN. n. s. [historicus, Lat. historien, Fr.] A writer of facts and events;
a writer of history.

What thanks sufficient, or what recompence
Equal, have I to render thee, divine
Historian! Milton.

Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians. Addison.

Not added years on years my task could close,
The long historian of my country's woes. Pope.

HISTORICAL. } adj. [historique, Fr.
HISTORICK. } historicus, Latin:]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

In an historical relation we use terms that are most proper and best known. Burnet's Theory.

Here rising bold the patriot's honest face;
There warriors frowning in historick brags. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.

With equal justice and historick care,
Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.

HISTORICALLY. adv. [from historical.]

In the manner of history; by way of narration.

The gospels, which are weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered in his own person. Hooker.

When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we construe as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God? Hooker.

After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him. Pope's Essay on Homer.

To HISTORIFY. v. a. [from history.]

To relate; to record in history.

O, muse, historify

Her praise, whose praise to learn your skill hath framed me. Sidney.

The third age they term historicon; that is,
such wherein matters have been more truly
historified, and therefore may be believed. Brown.

HISTORIOGRAPHER. n. s. [isogia and γραφω; historiographie, French.] A historian; a writer of history.

The method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

What poor ideas must strangers conceive of persons famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those our historiographers. Addison.

I put the journals into a strong box, after the manner of the historiographers of some eastern monarchs. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. s. [isogia and γραφω.] The art or employment of a historian.

HISTORY. n. s. [isogia; historia, Lat.
histoire, French.]

1. A narration of events and facts delivered with dignity.

Justly Cæsar scorns the poet's lays;
It is to history he trusts for praise. Pope.

2. Narration; relation.

The history part lay within a little room. Wise man.
What histories of toil could I declare?

But still long-weary'd nature wants repair. Pope.

3. The knowledge of facts and events.

History, so far as it relates to the affairs of the bible, is necessary to divines. Watts.

HISTORY Piece. n. s. A picture representing some memorable event.

His works resemble a large history piece, where even the less important figures have some convenient place. Pope.

HISTRIONICAL. } adj. [from histrion,
HISTRIONICK. } Latin; histrion, French.] Befitting the stage; suitable to a player; becoming a buffoon;

HISTRIONICALLY. adv. [from histrio-nical.] Theatrically; in the manner of a buffoon.

To HIT. v. a. [from idus, Latin, Minshew; from hitte Danish, to throw at random, Junius.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.

When I first saw her I was presently stricken;
and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing hits him will strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived. Sidney.

His conscience shall hit him in the teeth, and tell him his sin and folly. South.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.

Is he a god that ever flies the light?
Or naked he, disguis'd in all untruth?
If he be blind, how hitteth he so right? Sidney.
So hard it is to tremble, and not to err, and to hit the mark with a shaking hand. South.

3. To attain; to reach; not to fail:
used of tentative experiments.

Were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is so hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him. Shaksp.

Search every comment that your care can find,
Some here, some there, may hit the poet's mind.
Roscommon.

Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to hit the notes right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns. Locke.

Here's an opportunity to shew how great a bungler my author is in hitting features.

Atterbury.

4. To suit; to be conformable to.

Hail, divinest melancholy!
Whose faintly visage is too bright
To hit the sense of human sight. Milton.

5. To strike; to catch by the right bait;
to touch properly.

There you hit him: St. Dominick loves charity exceedingly: that argument never fails with him. Dryden.

6. To HIT off. To strike out; to fix or determine luckily.

What prince soever can hit off this great secret, need know no more either for his own safety, or that of the people he governs. Temple.

7. To HIT out. To perform by good luck.

Having the sound of ancient poets ringing in his ears, he mought needs in singing hit out some of their tunes. Spenser.

To HIT. v. n.

1. To clash; to collide.

If bodies be extension alone, how can they move and hit one against another? or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension?
Locke.

Bones, teeth, and shells, being sustained in the water with metallick corpuscles, and the said corpuscles meeting with and hitting upon those bodies, become conjoined with them. Woodward.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident; not to miss.

Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it hits
Where hope is coldest and despair most sits.
Shaksp.

3. To succeed; not to miscarry.

The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it hits for the most part. Bacon's Natural History.

But thou bring'st valour too and wit,
Two things that seldom fail to hit. Hudibras.
This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible. Dryden.

All human race would fain be wits,
And millions miss for one that hits. Swift.

4. To light on.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it. Bacon.

You've hit upon the very string, which touch'd,
Echoes the sound, and jars within my soul;
There lies my grief. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing sooner: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon it. Tillotson.

There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon 't, when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg. L'Estrange.

None of them hit upon the art. Addison.
There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design. Bentley.

Hit. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke.

The king hath laid, that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

So he the fam'd Cilician fencer prais'd
And at each hit with wonder seem amaz'd. Dryden.

2. A chance; a fortuitous event.

To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Granville.

If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill, but chance; not a true judgment, but a lucky hit. South.

But with more lucky hit than those That use to make the stars depose. Hudibras.

The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Estrange.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and hits fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring? Blackmore.

3. A lucky chance.

Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit? Shakspeare.

These hits of words a true poet often finds,
Without seeking. Dryden.

If at first he minds his hits,
And drinks champagne among the wits,
Five deep he toasts the tow'ring lasses. Prior.

To HITCH. v. n. [hriegan, Saxon, or bocher, French. Skinner.] To catch; to move by jerks. I know not where it is used but in the following passage; nor here know well what it means.

Whoe'er offends at some unlucky time
Slides in a verse, or hitches in a rhyme;
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song. Pope.

To HITCHEL. v. a. [See HATCHEL.]

To beat or comb flax or hemp.

HITCHEL. n. f. [heckel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten or combed.

haven to land wares out of vessels or boats: as Queenhithe, and Lambhithe, now Lambeth.

HI'THER. adv. [hriðen, Saxon.]

1. To this place from some other.

Cæsar, tempted with the fame
Of this sweet island, never conquered,
And envying the Britons blazed name,
O hideous hunger of dominion! hither came. Spenser.

Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither. Shakspeare.

Who brought me hither
Will bring me hence, no other guide I seek. Milton.

2. It is used in opposition: hither and thither, to this place and that.3. To this end; to this design; to this topick of argument: [huc, Latin. Huc refer exitum.] Not much used.

Hereupon dependeth whatsoever difference there is between the states of saints in glory; hither we refer whatsoever belongeth unto the highest perfection of man, by way of service towards God. Hooker.

Hither belong all those texts, which require of us that we should not walk after the flesh, but after the spirit. Tillotson.

HI'THER. adj. superl. hithermost. Nearer; toward this part.

After these,
But on the hither side, a different sort,
From the high neighbor'ing hills descended. Milt.

An eternal duration may be shorter or longer upon the hither end, namely that extreme wherein it is finite. Hale.

HI'THERMOST. adj. [of hither, adv.] Nearest on this side.

That which is external can be extended to a greater extent at the hithermost extreme. Hale.

HI'THERTO. adv. [from hither.]

1. To this time; yet.

Hitherto I have only told the reader what ought not to be the subject of a picture or of a poem. Dryden.

2. In any time till now.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me, whiles the famous ancestries
Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount. Fairy Queen.

3. At every time till now.

In this we are not their adversaries, tho' they in the other hitherto have been ours. Hooker.

Hitherto, lords, what your commands impos'd
I have perform'd, as reason was, obeying. Milt.

Hitherto she kept her love conceal'd,
And with those graces ev'ry day beheld
The graceful youth. Dryden.

He could not have failed to add the opposition of ill spirits to the good: this alone has hitherto been the practice of the moderns. Dryd.

To correct them, is a work that has hitherto been assumed by the least qualified hands. Swift.

HI'THERWARD. } adv. [hýðenpeard, Sax.] This way; toward this place.

Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

The king himself in person hath set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily. Shakspeare.

A puissant and mighty pow'r
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shaksp.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton.

HIVE. n. f. [hýfe, Saxon.]

1. The habitation or artificial receptacle of bees.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driv'n away. Shakspeare.

So wand'ring bees would perish in the air,
Did not a sound, proportion'd to their ear,
Appease their rage, invite them to the hive. Waller.

Bees have each of them a hole in their hives; their honey is their own, and every bee minds her own concerns. Addison.

2. The bees inhabiting a hive.

The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down. Shakspeare.

3. A company being together.

What modern masons call a lodge, was by antiquity called a hive of free masons; and therefore, when a dissention happens, the going off is to this day called swarming. Swift.

To HIVE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into hives; to harbour.

Mr. Addison of Oxford has been troublesome to me: after his bees, my latter swarm is scarcely worth hiving. Dryden.

When bees are fully settled, and the cluster at the biggest, hive them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To contain, as in hives; to receive, as to a habitation.

Ambitious now to take excise
Of a more fragrant paradise,
He at Fuscara's sleeve arriv'd,
Where all delicious sweets are hiv'd. Cleaveland.

To HIVE. v. n. To take shelter together; to reside collectively.

He sleeps by day
More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him. Shakspeare.

In summer we wander in a paradisaical scene, among groves and gardens; but at this season we get into warmer houses, and hive together in cities. Pope's Letters.

HI'VER. n. f. [from hive.] One who puts bees in hives.

Let the hiver drink a cup of good beer, and wash his hands and face therewith. Mortimer.

Ho. } interj. [eho! Latin.] A call;

HOA. } a sudden exclamation to give notice of approach, or any thing else.

What noise there, ho? Shakspeare.

Here dwells my father Jew: hoa, who's within? Shakspeare.

Stand, ho! speak the word along. Shakspeare.

When I cried hoa!

Like boys, kings would start forth, and cry,
Your will. Shakspeare.

Ho, ho, come forth and flee. Zechariah.

Ho, swain, what shepherd owns that ragged sheep? Dryden.

HOAR. adj. [hap, Saxon.]

Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoar. Spenser.

Now swarms the populace, a countless throng
Youth and hoar age, and man drives man along. Pope.

3. White with frost.

HOAR-FROST. n. f. [hoar and frost.]

The congelations of dew in frosty mornings on the grass.

When the dew was gone up, behold upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar-frost on the ground. Exodus.

In Farenheit's thermometer, at thirty-two degrees, the water in the air begins to freeze, which is known by hoar-frosts. Arbutnot.

HOARD. n. f. [hord, Sax.] A store laid up in secret; a hidden stock; a treasure.

I have a venturous fairy, that shall seek The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee thence new nuts. Shakspeare.

They might have even starved, had it not been for this providential reserve, this hoard, that was stowed in the strata underneath, and now seasonably disclosed. Woodward.

To HOARD. v. n. To make hoards; to lay up store.

He fear'd not once himself to be in need,
Nor car'd to hoard for those whom he did breed. Spenser.

Happy always was it for that son,
Whose father for his hoarding went to hell? Shakspeare.

To HOARD. v. a.

1. To lay in hoards; to husband privily; to store secretly.

The hoarded plague of the gods requite your love? Shakspeare.

You hoard not health for your own private use,
But on the publick spend the rich produce. Dryden.

You will be unsuccessful, if you give out of a great man, who is remarkable for his frugality for the publick, that he squanders away the nation's money; but you may safely relate that he hoards it. Arbutnot. Art of political Lying.

A superfluous abundance tempts us to forget God, when it is hoarded in our treasures, or considered as a safe, independent provision laid up for many years. Rogers.

2. It is sometimes enforced by the particle up.

I have just occasion to complain of them, who, because they understand Chaucer, would hoard him up as misers do their grandam gold, only to look on it themselves, and hinder others from making use of it. Dryden.

The base wretch who hoards up all he can,
Is prais'd and call'd a careful thrifty man. Dryd.

HO'ARDER. n. f. [from board.] One that stores up in secret.

Since commodities will be raised, this alteration will be an advantage to nobody but hoarders of money. Locke.

HO'ARHOUND. n. f. [marrubium, Lat.]
A plant.

Hoarhound has its leaves and flower cup covered very thick with a white hoariness: it is famous for the relief it gives in moist asthmas, of which a thick and viscous matter is the cause;
but it is now little used. Hill.

HO'ARINESS. n. f. [from hoary.] The state of being whitish; the colour of old men's hair.

He grows a wolf, his hoariness remains,
And the same rage in other members reigns. Dryden.

HOARSE. adj. [har, Saxon; beersch, Dutch.] Having the voice rough, as with a cold; having a rough sound.

Come, sit, sit, and a song.

—Clap into 't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse. Shakspeare.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

He sped his steps along the hoarse resounding shore. Dryden.

The stock-dove only through the forest coops, Mournfully hoarse. Thomson.

HO'ARSELY. adv. [from hoarse.] With a rough harsh voice.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid. Dryden.

HO'ARSENESS. n. f. [from hoarse.]
Roughness of voice.

The voice is sometimes intercluded by an hoarseness, or viscous phlegm. Holder.

I had a voice in heav'n, ere sulph'rous steams
Had damp'd it to a hoarseness. Dryden.

The want of it in the wind-pipe occasions
hoarseness in the gullet, and difficulty of swallowing. Arbutnot on Aliments.

HO'ARY. adj. [hap, hapund, Saxon.
See HOAR.]

1. White; whitish.

Thus she rested on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind. Addison.

2. White or gray with age.

A comely palmer, clad in black attire,
Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary grey. Spenser.
Solyman, marvelling at the courage and majesty of the hoary old prince in his so great extremity, dismissed him, and sent him again into the city. Knolles' History.

Has then my hoary head deserv'd no better?

Then in full age, and hoary holiness,
Retire, great preacher, to thy promis'd bliss. Prior.

3. White with frost.

The seasons alter; hoary headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose. Shaksp.

4. Mouldy; mossy; rusty.

There was brought out of the city into the camp very coarse, hoary, moulded bread. Knolles.

To HOBBLE. v. n. [to hop, to hobble, to hobble.]

1. To walk lamely or awkwardly upon one leg more than the other; to hitch; to walk with unequal and encumbered steps.

The friar was hobbling the same way too. Dryden.

Some persons continued a kind of hobbling
march on the broken arches, but fell through. Addison.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, without being discovered by his hobbling? Swift.

2. To move roughly or unevenly. Feet being ascribed to verses, whatever is done with feet is likewise ascribed to them.

Those ancient Romans had a sort of extempore poetry, or untuneable hobbling verse. Dryd.

While you Pindarick truths rehearse,
She hobbles in alternate verse. Prior.

HOBBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Uneven awkward gait.

One of his heels is higher than the other, which gives him a hobble in his gait. Gulliver's Travels.

HOBBLER. n. f. [from hobby.]

For twenty hobblers armed, Irishmen so called, because they served on hobbies, he paid sixpence
a-piece per diem. Davies.

horse; a pacing horse; a garra. See
HOBBLER.

3. A stick on which boys get astride and ride.

Those grave contenders about opinionative trifles look like aged Socrates upon his boy's hobby horse. Glanville.

As young children, who are try'd in
Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding,
When members knit, and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer;
But leap pro libitu, and scout
On horse call'd hobby, or without. Prior.

No hobby horse, with gorgeous top,
Could with this rod of Sid compare. Swift.

4. A stupid fellow.

I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby horses must not hear. Shakspeare.

HOBGOBLIN. n. f. [according to Skinner, for robogoblins, from Robin Goodfellow, Hob being the nickname of Robin:
but more probably, according to Wallis and Junius, hobgoblins emphasa, because they do not move their feet: whence, says Wallis, came the boys play of fox in the hole, the fox always hopping on one leg.] A frightful fairy.

Fairies, black, grey, green and white,
Attend your office and your quality:
Crier hobgoblin, make the fairy o-yes. Shaksp.

little bombs.

HO'BNAIL. n. f. [from hobby and nail.]
A nail used in shoeing a hobby or little horse; a nail with a thick strong head.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, I beseech Jove on my knees thou may'st be turn'd into hobnails. Shakspeare.

We shall buy maidens as they buy hobnails, by the hundred. Shakspeare.

HO'BNAILD. adj. [from hobnail.] Set with hobnails.

Would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,
Would'st thou, to run the gantlet, these expose
To a whole company of hobnail'd shoes? Dryd.

HO'BNOB. This is probably corrupted from habnab by a coarse pronunciation.
See HABNAB.

His incensement at this moment is to implacable, that satisfaction can be none, but pangs of death and sepulchre: hobnob is his word; give 't, or take 't. Shakspeare.

HOCK. n. f. [the same with hough.] The joint between the knee and the fetlock.

2. With chastity; modestly.

HONESTY. n. f. [honesté, Fr. honestas, Lat.] Justice; truth; virtue; purity.

Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.

—Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower.

Shakspeare.

Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty, in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem. Temple.

HONEY. n. f. [hunig, Saxon; honig, Dutch; honey, honag, German.]

1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. Hill.

Of honey, the first and finest kind is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell: it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining the combs without pressing. The second is often almost solid, procured by pressure: and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee by means of its proboscis or trunk, sucks up, and discharges again from the stomach through the mouth into the comb. The honey deposited in the comb, is destined for the young offspring: but in hard seasons the bees are reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves. Hill.

So work the honey bees,

Creatures that by a ruling nature teach

The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shaksp.

Touching his education and first fostering, some affirm, that he was fed by honey bees.

Raleigh's History.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours. Bacon.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey pot. L'Estrange.

Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sope, resolvent of the bile, balsamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable spirit before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbutnot.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring;
Then living waters from the crystal spring. Pope.

2. Sweetness; lusciousness.

The king hath found

Matter against him, that for ever mars

The honey of his language. Shakspeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakspeare.

3. Sweet; sweetness: a name of tenderness. [Mel; corculum.]

Honey, you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus;

I've found great love amongst them. Oh, my sweet,

I prattle out of fashion, and I dote. Shakspeare.

Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee. Dryden.

To HONEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live

In the rank sweat of an incestuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the nasty fly. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

HONEY-BAG. n. f. [honey and bag.]

The honey-bag is the stomach, which bees always fill to satisfy, and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter. Grew's Museum.

HONEY-COMB. n. f. [honey and comb.]

The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.

All these a milk-white honey-comb surround,
Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd. Dryden.

HONEY-COMBED. adj. [honey and comb.]

Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill cast.

A mariner having discharged his gun which was honey-combed, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wifeman.

HONEY-DEW. n. f. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects. Mortimer.

How honey-dews embalm the fragrant morn,
And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn. Garth.

HONEY-FLOWER. n. f. [melanthus, Latin.]

A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name. Miller.

HONEY-GNAT. n. f. [mellio, Latin; honey and gnat.] An insect. Ainsworth.

HONEY-MOON. n. f. [honey and moon.]

The first month after marriage when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

A man should keep his finery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to dress till the honey-moon is over. Addison.

HONEY-SUCKLE. n. f. [caprifolium, Lat.]

Woodbine.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatsoever tree stands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntsman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it. Shakspeare.

Watch upon a bank

With ivy canopied, and interwove

With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.

Then melloil beat and honey-suckles pound;

With these alluring favours firew the ground. Dryden.

HONEY-WORT. n. f. [cerinthe, Lat.] A plant.

HONEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Being without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless. Shakspeare.

HONIED. adj. [from honey.]

1. Covered with honey.

The bee with honied thigh,

That at her flow'ry work doth sing. Milton.

2. Sweet; luscious.

When he speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;

And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,

To steal his sweet and honied sentences. Shaksp.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear

The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue

Draws hitherward. Milton.

HONORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour; made in honour.

There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addison.

This monument is only honorary, for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere. Addison on Italy.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abounded with little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addison.

HONOUR. n. f. [honneur, French; honor, Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.

2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill husband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon.

3. The title of a man of rank. Not used.

Return unto thy lord,

Bid him not fear the separated councils:

His honour and myself are at the one;

And at the other is my good friend Catesby. Shakspeare.

4. Subject of praise.

Thou happy father,

Think that the clearest gods, who make them ho- nours Of man's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee. Shakspeare.

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of meanness; magnanimity.

Now shall I see thy love; what motive may

Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?

—That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,

His honour. Oh, thine honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shakspeare.

If by honour is meant any thing distinct from conscience, 'tis no more than a regard to the censure and esteem of the world. Rogers.

6. Reverence; due veneration. To do ho- nour is to treat with reverence.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shaksp.

His grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants.
—Ha! 'tis he, indeed!

Is this the honour they do one another? Shaksp.
This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent, under the name of honour; a respect, which, in the notion of it implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes goodness and power. Rogers.

7. Chastity.

Be the honour flav'd,
I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven;
If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shaksp.
She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Shaksp.

8. Dignity of mien.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect! with native honour clad,
In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all. Milton.

9. Glory; boast.

A late eminent person, the honour of his profession for integrity and learning. Burnet's Theory.

10. Publick mark of respect.

He saw his friends, who whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their fun'ral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves. Dryden.

Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in honour of the dead, as for the use of the living. Atterbury.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others to gain an honour, that, at best, can be celebrated but by an inconsiderable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given. Wake's Prep. for Death.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henry the seventh, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd to me my honours; and, from ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Shaksp.
Honours were conferred upon Antonine by Hadrian in his infancy. Wotton's Rom. Hist.

12. Civilities paid.

Then here a slave, or if you will, a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word. Pope.

13. Ornament; decoration.

The fire then shook the honours of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed. Dryden.

14. Honour, or on my honour, is a form of protestation used by the lords in judicial decisions.

My hand to thee, my honour on my promise. Shaksp.

To HO'NOUR. v. a. [honorer, French; honoro, Latin.]

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.

He was called our father, and was continually honoured of all men, as the next person unto the king. Esther.

The poor man is honoured for his skill, and the rich man is honoured for his riches. Ecclus.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches. Ecclus.

How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not. Pope.

2. To dignify; to raise to greatness.

We nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd, and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us, the honour'd number. Shaksp.

3. To glorify

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them, and I will be honoured upon

Pharaoh, and upon all his host, that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord. Exodus.

HO'NOURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illustrious; noble.

Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth? Isaiah.

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.

Sir, I'll tell you,
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Shaksp.

3. Conferring honour.

Think'st thou it honourable for a nobleman
Still to remember wrongs? Shaksp.
Then warlike kings, who for their country fought,
And honourable wounds from battle brought. Dryden.

Many of those persons, who put this honourable task on me, were more able to perform it themselves. Dryden.

4. Accompanied with tokens of honour.

Sith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish, rather than of crime hath been,
Preserve her cause to her eternal doom;
And in the mean, vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Spenser.

5. Not to be disgraced.

Here's a Bohemian Tartar carries the coming down of thy fat woman:—let her descend, my chambers are honourable. Shaksp.

6. Free from taint; free from reproach.

As he was honourable in all his acts, so in this, that he took Joppe for an haven. Mac.
Methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honourable. Shaksp.

7. Honest; without intention of deceit.

The earl sent again to know if they would entertain their pardon, in case he should come in person, and assure it: they answered, they did conceive him to be so honourable, that from himself they would most thankfully embrace it. Hayw.
If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send we word to-morrow. Shaksp.

8. Equitable

HO'NOURABLENESS. n. f. [from honourable.] Eminence; magnificence; generosity.

HO'NOURABLY. adv. [from honourable.]

1. With tokens of honour.

The rev'rend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him. Shaksp.

2. Magnanimously; generously.

After some six weeks, which the king did honourably interpose, to give space to his brother's intercession, he was arraigned of high treason and condemned. Bacon.

3. Reputably; with exemption from reproach.

'Tis just, ye gods! and what I well deserve:
Why did I not more honourably starve! Dryden.

HO'NOURER. n. f. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.

I must not omit Mr. Gay, whose zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer. Pope.

HOOD, in composition, is derived from the Saxon had, in German heit, in Dutch heid. It denotes quality; character; condition: as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is written after the Dutch, as maidenhead. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity; sisterhood, a company of sisters.

HOOD. n. f. [hod, Saxon, probably from hepod, head.]

1. The upper covering of a woman's head.

In velvet, white as snow, the troop was gown'd:

Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.

2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.

He undertook so to muffle up himself in his hood, that none should discern him. Wotton.

The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dress: it had a hood, which could be separated from and joined to it. Arbutnot.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.

4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree.

To HOOD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in a hood.

The cobbler apron'd, and the parson gown'd,
The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd. Pope.

2. To blind, as with a hood.

While grace is saying, I'll hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say, Amen. Shaksp.

3. To cover.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above;
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes
And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove. Dryden.

HO'ODMAN Blind. n. f. A play in which the person hooded is to catch another, and tell the name; blindman's buff.

What devil was't,

That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind? Shaksp.

To HO'OD-WINK. v. a. [hood and wink.]

1. To blind with something bound over the eyes.

They willingly hood-winking themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his foul vice of injustice. Sidney.

We will bind and hood-wink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries. Shaksp.

Then she who hath been hood-wink'd from her birth,

Doth first herself within death's mirror see. Davies.

So have I seen, at Christmas sports, one loil,
And, hood-wink'd, for a man embrace a poth. Ben Jonson.

Satan is fain to hood-wink those that start. Decay of Piety.

Prejudice so dexterously hood-winks men's minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light. Locke.

Must I wed Rodogune?

Fantastick cruelty of hood-wink'd chance! Rowe.

On high, where no hoarse winds or clouds resort,

The hood-wink'd goddess keeps her partial court. Garth.

2. To cover; to hide.

Be patient; for the prize, I'll bring thee to,
Shall hood-wink this mischance. Shaksp.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.

She delighted in infamy, which often she had used to her husband's shame, filling all men's ears, but his, with reproach; while he, hood-wink'd with kindness, least of all men knew who struck him. Sidney.

HOOF. n. f. [hop, Saxon; boef, Dutch.]

The hard horny substance on the feet of graminivorous animals.

With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets. Ezekiel.

The bull and ram know the use of their horns as well as the horse of his hoofs. Mare.

HOOF-BOUND. adj. [hoof and bound.]

A horse is said to be hoof-bound when he has a pain in the fore feet, occasioned by the dryness and contraction or narrowness of the horn of the quarters, which straitens the quarters of the heels, and oftentimes makes the horse lame. A hoof-bound horse has a narrow heel, the sides of which come too near one another, inasmuch that the flesh is kept too tight, and has not its natural extent. Farrier's Dict.

HOOFED. adj. [from hoof.] Furnished with hoofs.

Among quadrupeds, the roe-deer is the swiftest; of all the hoofed, the horse is the most beautiful; of all the clawed, the lion is the strongest. Grew.

HOOK. n. f. [hoce, Saxon; hoek, Dutch.]

1. Any thing bent so as to catch hold: as, a shepherd's hook and pot hooks.

This falling not, for that they had not far enough undermined it, they assayed with great hooks and strong ropes to have pulled it down. Knolles.

2. The curvated wire on which the bait is hung for fishes, and with which the fish is pierced.

Like unto golden hooks,
That from the foolish fish their baits do hide. Spenser.

My bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws. Shakspeare.
Though divine Plato thus of pleasures thought,
They us with hooks and baits, like fishes, caught. Denham.

3. A snare; a trap.

A shop of all the qualities that man
Loves woman for, besides that hook of wiving,
Fairness, which strikes the eye. Shakspeare.

4. An iron to seize the meat in the caldron.

About the caldron many cooks accoil'd,
With hooks and ladles, as need did require;
The while the viands in the vessel boil'd. Fairy Queen.

5. A sickle to reap corn.

Pease are commonly reaped with a hook at the end of a long stick. Mortimer.

6. Any instrument to cut or lop with.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,
Like flashing Bentley with his desperate hook. Pope.

7. The part of the hinge fixed to the post: whence the proverb, off the hooks, for in disorder.

My doublet looks,
Like him that wears it, quite off o' the hooks. Cleveland.

She was horribly bold, meddling and expensive, easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estrange.

While Sheridan is off the hooks,
And friend Delany at his books. Swift.

8. Hook. [In husbandry.] A field sown two years running. Ainsworth.

9. Hook or Crook. One way or other; by any expedient; by any means direct or oblique. Ludicrous.

Which he by hook or crook had gather'd,
And for his own inventions father'd. Hudib.
He would bring him by hook or crook into his quarrel. Dryden.

To Hook. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To catch with a hook.

The huge jack he had caught was served up for the first dish; upon our sitting down to it, he gave us a long account how he had hooked it, played with it, foiled it, and at length drew it out upon the bank. Addison.

2. To entrap; to ensnare.

3. To draw as with a hook.

But she
I can hook to me. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

4. To fasten as with a hook.

5. To draw by force or artifice.

VOL. I.

There are many branches of the natural law no way reducible to the two tables, unless hooked in by tedious consequences. Norris.

HOOKED. adj. [from hook.] Bent; curvated.

Gryps signifies eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet grypus, for an hooked or aquiline nose. Brown.

Now thou threaten'st, with unjust decree,
To seize the prize which I so dearly bought:
Mean match to thine; for still above the rest,
Thy hook'd rapacious hands usurp the best. Dryd.

Caterpillars have claws and feet: the claws are hooked, to take the better hold in climbing from twig to twig, and hanging on the backside of leaves. Grew.

HOOKEDNESS. n. f. [from hooked.] State of being bent like a hook.

HOOKNOSED. adj. [hook and nose.] Having the aquiline nose rising in the middle.

I may justly say with the hooknosed fellow of Rome there, Cæsar, I came, saw, and overcame. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

HOOP. n. f. [hoep, Dutch.]

1. Any thing circular by which something else is bound, particularly casks or barrels.

Thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,
A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood
Shall never leak. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

If I knew What hoop would hold us staunch, from edge to edge

O' th' world, I would pursue it. Shakspeare.

A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?

—About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shakspeare.

To view so lewd a town, and to refrain,

What hoops of iron could my spleen contain!

And learned Athens to our art must stoop,

Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop. Pope.

2. The whalebone with which women extend their petticoats; a farthingale.

At coming in you saw her stoop:
The entry bruth'd again't her hoop. Swift.
All that hoops are good for is to clean dirty shoes, and to keep fellows at a distance. Clarissa.

3. Any thing circular.

I have seen at Rome an antique statue of Time, with a wheel or hoop of marble in his hand. Addison.

To Hoop. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind or enclose with hoops.

The three hoop'd pot shall have ten hoops, and I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shakspeare.
The casks for his majesty's shipping were hooped as a wine-cask, or hooped with iron. Raleigh.

2. To encircle; to clasp; to surround.

If ever henceforth thou Shalt hoop his body more with thy embraces,
I will devise a death. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.
I hoop the firmament, and make
This my embrace the zodiack. Cleveland.
That shelly guard, which hoops in the eye, and hides the greater part of it, might occasion his mistake. Grew.

To Hoop. v. n. [from wopgan or wopyan, Gothick; or houpper, French, derived from the Gothick. This word is generally written w hoop, which is more proper if we deduce it from the Gothick; and hoop if we derive it from the French.] To shout; to make an outcry by way of call or pursuit.

To Hoop. v. a.

1. To drive with a shout.

Dastard nobles
Suffer'd me, by the voice of slaves, to be Hoop'd out of Rome. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

2. To call by a shout.

HOOPER. n. f. [from hoop, to inclose with hoops.] A cooper; one that hoops tubs.

HOOFING-COUGH. n. f. [or whooping-cough, from hoop, to shout.] A convulsive cough, so called from its noise; the chincough.

To HOOT. v. n. [hwot, Welsh; huer, Fr.]

1. To shout in contempt.

A number of country folks happened to pass thereby, who hollowed and hooted after me as at the arrantest coward. Sidney.

Matrons and girls shall hoot at thee no more. Dryden.

2. To cry as an owl.

Some keep back
The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots, and wonders
At our quaint sports. Shakspeare.

To HOOT. v. a. To drive with noise and shouts.

We lov'd him; but, like beasts,
Our coward nobles gave way to your clusters,
Who did hoot him out o' th' city. Shakspeare.

The owl of Rome, whom boys and girls will hoot!

That were I set up for that wooden god That keeps our gardens, could not fright the crows,

Or the least bird from muting on my head. Ben Jonson.

Partridge and his clan may hoot me for a cheat and impostor, if I fail in any particular of moment. Swift.

HOOT. n. f. [huée, French, from the verb.]

Clamour; shout; noise.

Its assertion would be entertained with the hoot of the rabble. Glanville's Sceptis.

To HOP. v. n. [hoppan, Saxon; hoppem, Dutch.]

1. To jump; to skip lightly.

I would have thee gone,
And yet no further than a wanton's bird,
That lets it hop a little from her hand,
And with a silk thread plucks it back again. Shakspeare.

Go, hop me over every kennel home;
For you shall hop without my custom, sir. Shakspeare.
Be kind and courteous to this gentleman,
Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes. Shakspeare.

The painted birds, companions of the spring,
Hopping from spray to spray were heard. Dryden.
Your Ben and Fletcher, in their first young flight,

Did no Volpone, nor no Arbaces write;
But hopp'd about, and short excursions made,
From bough to bough, as if they were afraid. Dryden.

Why don't we vindicate ourselves by trial ordeal, and hop over heated ploughshares blindfold?

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spenser.

2. To leap on one leg.

Men with heads like dogs, and others with one huge foot alone, whereupon they did hop from place to place. Abbot.

3. To walk lamely, or with one leg less nimble or strong than the other; to limp; to halt.

The limping smith observ'd the fadden'd feast,
And hopping here and there, himself a jest,
Put in his word. Dryden's Homer.

4. To move; to play.

Softly feel
Her feeble pulse, to prove if any drop
Of living blood yet in her veins did hop. Fairy Queen.

HOP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A jump; a light leap.

2. A jump on one leg.

When my wings are on, I can go above a hundred yards at a hop, step, and jump. Addison.

3. A place where meaner people dance.

Ainsworth.

HOP. n. f. [hop, Dutch; lupulus, Latin.]

A plant.

It has a creeping root: the leaves are rough, angular, and conjugated; the stalks climb and twist about whatever is near them; the flowers are male and female on different plants: the male flower consists of a calyx divided into five parts, which surrounds the stamina, but has no petals to the flower; the female plants have their flowers collected into squamose heads, which grow in bunches: from each leafy scale is produced an horny ovary, which becomes a single roundish seed. Miller.

If hop yard or orchard ye mind for to have,
For hop poles and crotches in lopping to save.

Tusser.

The planting of hop yards is profitable for the planters, and consequently for the kingdom.

Bacon.

Beer hath malt first infused in the liquor, and is afterwards boiled with the hop.

Bacon.

Next to thistles are hop strings, cut after the flowers are gathered.

Derham.

Have the poles without forks, otherwise it will be troublesome to part the hop vines and the poles.

Mortimer.

When you water hops, on the top of every hill put dissolved dung, which will enrich your hop hills.

Mortimer.

In Kent they plant their hop gardens with apple-trees and cherry-trees between.

Mortimer.

The price of hoeing of hop ground is forty shillings an acre.

Mortimer.

Hop poles, the largest sort, should be about twenty foot long, and about nine inches in compass.

Mortimer.

To HOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To impregnate with hops.

Brew in October, and hop it for long keeping.

Mortimer.

To increase the milk, diminished by flesh meat, take malt-drink not much hopped.

Arbuthnot.

HOPE. n. f. [hopa, Saxon; hope, Dutch.]

1. Expectation of some good; an expectation indulged with pleasure.

Hope is that pleasure in the mind, which every one finds in himself, upon the thought of a profitable future enjoyment of a thing which is apt to delight him.

Locke.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again.

Job.

When in heav'n she shall his essence see,
This is her sov'reign good, and perfect bliss;

Her longing, withings, hopes, all finish'd be;
Her joys are full, her motions rest in this.

Davies.

Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by thee
We are not where or what we be;

But what and where we would be: thus art thou
Our absent presence, and our future now.

Crashaw.

Faith is opposed to infidelity, and hope to despair.

Taylor.

He sought them both, but wish'd his hap might find,

Eve separate: he with'd, but not with hope
Of what so seldom chanc'd; when to his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies.

Milton.

The Trojan dames
To Pallas' fane in long procession go,

In hopes to reconcile their heav'nly foe. Dryden.

Why not comfort myself with the hope of what may be, as torment myself with the fear on't.

L'Estrange.

To encourage our hopes, it gives us the highest assurance of most lasting happiness, in case of obedience.

Tillotson.

The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for fight, desire for enjoyment.

Atterbury.

Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may have some hopes of them.

Swift.

2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any person.

It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him.

2 Maccabees.

Blessed is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord.

Ecclesi.

3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be effected.

I might see from far some forty truncheoneers draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quarter'd.

Shakspeare.

4. The object of hope.

Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
To wit, an indigested deform'd lump.

Shakspeare.

She was his care, his hope, and his delight,
Most in his thought, and ever in his sight.

Dryden.

HOPE. n. f. Any sloping plain between the ridges of mountains.

Ainsworth.

To HOPE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in expectation of some good.

Hope for good success, according to the efficacy of the causes and the instrument; and let the husbandman hope for a good harvest.

Taylor.

My muse, by storms long tost,
Is thrown upon your hospitable coast;

And finds more favour by her ill success,
Than she could hope for by her happiness.

Dryden.

Who knows what adverse fortune may befall!
Arm well your mind, hope little, and fear all.

Dryden.

2. To place confidence in another.

He shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord.

Psalms.

To HOPE. v. a. To expect with desire.

The sun shines hot; and if we use delay,
Cold-biting winter mars our hop'd for hay.

Shakspeare.

So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear.

Dryden.

HO'PEFUL. adj. [hope and full.]

1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation.

He will advance thee:

I know his noble nature, not to let

Thy hopeful service perish.

Shakspeare.

You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince whom you must not desert.

Bacon.

What to the old can greater pleasure be,

Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see?

Denham.

They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are threescore.

Addison.

2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.

Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly conceited, whatsoever they took in hand.

Hooker.

I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments.

Boyle.

Whatever ills the friendless orphan bears,
Bereav'd of parents in his infant years,

Still must the wrong'd Telemachus sustain,
If hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain.

Pope.

HO'PEFULLY. adv. [from hopeful.]

1. In such manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.

He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with earls' sons and heirs.

Wotton.

They were ready to renew the war, and to prosecute it hopefully, to the reduction or suppression of the Irish.

Clarendon.

2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare.

From your promising and generous endeavours we may hopefully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature.

Glanville.

HO'PEFULNESS. n. f. [from hopeful.]

Promise of good; likelihood to succeed.

Set down beforehand certain signatures of hopefulness, or characters, whereby may be timely described what the child will prove in probability.

Wotton.

HO'PELESS. adj. [from hope.]

1. Wanting hope; being without pleasing expectation; despairing.

Are they indifferent, being used as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead?

Hooker.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless!

Shakspeare.

He watches with greedy hope to find
His wish, and best advantage, us asunder;

Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each
To other speedy aid might lend at need.

Milton.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,
And hopeless to prevail by open force,

Seeks hid advantage. Dryden. State of Innocence.

Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie
In durance, doom'd a ling'ring death to die.

Dryden.

2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing.

The hopeless word of never to return,
Breathe I against thee upon pain of life.

Shakspeare.

HO'PER. n. f. [from hope.] One that has pleasing expectations.

I except all hoppers, who turn the scale, because the strong expectation of a good certain salary will outweigh the loss by bad rents.

Swift.

HO'PINGLY. adv. [from hoping.] With hope; with expectation of good.

One sign of despair is the peremptory contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope; the going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopingly, and confidently in wilful habits of sin.

Hammond.

HO'PPER. n. f. [from hop.] He who hops or jumps on one leg.

Ainsworth.

HO'PPERS. n. f. [commonly called Scotch hoppers.] A kind of play in which the actor hops on one leg.

HO'PPER. n. f. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation. It is called in French, for the same reason, tremble or tremue.]

1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.

The salt of the lake Asphaltites shooteth into perfect cubes. Sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hopper of a mill.

Grew.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill: their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Just at the hopper will I stand,
In my whole life I never saw grift ground,

And mark the clack how justly it will sound.

Betterton.

2. A basket for carrying seed.

Ainsworth.

HO'RAL. adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour.

Howe'er reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horol orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.
Ho'rary. adj. [horaire, French; horarius, Latin.]

1. Relating to an hour.

I'll draw a figure that shall tell you
What you perhaps forgot befell you,
By way of horary inspection,
Which some account our worst erection. Hudibras.

In his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has discussed, under the character of reynard, the manner of surprising all sharpers. Tatler.

2. Continuing for an hour.

When, from a basket of summer-fruit, God
by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolation, and that their tranquillity was of no longer duration than those horary or soon decaying fruits of summer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Horde. n. f. A clan; a migratory crew of people. It is applied only to the Tartars.

Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,
Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,
And gave the vanquish'd world another form. Thomson.

HORIZON. n. f. [ὁρίζων.] The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real:
the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakspeare horizon.

When the morning sun shall raise his car
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates. Shakspeare.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland. Bacon.

In his east the glorious lamp was seen,
Regent of day; and all th' horizon round Invested with bright rays. Milton.

The morning lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning gray;
And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,
That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyous fight. Dryden.

When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect. Addison.

HORIZONTAL. adj. [horizontal, French, from horizon.]

1. Near the horizon.

As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations. Milton.

2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.

An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt
by Augustus. Brown.

The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle? Arbutnot on Coins.

HORIZONTALLY. adv. [from horizontal.]

In a direction parallel to the horizon.

As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally unto it. Brown.

The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with celerity. Bentley.

HORN. n. f. [hauru, Gothick; horn, Saxon; horn, Dutch.]

1. The hard bodies which grow on the heads of some graminivorous quadru-peds, and serve them for weapons.
No beast that hath horns hath upper teeth. Bacon.

Zetus rises through the ground,
Bending the bull's tough neck with pain,
That tosses back his horns in vain. Addison.

All that process is no more surprising than the eruption of horns in some brutes, or of teeth and beard in men at certain periods of age. Bentley.

2. An instrument of wind-musick made of horn.

The squire 'gan nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle-wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Fairy Queen.

There's a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news. Shakspeare.

The goddess to her crooked horn
Adds all her breath: the rocks and woods around,
And mountains, tremble at th' infernal sound. Dryden.

Fair Ascanius, and his youthful train,
With horns and hounds a hunting match ordain. Dryden.

3. The extremity of the waxing or waining moon, as mentioned by poets.

She bless'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryden.

The moon
Wears a wan circle round her blunted horns. Thomson.

4. The feelers of a snail. Whence the proverb, To pull in the horns, to repress one's ardour.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,
Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shakspeare.

Aufidius,
Hearing of our Marcius's banishment,
Thrust forth his horns again into the world,
Which were inshell'd when Marcius stood for Rome,
And durst not once peep out. Shakspeare.

5. A drinking cup made of horn.

6. Antler of a cuckold.

If I have horns to make one mad,
Let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad. Shakspeare.

Merchants, vent'ring through the main,
Slight pyrates, rocks, and horns for gain. Hudibras.

7. HORN mad. Perhaps mad as a cuck-old.

I am glad he went not in himself: if he had,
he would have been horn mad. Shakspeare.

HORNBEAK. } n. f. A kind of fish.

HORNFI'SH. } Ainsworth.

HO'RNBEAM. n. f. [horn and beam, Dut.
for tree, from the hardness of the timber.]

It hath leaves like the elm or beech-tree.
The timber is very tough and inflexible, and of excellent use. Miller.

HO'RNBOOK. n. f. [horn and book.] The first book of children, covered with horn to keep it unsoiled.

He teaches boys the hornbook. Shakspeare.
Nothing has been considered of this kind out of the ordinary road of the hornbook and primer. Locke.

To master John the English maid
A hornbook gives of ginger-bread;
And that the child may learn the better,
As he can name, he eats the letter. Prior.

HO'RNED. adj. [from horn.] Furnished with horns.

As when two rams, stir'd with ambitious pride,

Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meet, that, with the terror of the shock, Astonish'd both stand senseless as a block. Fairy Queen.

Thither all the horned host resorts,
To graze the ranker mead. Denham.
Thou king of horned floods, whose plenteous urn

Suffices fatness to the fruitful corn. Dryden.

HO'RNER. n. f. [from horn.] One that works in horn, and sells horns.

The skin of a bull's forehead is the part of the hide made use of by horners, whereupon they shave their horns. Grew.

HO'RNET. n. f. [hynnette, Saxon, from its horns.] A very large strong stinging fly, which makes its nest in hollow trees.

Silence, in times of suffering, is the best;
'Tis dangerous to disturb a hornet's nest. Dryd.
Hornets do mischief to trees by breeding in them. Mortimer.

I have often admired how hornets, that gather dry materials for building their nests, have found a proper matter to glue their combs. Derham.

HO'RNFOOT. n. f. [horn and foot.] Hoofed.

Mad frantick men, that did not inly quake!
With hornfoot horses, and brass wheels, Jove's storms to emulate. Haweswill.

HO'RNOWL. n. f. A kind of horned owl.
Ainsworth.

HO'RNPIPE. n. f. [horn and pipe.] A country dance, danced commonly to a horn.

A lusty tablere,
That to thee many a hornpipe play'd,
Whereto they dauncen each one with his maid. Spenser.
There many a hornpipe he tun'd to his Phyllis. Raleigh.

Let all the quicksilver i' the mine
Run to the feet veins, and refine
Your firckum jerkum to a dance Shall fetch the fiddlers out of France,
To wonder at the hornpipes here
Of Nottingham and Derbyshire. Ben Jonson.
Florinda danced the Derbyshire hornpipe in the presence of several friends. Tatler.

HO'RNSTONE. n. f. A kind of blue stone.
Ainsworth.

HO'RNWORK. n. f. A kind of angular fortification.

HO'RN. adj. [from horn.]

1. Made of horn.

2. Resembling horn.

He thought he by the brook of Cherith stood,
And saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing even and morn. Milton.
The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolic figure. Ray on the Creation.

Rough are her ears, and broad her horny feet. Dryden.

The pineal gland was encompassed with a kind of horny substance. Addison.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates it so as to turn it horny, like parchment; but when it is thoroughly putrified, it will no longer concrete. Arbutnot.

3. Hard as horn; callous.

Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryd.

HORO'GRAPHY. n. f. [horographie, Fr.
ὥρα, and γραφία.] An account of the hours.

HO'ROLOGE. } n. f. [horologium, Lat.]
HO'ROLOGY. } Any instrument that tells the hour: as a clock; a watch; an hour glass.

He'll watch the horologe a double set,
 If drink rock not his cradle. Shakspeare.

Before the days of Jerome there were horolo- gies, that measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses, called clepsydra, but also by sand in glasses, called clepsammia. Brown.

HORO'METRY. n. f. [horometrie, French;
ωρεα and μετρησις.] The art of measuring hours.

It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice. Brown.

HORO'SCOPE. n. f. [horoscope, French;
ωροσκοπος.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.

How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and countervail that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth? Drummond.

A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh house, or opposite signs every seventh year, oppresseth living creatures. Brown.

Him born beneath a boding horoscope,
 His fire, the blear-ey'd Vulcan of a shop,
 From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school.
Dryden.

The Greek names this the horoscope,
 This governs life, and this marks out our parts,
 Our humours, manners, qualities and arts.
Creech.

They understood the planets and the zodiack by instinct, and fell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust the sprung out of.
Bentley.

HO'RRENT. adj. [horrens, Latin. Hor- rentia pilis agmina.] Pointed outward; bristled with points: a word perhaps introduced by Milton.

Him a globe
 Of fiery seraphim incircled round
 With bright emblazonry and horrent arms. Milt.

HORRIBLE. adj. [horrible, French;
horribilis, Latin.] Dreadful; terrible;
 shocking; hideous; enormous.

No colour affecteth the eye much with displeasure: there be fights that are horrible, because they excite the memory of things that are odious or fearful. Bacon.

A dungeon horrible on all sides round,
 As one great furnace flamed. Milton.

O fight
 Of terror, foul and ugly to behold,
 Horrid to think, how horrible to feel! Milton.

Eternal happiness and eternal misery, meeting with a persuasion that the soul is immortal, are,
 of all others, the first the most desirable, and the latter the most horrible to human apprehension. South.

HO'RRIBLENESS. n. f. [from horrible.]
 Dreadfulness; hideousness; terribleness; fearfulness.

HO'RRIBLY. adv. [from horrible.]

1. Dreadfully; hideously.

What hideous noise was that!

Horribly loud. Milton.

2. To a dreadful degree.

The contagion of these ill precedents, both in civility and virtue, horribly infects children. Locke.

HORRID. adj. [horridus, Latin.]

1. Hideous; dreadful; shocking.

Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,
 That we the horrid may seem to those

Which chance to find us. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
 Not in the legions

Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd,
 In evils to top Macbeth. Shakspeare.

Horror on them fell,
 And horrid sympathy. Milton.

2. Shocking; offensive: unpleasing: in women's cant.

Already I your tears survey,
 Already hear the horrid things they say. Pope.

3. Rough; rugged.

Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn, Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dryden.

HORRIDNESS. n. f. [from horrid.] Hideousness; enormity.

A bloody designer suborns his instrument to take away such a man's life, and the confessor represents the horridness of the fact, and brings him to repentance. Hammond.

HORRIFICK. adj. [horrificus, Latin.] Causing horror.

His jaws horrifick, arm'd with three-fold fate,
 Here dwells the direful shark. Thomson.

HORRISONOUS. adj. [horrifonus, Latin.] Sounding dreadfully. Diä.

HORROUR. n. f. [horror, Lat. horreur, French.]

1. Terror mixed with detestation; a passion compounded of fear and hate, both strong.

Over them sad horror, with grim hue,
 Did always soar, beating his iron wings;
 And after him owls and night ravens flew,
 The hateful messengers of heavy things. F. Queen.

Doubtless all souls have a surviving thought,
 Therefore of death we think with quiet mind;
 But if we think of being turn'd to nought,
 A trembling horror in our souls we find. Davies.

Me damp horror chill'd
 At such bold words, vouch'd with a deed so bold.
Milton.

Deep horror seizes ev'ry human breast;
 Their pride is humbled, and their fear confest.
Dryden.

2. Dreadful thoughts.

I have sapt full with horrors;
 Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
 Cannot once start me. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

3. Gloom; dreariness.

Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
 Shades ev'ry flow'r, and darkens ev'ry green;
 Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
 And breathes a browner horror on the woods.
Pope.

4. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit; a sense of shuddering or shrinking. Quincy.

All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and, upon their flight, the parts are in some degree destitute, and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Natural History.

HORSE. n. f. [horr, Saxon.]

1. A neighing quadruped, used in war, and draught and carriage.

Duncan's horses, the minions of the race,
 Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls. Shaksp.

A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!
Shakspeare's Richard III.

We call a little horse, such a one as comes not up to the size of that idea which we have in our minds to belong ordinarily to horses. Locke.

2. A constellation.

Thy face, bright centaur, autumn's heats retain,

The softer season suiting to the man;
 Whilst winter's shivering goat afflicts the horse
 With frost, and makes him an uneasy course. Creech.

3. To take horse; to set out to ride.

I took horse to the lake of Constance, which is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison.

4. It is used in the plural sense, but with a singular termination, for horses, horse- men, or cavalry.

The galloping of horse: who was 't came by?

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

The armies were appointed, consisting of twenty-five thousand horse and foot, for the repulsing of the enemy at their landing. Bacon.

If they had known that all the king's horse were quartered behind them, their foot might very well have marched away with their horse.
Clarendon.

Th' Arcadian horse

With ill-success engage the Latin force. Dryden.

5. Something on which any thing is supported: as, a horse to dry linen on.

6. A wooden machine which soldiers ride by way of punishment. It is sometimes called a timber-mare.

7. Joined to another substantive, it signifies something large or coarse: as, a horseface, a face of which the features are large and indelicate.

To HORSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mount upon a horse; to furnish with a horse.

He came out with all his clowns, horsed upon such cart-jades, and so furnished, as I thought with myself, if that were thrift, I wish't none of my friends ever to thrive. Sidney.

After a great fight there came to the camp of Gonzalvo, the great captain, a gentleman proudly horsed and armed: Diego de Mendoza asked the great captain, Who 's this? Who answered, It is St. Elmo, who never appears but after the storm. Bacon.

2. To carry one on the back.

3. To ride any thing.

Stalls, bulks, windows

Ye thus hospitably live,

And strangers with good cheer receive. Prior.

The former liveth as piously and hospitably as the other. Swift.

HOSPITAL. n. f. [hospital, French; hospitalis, Latin.]

1. A place built for the reception of the sick, or support of the poor.

They who were so careful to bestow them in a college when they were young, would be so good as to provide for them in some hospital when they are old.

I am about to build an hospital, which I will endow handsomely for twelve old husbandmen.

2. A place for shelter or entertainment. Obsolete.

They spy'd a goodly castle, plac'd
Foreby a river in a pleasant dale,
Which chusing for that evening's hospital,
They thither march'd.

HOSPITALITY. n. f. [hospitalité, Fr.] The practice of entertaining strangers.

The Lacedemonians forbidding all access of strangers into their coasts; are, in that respect, deservedly blamed, as being enemies to that hospitality which, for common humanity's sake, all the nations on the earth should embrace.

My master is of a churlish disposition,
And little reckes to find the way to heav'n
By doing deeds of hospitality.

How has this spirit of faction broke all the laws of charity, neighbourhood, alliance, and hospitality.

HOSPITALLER. n. f. [hospitallier, Fr. hospitalarius, low Latin, from hospital.]

One residing in a hospital in order to receive the poor or stranger. Used perhaps peculiarly of the knights of Malta.

The first they reckon such as were granted to the hospitallers in titulum beneficii.

TO HOSPITATE. v. a. [hospitor, Latin.] To reside under the roof of another.

That always chuses an empty shell, and this hospitates with the living animal in the same shell.

HOST. n. f. [hoste, French; hospes, hospit, Latin.]

1. One who gives entertainment to another.

Homer never entertained either guests or hosts with long speeches, till the mouth of hunger be stopped.

Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
For your good host.

2. The landlord of an inn.

Time's like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand;
But with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the comer.

3. [from hostis, Latin.] An army; numbers assembled for war.

Let every soldier hew him down a bough,
And bear't before him; thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our host.

Then, through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,
God looking forth, will trouble all his host,
And craze your chariot wheels.

After these came arm'd, with spear and shield,
An host so great as cover'd all the field.

4. Any great number.

Give to a gracious message
An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell Themselves, when they be felt.

5. [hostia, Latin; hostie, French.] The sacrifice of the mass in the Romish church; the consecrated wafer.

TO HOST. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To take up entertainment; to live, as at an inn.

Go, bear it to the centaur, where we host;
And stay there, Dromio, till I come to thee.

2. To encounter in battle.

Strange to us it seem'd
At first, that angel should with angel war,
And in fierce hostings meet.

New authors of dissension spring from him,
Two branches, that in hostings long contend,
For sov'reign sway.

3. To review a body of men; to muster. Obsolete.

Lords have had the leading of their own followers to the general hostings.

HO'STAGE. n. f. [ostage, French.] One given in pledge for security of performance of conditions.

Your hostages I have, so have you mine;
And we shall talk before we fight.

Do this message honourably;
And if he stand on hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please him best.

He that hath wife and children, hath given hostages to fortune; for they are impediments to great enterprises, either of virtue or mischief.

They who marry give hostages to the publick, that they will not attempt the ruin or disturb the peace of it.

The Romans having seized a great number of hostages, acquainted them with their resolution.

HO'STEL. } n. f. [hostel, hostellerie, Fr.]

HO'STELRY. } An inn.

HO'STESS. n. f. [hostesse, French, from host.]

1. A female host; a woman that gives entertainment.

Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to night.

Ye were beaten out of door,
And rail'd upon the hostess of the house.

Be as kind an hostess as you have been to me, and you can never fail of another husband.

2. A woman that keeps a house of publick entertainment.

Undistinguish'd civility is like a whore or a hostess.

HO'STESS-SHIP. n. f. [from hostess.] The character of an hostess.

It is my father's will I should take on me
The hostess-ship o' th' day: you're welcome, sirs.

HO'STILE. adj. [hostilis, Latin.] Adverse; opposite; suitable to an enemy.

He has now at last
Giv'n hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it.

Fierce Juno's hate,
Added to hostile force, shall urge thy fate.

HOSTILITY. n. f. [hostilité, French, from hostile.] The practices of an open enemy; open war; opposition in war.

Neither by treason nor hostility
To seek to put me down, and reign thyself.

Hostility being thus suspended with France, preparation was made for war against Scotland.

What peace can we return,
But, to our pow'r, hostility and hate,
Untam'd reluctance and revenge?

We have shew'd ourselves fair, nay, generous adversaries; and have carried on even our hostilities with humanity.

HO'STLER. n. f. [hosteller, from hostel.]

One who has the care of horses at an inn.

The cause why they are now to be permitted is want of convenient inns for lodging travellers on horseback, and hostlers to tend their horses by the way.

HO'STRY. n. f. [corrupted from hostelry.] A place where the horses of guests are kept.

Swift rivers are with sudden ice constrain'd,
And studded wheels are on its back sustain'd;
An hostry now for waggons, which before
Tall ships of burden on its bosom bore.

HOT. adj. [hat, Saxon; bat, Scottish.]

1. Having the power to excite the sense of heat; contrary to cold; fiery.

What is thy name?

—Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

—No, though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell.

The great breezes which the motion of the air in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore, in those parts, noon is nothing so hot as about nine in the forenoon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt;
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt.

Black substances do soonest of all others become hot in the sun's light, and burn; which effect may proceed partly from the multitude of refractions in a little room, and partly from easy commotion of so very small corpuscles.

2. Lustful; lewd.

What hotter hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out.

Now the hot blooded gods assist me! remember,
Jove, thou was't a bull for thy Europa.

3. Violent; furious; dangerous.

That of Carthage, where the Spaniards had warning of our coming, was one of the hottest services, and most dangerous assaults that hath been known.

He resolved to storm; but his soldiers declined that hot service, and plied it with artillery.

To court the cry directs us, when we found
Th' assault so hot, as if 'twere only there.

Our army
Is now in hot engagement with the Moors.

4. Ardent; vehement; precipitate.

Come, come, lord Mortimer, you are as slow,
As hot lord Percy is on fire to go.

Nature to youth hot rashness doth dispense,
But with cold prudence age doth recompense.

Achilles is impatient, hot, revengeful; Aeneas, patient, considerate, and careful of his people.

5. Eager; keen in desire.

It is no wonder that men, either perplexed in the necessary affairs of life, or hot in the pursuit of pleasures, should not seriously examine their tenets.

She has, quoth Ralph, a jointure,
Which makes him have so hot a mind t' her.

6. It is applied likewise to the desire, or sense raising the desire, or action excited: as, a hot pursuit.

Nor law, nor checks of conscience will we hear,
When in hot scent of gain and full career.

7. Piquant; acrid: as, hot as mustard.

HO'TBED. n. f. A bed of earth made hot by the fermentation of dung.

The bed we call a hotbed is this: there was taken horsedung, old and well rotted; this was laid upon a bank half a foot high, and supported round about with planks, and upon the top was cast sifted earth two fingers deep.

Preserve the hotbed as much as possible from rain.

HOTBRAINED. adj. [hot and brain.]

Violent; vehement; furious.

You shall find 'em either hotbrain'd youth,
Or needy bankrupts.

HO'TCHPOT. } n. f. [baché en poche, French; or bachée en pot, French, as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used.]

A mingled hash; a mixture; a confused mass.

Such patching maketh Littleton's hotchpot of our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rather

HOT

to a Babellish confusion than any one entire language. Camden's Remains

A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture or hotch-potch of many tastes is unpleasant to the taste. Bacon's Natural History

Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcasses would remain;

But a mass'd heap, a hotchpotch of the slain. Dryden's Juvenal

HOTCOCKLES. n. f. [hautes coquilles, Fr.]

A play in which one covers his eyes, and guesses who strikes him.

The chytindra is certainly not our hotcockles; for that was by pinching, not by striking. Arbuthnot and Pope

As at hotcockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buxoma gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rose, and read soft mischief in her eye. Gay

HOTHEAD'D. adj. [hot and head.] Vehement; violent; passionate.

One would not make the same person zealous for a standing army and publick liberty; nor a hotheaded crackbrained coxcomb forward for a scheme of moderation. Arbuthnot

HOTHOUSE. n. f. [hot and house.]

1. A bagnio; a place to sweat and cup in.

Now she professes a hothouse, which is a very ill house too. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure

2. A brothel.

Where lately harbour'd many a famous whore,
A purging bill, now fix'd upon the door,
Tells you it is a hothouse; so it may,
And still be a whorehouse: th' are synonyma. Ben Jonson

HOTLY. adv. [from hot.]

1. With heat; not coldly.

2. Violently; vehemently.

The stag was in the end so hotly pursued, that he was driven to make courage of despair. Sidney
I do contest

As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did Content against thy valour. Shakspeare

The enemy, now at hand, began hotly to skirmish in divers places with the christians. Knolles' History

Though this controversy be revived, and hotly agitated, I doubt whether it be not a nominal dispute. Boyle

3. Lustfully.

Voracious birds, that hotly bill and breed,
And largely drink, because on salt they feed. Dryden

HOTMOUTH'D. adj. [hot and mouth.]

Headstrong; ungovernable.

I fear my people's faith,
That hotmouth'd beast that bears against the curb,
Hard to be broken. Dryden's Spanish Fryar

HOTNESS. n. f. [from hot.] Heat; violence; fury.

HOTSPUR. n. f. [hot and spur.]

1. A man violent, passionate, precipitate, and heady.

My nephew's trespasss may be well forgot;
It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,
A harebrain'd hotspur govern'd by a spleen. Shakspeare

Wars are begun by hairbrained dissolute captains, parasitical fawners, unquiet hotspurs, and restless innovators. Burton

2. A kind of pea of speedy growth.

Of such peas as are planted or sown in gardens, the hotspur is the speediest of any in growth. Mortimer

HOTSPURRED. adj. [from hotspur.]

Vehement; rash; heady.

To draw Mars like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or Venus like that hotspurred Harpalice in Virgil, this proceedeth from a senseless judgment. Peacham

HOU

HOVE. The preterit of heave.

HOVEL. n. f. [diminutive of hope, house, Saxon.]

1. A shed open on the sides, and covered overhead.

So likewise a hovel will serve for a roome,
To stacke on the pease, when harvest shall come. Tusser

If you make a hovel, thatched, over some quantity of ground, plank the ground over, and it will breed saltpetre. Bacon

Your hay it is mow'd, your corn it is reap'd,
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd. Dryden

2. A mean habitation; a cottage.

The men clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them and milk them, and do all the dairy-work in such sorry hovels and sheds as they build to inhabit in during the summer. Ray on the Creation

To HOVEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To shelter in a hovel.

And was't thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Shakspeare

HO'VEN. part. pass. [from heave.] Raised; swelled; tumefied.

Tom Piper hath hoven and puffed up cheeks;
If cheese be so hoven, make Cisse to seek creeks. Tusser

To HO'VER. v. n. [hovio, to hang over, Welsh.]

1. To hang in the air overhead, without flying off one way or other.

Some fiery devil hovs in the sky,
And pours down mischief. Shakspeare

Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hovers about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation. Shakspeare

A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night. Dryden

Great flights of birds are hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it. Addison

'Till as the earthly part decays and falls,
The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;
Hovers a-while upon the sad remains,
Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,
And thence with liberty unbounded flies,
Impatient to regain her native skies. Prior

Some less refin'd, beneath the moon's pale light,
Hovers, and catch the shooting stars by night. Pope

2. To stand in suspense or expectation.

The landlord will no longer covenant with him; for that he daily looketh after change and alteration, and hovereth in expectation of new worlds. Spenser on Ireland

3. To wander about one place.

We see so warlike a prince at the head of so great an army, hovering on the borders of our confederates. Addison

The truth and certainty is seen, and the mind fully possesses itself of it; in the other, it only hovs about it. Locke

HOUGH. n. f. [hog, Saxon.]

1. The lower part of the thigh.

Blood shall be from the sword unto the belly, and dung of men into the camel's hough. 2 Esd.

2. [huë, French.] An adz; a hoe. See HOE.

Did they really believe that a man, by houghs and an axe, could cut a god out of a tree? Stillingfleet

To HOUGH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hamstring; to disable by cutting the sinews of the ham.

Thou shalt hough their horses. Joshua

2. To cut up with a hough or hoe.

HOU

3. To hawk. This orthography is uncommon. See To HAWK.

Neither could we hough or spit from us; much less could we sneeze or cough. Grew

HOULET. n. f. The vulgar name for an owl. The Scots and northern counties still retain it.

HOULT. n. f. [holt, Saxon.] A small wood. Obsolete.

Or as the wind, in hoults and shady greaves,
A murmur makes among the boughs and leaves. Fairfax

HOUND. n. f. [hund, Saxon; hund, Scottish.] A dog used in the chase.

Hounds and greyhounds, mungrels, spaniels, curs,

Are cleped all by the name of dogs. Shakspeare
Jason threw, but fail'd to wound

The boar, and slew an undeserving hound,
And through the dog the dart was nail'd to ground. Dryden

The kind spaniel and the faithful hound,
Likest that fox in shape and species found,

Pursues the noted path and covets home. Prior

To HOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set on the chase.

God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare. Bramhall

2. To hunt; to pursue.

If the wolves had been hounded by tygers, they should have worried them. L'Estrange

HO'UNDFISH. n. f. [musclea levis.] A kind of fish. Ainsworth

HOUNDSTONGUE. n. f. [cynoglossum, Latin.] A plant. Miller

HOUP. n. f. [upupa, Latin.] The puet. Ainsworth

HOUR. n. f. [heure, Fr. hora, Lat.]

1. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; the space of sixty minutes.

See the minutes how they run:
How many makes the hour full compleat,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shakspeare

2. A particular time.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That funder'd friends greet in the hour of death. Shakspeare

When we can intreat an hour to serve,
We'll spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time. Shakspeare

The conscious wretch must all his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour, of unrepenting death. Dryden

3. The time as marked by the clock.

The hour runs through the roughest day. Shakspeare

Our neighbour let her floor to a genteel man, who kept good hours. Tatler

They are as loud any hour of the morning, as our own countrymen at midnight. Addison

HO'URGLASS. n. f. [hour and glass.]

1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.

Next morning, known to be a morning better by the hourglass than the day's clearness. Sidney

In sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it; for the mind doth value every moment. Bacon

Shake not his hourglass, when his hasty sand is ebbing to the last. Dryden's Spanish Fryar

2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.

We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrown great forces in the field. Bacon

HOURLY. adj. [from hour.] Happening or done every hour; frequent; often repeated.

Alcyone

Computes how many nights he had been gone,
Observes the waning moon with hourly view,
Numbers her age, and wishes for a new. Dryd.

We must live in hourly expectation of having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us. Swift.

HOURLY. adv. [from hour.] Every hour; frequently.

She deserves a lord;
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And hourly call her mistress. Shakspeare.

Our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

They with ceaseless cry
Surround me, as thou saw'st; hourly conceiv'd,
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd,
Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd. Dryden.

HOURLY. n. f. [hour and plate.]

The dial; the plate on which the hours, pointed by the hand of a clock, are inscribed.

If eyes could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourplate, and thereby at a distance see what o'clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that acuteness. Locke.

HOUSE. n. f. [hur, Saxon; huys, Dut. huse, Scottish.]

1. A place wherein a man lives; a place of human abode.

Sparrows must not build in his house eaves.
Shakspeare.

Houses are built to live in, not to look on;
therefore let use be preferred before uniformity, except where both may be had. Bacon.

In a house the doors are moveable, and the rooms square; yet the house is neither moveable nor square. Watts.

2. Any place of abode.

The bees with smoke, the doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driven away.
Shakspeare.

3. Place in which religious or studious persons live in common; monastery;
college.

Theodosius arrived at a religious house in the city, where now Constantia resided. Addison.

4. The manner of living; the table.

He kept a miserable house, but the blame was laid wholly upon madam. Swift.

5. Station of a planet in the heavens, astrologically considered.

Pure spiritual substances we cannot converse with, therefore have need of means of communication, which some make to be the celestial houses: those who are for the celestial houses worship the planets, as the habitations of intellectual substances that animate them. Stillingfleet.

6. Family of ancestors; descendants, and kindred; race.

The red rose and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our striving houses. Shakspeare.
An ignominious ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses; lawful mercy sure
Is nothing kin to foul redemption. Shakspeare.

By delaying my last line, upon your grace's accession to the patrimonies of your house, I may seem to have made a forfeiture. Dryden.

A poet is not born in ev'ry race;
Two of a house few ages can afford,
One to perform, another to record. Dryden.

7. A body of the parliament; the lords or commons collectively considered.

Nor were the crimes objected against him so clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both houses, especially that of the lords. King Charles.

To HOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To harbour; to admit to residence.

Palladius wished him to house all the Helots.
Sidney.

Upon the North-sea a valley houseth a gentleman, who hath worn out his former name.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Slander lives upon succession,
For ever housed where it gets possession. Shakspeare.

Mere cottagers are but housed beggars. Bacon.
Oh, can your counsel his despair defer,
Who now is housed in his sepulchre? Sandys.
We find them housing themselves in dens. South.

In expectation of such times as these,
A chapel hous'd 'em, truly called of ease. Dryden.

2. To shelter; to keep under a roof.

As we house not country plants to save them,
so we may house our own to forward them.
Bacon's Natural History.

House your choicest carnations, or rather set them under a penthouse, to preserve them in extremity of weather. Evelyn.

Wit in northern climates will not blow,
Except, like orange trees, 'tis hous'd from snow.
Dryden.

To HOUSE. v. n.

1. To take shelter; to keep abode; to reside.

Ne suffer it to house there half a day. Hub. Ta.
Graze where you will, you shall not house with me. Shakspeare.

Summers three times eight, save one,
She had told; alas! too soon,
After so short time of breath,
To house with darkness and with death. Milton.

2. To have an astrological station in the heavens.

In fear of this, observe the starry signs,
Where Saturn houses, and where Hermes joins.
Dryden.

I housing in the lion's hateful sign,
Bought senates and deserting troops are mine.
Dryden.

HOUSEBREAKER. n. f. [house and break.]

Burglar; one who makes his way into houses to steal.

All housebreakers and sharpers had thief written in their foreheads. L'Estrange.

HOUSEBREAKING. n. f. [house and break.] Burglary.

When he hears of a rogue to be tried for robbing or housebreaking, he will send the whole paper to the government. Swift.

HOUSED OG. n. f. [house and dog.] A mastiff kept to guard the house.

A very good housedog, but a dangerous cur to strangers, had a bell about his neck. L'Estrange.
You see the goodness of the master even in the old housedog. Addison.

HOUSEHOLD. n. f. [house and hold.]

1. A family living together.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny. Shak.
A little kingdom is a great household, and a great household a little kingdom. Bacon.

Of God observ'd
The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wondrous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milton.

He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men, a peculiar household of his love, which at all times he has cherished as a father, and govern'd as a master: this is the proper household of faith: in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families. Sprat.

Great crimes must be with greater crimes repaid,

And second funerals on the former laid;
Let the whole household in one ruin fall,
And may Diana's curse o'ertake us all. Dryden.
Learning's little household did embark,
With her world's fruitful system in her sacred ark. Swift.

In his own church he keeps a seat,
Says grace before and after meat;
And calls, without affecting airs,
His household twice a-day to prayers. Swift.

2. Family life; domestick management.

An inventory, thus importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household. Shakspeare.

3. It is used in the manner of an adjective, to signify domestick; belonging to the family.

Cornelius called two of his household servants.
Acts.

For nothing lovelier can be found
In woman, than to study household good;
And good works in her husband to promote. Milton.

It would be endless to enumerate the oaths among the men, among the women the neglect of household affairs. Swift.

HOUSEHOLDER. n. f. [from household.]

Master of a family.

A certain householder planted a vineyard. Mat.

HOUSEHOLDSTUFF. n. f. [household and stuff.] Furniture of a house; utensils convenient for a family.

In this war that he maketh, he still flieth from his foe, and lurketh in the thick woods, waiting for advantages: his cloke is his bed, yea and his householdstuff. Spenser on Ireland.

A great part of the building was consumed, with much costly householdstuff. Bacon.

The woman had her jest for her householdstuff. L'Estrange.

HOUSEKEEPER. n. f. [house and keep.]

1. Householder; master of a family.

To be said an honest man and a good housekeeper, goes as fairly as to say a graceful man and a great scholar. Shakspeare.

If I may credit housekeepers and substantial tradesmen, all sorts of provisions and commodities are risen excessively. Locke.

2. One who lives in plenty; one that exercises hospitality.

The people are apter to applaud housekeepers than houseraisers. Wolton.

3. One who lives much at home.

How do you both? You are manifest housekeepers. What are you sewing there? Shakspeare.

4. A woman servant that has care of a family, and superintends the other maid servants.

Merry folks, who want by chance
A pair to make a country-dance,
Call the old housekeeper, and get her,
To fill a place for want of better. Swift.

5. A housedog. Not in use.

Distinguish the housekeeper, the hunter. Shakspeare.

HOUSEKEEPING. adj. [house and keep.]

Domestick; useful to a family.

His house for pleasant prospect, large scope, and other housekeeping commodities, challengeth
the pre-eminence. Carew.

HOUSEKEEPING. n. f. Hospitality; liberal and plentiful table.

I hear your grace hath sworn out housekeeping.
Shakspeare.

His table was one of the last that gave us an example of the old housekeeping of an English nobleman: an abundance reigned, which shewed the master's hospitality. Prior.

HOUSEL. n. f. [hur], Saxon, from hunsel, Gothick, a sacrifice, or hostia, dimin.
hostiola, Latin.] The holy eucharist.

To Ho'USEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

To give or receive the eucharist. Both the noun and verb are obsolete.

Ho'USELEEK. n. f. [house and leek.] A plant.

The acerbs supply their quantity of cruder acids; as juices of apples, grapes, the sorrels, and houseleek.

Ho'USELESS. adj. [from house.] Wanting abode; wanting habitation.

Poor naked wretches,

How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you.

This hungry, houseless, suffering, dying Jesus, fed many thousands with five loaves and two fishes.

Ho'USEMAID. n. f. [house and maid.] A maid employed to keep the house clean.

The housemaid may put out the candle against the looking-glass.

Ho'USEROOM. n. f. [house and room.] Place in a house.

House-room, that costs him nothing, he bestows; Yet still we scribble on, though still we lose.

Ho'USESNAIL. n. f. A kind of snail.

Ho'USEWARMING. n. f. [house and warm.] A feast or merrymaking upon going into a new house.

Ho'USEWIFE. n. f. [house and wife. This is now frequently written, huswife, or huffy.]

1. The mistress of a family.

You will think it unfit for a good housewife to stir in or to busy herself about her housewifery.

I have room enough, but the kind and hearty housewife is dead.

2. A female economist.

Fitting is a mantle for a bad man, and surely for a bad housewife it is no less convenient; for some of them, that be wandering women, it is half a wardrobe.

Let us sit and mock the good housewife, fortune, from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be disposed equally.

He a good husband, a good housewife she.

Early housewives leave the bed,

When living embers on the hearth are spread.

The fairest among the daughters of Britain shew themselves good statewomen as well as good housewives.

3. One skilled in female business.

He was bred up under the tuition of a tender mother, till she made him as good an housewife as herself; he could preserve apricocks, and make jellies.

Ho'USEWIFELY. adv. [from housewife.]

With the economy of a careful woman.

Ho'USEWIFERY. adj. [from housewife.]

Skilled in the acts becoming a housewife.

Ho'USEWIFERY. n. f. [from housewife.]

1. Domestick or female business; management becoming the mistress of a family.

You will think it unfit for a good housewife to stir in or to busy herself about her housewifery.

He ordain'd a lady for his prize,

Generally praiseful; fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies.

Little butter was exported abroad, and that discredited by the housewifery of the Irish in making it up.

2. Female economy.

Learn good works for necessary uses; for St. Paul expresses the obligation of christian women to good housewifery, and charitable provisions for their family and neighbourhood.

Behold, he put no trust in his servants, how much less in them that dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust?

A great division fell among the nobility, so much the more dangerous by how much the spirits were more active and high.

By how much they would diminish the present extent of the sea, so much they would impair the fertility, and fountains and rivers of the earth.

It is much used in exclamation.

How are the mighty fallen!

How doth the city sit solitary as a widow!

In an affirmative sense, not easily explained; that so it is; that.

Thick clouds put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South-sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents.

HOWBE'IT. } adv. [how be it.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet; however. Not in use.

Siker thou speak'st like a lewd lorrel,

Of heaven to deem so,

Howbe I am but rude and borrel,

Yet nearer ways I know.

Things so ordained are to be kept, howbeit not necessarily, any longer than 'till there grow some urgent cause to ordain the contrary.

There is a knowledge which God hath always revealed unto them in the works of nature: this they honour and esteem highly as profound wisdom, howbeit this wisdom saveth them not.

There was no army transmitted out of England, howbeit the English colonies in Ireland did win ground upon the Irish.

HOWD'YE. [contracted from how do ye.]

In what state is your health? A message of civility.

I now write no letters but of plain business, or plain howd'ye's, to those few I am forced to correspond with.

HOWE'VER. adv. [how and ever.]

1. In whatsoever manner; in whatsoever degree.

This ring he holds

In most rich choice; yet in his idle fire,

To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,

Howe'er repented of.

To trace the ways

Of highest agents, deem'd howe'er wise.

2. At all events; happen what will; at least.

Our chief end is to be freed from all, if it may be, howe'er from the greatest evils; and to enjoy, if it may be, all good, howe'er the chiefest.

3. Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet.

In your excuse your love does little say;

You might howe'er have took a fairer way.

Its views are bounded on all sides by several ranges of mountains, which are howe'er at so great a distance, that they leave a wonderful variety of beautiful prospects.

I do not build my reasoning wholly on the case of persecution, howe'er I do not exclude it.

Few turn their thoughts to examine how those diseases in a state are bred, that hasten its end; which would, howe'er, be a very useful enquiry.

4. To some of these meanings this word may be commonly reduced, but its power is sometimes almost evanescent.

To Howl. v. n. [buglen, Dutch; ululo, Latin.]

1. To cry as a wolf or dog.

Methought a legion of foul fiends

Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears

Such hideous cries, that with the very noise

I trembling wak'd.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,

Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness.

Ho'USING. n. f. [from house.]

1. Quantity of inhabited building.

London is supplied with people to increase its inhabitants, according to the increase of housing.

2. [from houdeaux, houfes, or houfes, Fr.] Cloth originally used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental.

Ho'USLING. adj. [from house.] Provided for entertainment at first entrance into a house; housewarming.

His own two hands the holy knot did knit, That none but death for ever can divide;

His own two hands, for such a turn most fit, The housling fire did kindle and provide.

Houss. n. f. [from houdeaux, or houfes, French.] Covering of cloth originally used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental; housings.

This word, though used by Dryden, I do not remember in any other place.

Six lions' hides with thongs together fast, His upper parts defended to his waist;

And where man ended, the continu'd vest, Spread on his back, the hous and trappings of a beast.

HOW. adv. [hu, Saxon; hoe, Dutch.]

1. To what degree.

How long wilt thou refuse to humble thyself before me?

How much better is it to get wisdom than gold? and to get understanding, rather to be chosen than silver?

How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? And how oft cometh their destruction upon them?

O how love I thy law, it is my meditation.

How many children's plaints and mother's cries!

How many woeful widows left to howl

To sad disgrace!

Consider into how many differing substances it may be analysed by the fire.

2. In what manner.

Mark'd you not, How that the guilty kindred of the queen

Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence' death?

Prosecute the means of thy deliverance By ransom, or how else.

We examine the why and the how of things.

'Tis much in our power how to live, but not at all when or how to die.

It is pleasant to see how the small territories of this little republic are cultivated to the best advantage.

3. For what reason; from what cause.

How now, my love? Why is your cheek so pale?

How chance the roses there do fade so fast?

How is it thou hast found it so quickly?

4. By what means.

Men would have the colours of birds feathers, if they could tell how; or they will have gay skins instead of gay clothes.

5. In what state.

For how shall I go up to my father?

Whence am I forc'd, and whither am I born?

How, and with what reproach shall I return?

6. It is used in a sense marking proportion or correspondence.

Behold, he put no trust in his servants, how much less in them that dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust?

A great division fell among the nobility, so much the more dangerous by how much the spirits were more active and high.

By how much they would diminish the present extent of the sea, so much they would impair the fertility, and fountains and rivers of the earth.

It is much used in exclamation.

1. To cry as a wolf or dog.

Methought a legion of foul fiends

Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears

Such hideous cries, that with the very noise

I trembling wak'd.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,

Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness.

H U C

As when a fort of wolves infest the night,
With their wild howlings at fair Cynthia's light.
Waller.

Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,
Fierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;
He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant scorns.
Smith.

2. To utter cries in distress.

Therefore will I howl, and cry out for all Moab.
Jeremiah.

The damned use that word in hell,
Howlings attend it. Shaksp. Rom. and Jul.
Each new morn

New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows Strike Heaven on the face. Shaksp. Macb.
I have words

That would be howl'd out in the defart air,
Where hearing should not catch them. Shaksp.
The noise grows louder still:

Rattling of armour, trumpets, drums and ataballes;
And sometimes peals of shouts that rend the heav'ns,

Like victory: then groans again, and howlings
Like those of vanquish'd men. Dryden.

3. To speak with a belluine cry or tone.

Peace, monster, peace! Go tell thy horrid tale
To savages, and howl it out in defarts! Philips.

4. It is used poetically of many noises loud and horrid.

Howl. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The cry of a wolf or dog.

Murder,
Alarm'd by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch. Shaksp. Macb.
These and the like rumours are no more than the last howls of a dog dissected alive. Swift.

2. The cry of a human being in horror.

She raves, she runs with a distracted pace,
And fills with horrid howls the public place.
Dryden's Aeneid.

Howsoever. adv. [how and soever.]

1. In what manner soever. See HOWEVER.

Berosus, who, after Moses, was one of the most ancient, howsoever he hath been since corrupted, doth in the substance of all agree.
Raleigh's History.

2. Although.

The man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him. Shaksp. Macb.

To Hox. v. a. [from hog, Saxon.] To hough; to hamstring.

Thou art a coward,
Which hoxes honesty behind, restraining
From course required. Shaksp. Macb.

Lodronius, perceiving the old soldier's meaning, alighted, and with his sword hoxed his horse, saying aloud, This day, valiant soldiers, shall you have me both your general and fellow soldier, fighting on foot as one of yourselves. Knolles.

Hoy. n. f. [hou, old French.] A large boat sometimes with one deck.

He sent to Germany, strange aid to rear:
From whence estoons arrived here three hoyes
Of Saxons, whom he for his safety employs.
Fairy Queen.

To define a barge and hoy, which are between a boat and a ship, is hard. Watts' Logick.

Hu'BBUB. n. f. [I know not the etymology, unless it be from up, up, or bobnob.]
A tumult; a riot.

People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or reckoning, but the actors were really of the dregs of the people. Glareton.

An universal hubbub wild
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd,
Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
With loudest vehemence. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Why wolves raise a hubbub at her,
And dogs howl when she shines in water.
Hudibras.

Hu'CKABACK. n. f. A kind of linen on which the figures are raised.

H U D

Hu'CKLEBACKED. adj. [hocker, German, a bunch, and back.] Crooked in the shoulders.

Hu'CKLEBONE. n. f. [from hucken, Dut.
to fit down.] The hipbone.

Hu'CKSTER. } n. f. [hock, German, a Hu'CKSTERER. } pedlar; hockster, a she-pedlar.]

1. One who sells goods by retail, or in small quantities; a pedlar.

There cannot be a more ignominious trade than the being hucksters to such vile merchandise.
Government of the Tongue.

God deliver the world from such guides, or rather such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion. South.

Should thy shoe wrench aside, down, down
you fall,

And overturn the scolding huckster's stall,
The scolding huckster shall not o'er thee moan,
But pence expect for nuts and pears o'erthrown.
Gay.

There should be a confederacy of all servants,
to drive those China hucksters from the doors.
Swift.

Those hucksters or money-jobbers will be found necessary, if this brass-money is made current. Swift.

2. A trickish mean fellow.

Now the ape wanted his huckster man. Hub. T.

To Hu'CKSTER. v. n. [from the noun.]

To deal in petty bargains.

They must pay a shilling, for changing their piece into silver, to some huckstering fellow who follows that trade. Swift.

To Hu'DDLE. v. a. [probably from hood.]

1. To dress up close so as not to be dis- covered; to mobble.

2. To put on carelessly in a hurry.

At twelve she rose with much ado;
Her cloaths were huddl'd on by two. Prior.
Now all in haste they huddle on Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone.
Swift.

3. To cover up in haste.

4. To perform in a hurry.

I have given much application to this poem:
this is not a play huddled up in haste. Dryden.
When continu'd rain

The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,
Let him forecast his work with timely care,
Which else is huddled when the skies are fair.
Dryden.

5. To throw together in confusion.

Our adversary, huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion. Locke.

To Hu'DDLE. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurry.

Glance an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shaksp.
Brown answered after his blunt and huddling manner. Bacon.

Thyris, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to hear his madrigal,
And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale.
Milton.

Their eyes are more imperfect than others;
for they will run against things, and, huddling forwards, fall from high places. Brown.

Hu'DDLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion: with obscurity.

That the Aristotelian philosophy is a huddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the wisest. Glanville.

Your carrying business in a huddle,
Has forc'd our rulers to new model. Hudibras.
Nature doth nothing in a huddle. L'Estrange.
The understanding sees nothing distinctly in things remote, and in a huddle. Locke.

H U F

Several merry answers were made to my question, which entertained us 'till bed-time, and filled my mind with a huddle of ideas. Addison.

Hue. n. f. [hiepe, Saxon.]

1. Colour; die.

For never in that land
Face of fair lady she before did view,
Or that dread lyon's look her cast in deadly hue.
Spenser.

To add another hue unto the rainbow,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shaksp. Macb.
Flow'rs of all hue, and without thorn the rose.
Milton.

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue, Answer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Your's is much of the camelion hue,
To change the die with distant view. Dryden.

2. [huée, French.] A clamour; a legal pursuit; an alarm given to the country. It is commonly joined with cry.

Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight I am undone: fly, run, hue and cry! villain, I am undone. Shaksp. Macb.

Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road.
L'Estrange.

If you should hiss, he swears he'll hiss as high;
And, like a culprit, join the hue and cry. Addison.

The hue and cry went after Jack, to apprehend him dead or alive, wherever he could be found.
Arbutnot's John Bull.

Hue'r. n. f. [huer, French, to cry.]

One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a balker or huer, who standeth on the cliff-side, and from thence discerneth the course of the pilchard. Carew's Survey.

HUFF. n. f. [from hove, or hoven, swelled: he is huffed up by distempers. So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to heave or ferment:

huff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance.

Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word
To swear by, only in a lord;
In others it is but a huff,
To vapour with instead of proof. Hudibras.

His frowns kept multitudes in awe,
Before the bluster of whose huff
All hats, as in a storm, flew off. Hudibras.

We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very huff of our greatness.
L'Estrange.

A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the huff about his extraction. L'Estrange.

No man goes about to ensnare or circumvent another in a passion, to lay trains, and give secret blows in a present huff. South.

2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.

As for you, colonel huff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater plotter.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Lewd shallow-brained huffs make atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of wit. South.

To HUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To swell; to puff.

In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the windpipe. Grew.

2. To hector; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.

The commissioner at Magdalen college said to
Dr. Hough, you must not presume to huff us.
Eachard.

To HUFF. v. n. To bluster; to storm;
to bounce; to swell with indignation or pride.

HUG

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,
A cankerworm of peace, was rais'd above him.

Otway.

A thief and justice, fool and knave,
A huffing officer and slave.

Hudibras.

Huffing to cowards, fawning to the brave,
To knaves a fool, to cred'lous fools a knave.

Rescommon.

This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them.

South.

Now what 's his end? O charming glory say!
What, a fifth act to crown his huffing play?

Dryden.

What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those huffing opinions they are swelled with.

Locke.

When Peg received John's message, she huff-
ed and stormed like the devil.

Arbuthnot.

HUFFER. n. f. [from huff.] A bluster-er; a bully.

Nor have I hazarded my art
To be expos'd i' th' end to suffer,
By such a braggadocio huffer.

Hudibras.

HUFFISH. adj. [from huff.] Arrogant;
insolent; hectoring.

HUFFISHLY. adv. [from huffish.] With arrogant petulance; with bullying blufter.

HUFFISHNESS. n. f. Petulance; arrogance; noisy bluster.

To HUG. v. a. [hegian, Saxon, to hedge, to enclose.]

1. To press close in an embrace.

He bewept my fortune,

And hugg'd me in his arms.

Shakspeare.

What would not he do now to hug the creature that had given him so admirable a serenade!

L'Estrange.

'Ev'n in that urn their brother they confess,
And hug it in their arms, and to their bosom press.

Dryden.

King Xerxes was enamoured upon an oak,
which he would hug and kiss.

Harvey.

2. To fondle; to treat with tenderness.

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unplaussible,
Win me into the easy hearted man,
And hug him into snares.

Milton.

We hug deformities, if they bear our names.

Glanville.

Admire yourself,

And, without rival, hug your darling book.

Roscommon.

Though they know that the flatterer knows the falsehood of his own flatteries, yet they love the impostor, and with both arms hug the abuse.

South.

Mark with what joy he hugs the dear discovery!

Rowe.

3. To hold fast.

Age makes us most fondly hug and retain the good things of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying them.

Atterbury.

4. To gripe in wrestling.

HUG. n. f. [from the noun.]

1. Close embrace.

Why these close hugs? I owe my shame to him.

Gay.

2. A particular gripe in wrestling, called a Cornish hug.

HUGE. adj. [hoogh, high, Dutch.]

1. Vast; immense.

Let the estate of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford; and who seeth not what huge difference there was between them?

Hooker.

This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalleth in greatness not only Asia, Europe, and Africa, but America.

Abbot.

HUL

2. Very great.

The mountain huge.

Milton.

Part, huge of bulk!

Wallowing unweildy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean; there leviathan
Hugest of living creatures, in the deep Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land.

Milton.

3. Great even to deformity or terribleness.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder.

Shakspeare.

Through forests huge, and long unravell'd heaths,

With desolation brown he wanders waste.

Thomson.

HUGELY. adv. [from huge.]

1. Immensely; enormously.

Who cries out on pride,

That can therein tax any private party?

Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea?

Shaksp.

2. Greatly; very much.

I am hugely bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourselves in our affairs, it is for our good.

Swift.

HUGENESS. n. f. [from huge.]

1. Enormous bulk; greatness.

2. Utmost extent. Not in use.

My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness
of your unworthy thinking.

Shakspeare.

HUGGERMUGGER. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from hugger morcker, or hug in the dark. Morcker in Danish is darkness, whence our murky. It is written by sir Thomas Moore, boker moker. Hoker, in Chaucer, is peevish, crossgrained, of which moker may be only a ludicrous reduplication. Hooke is likewise in German a corner, and moky is in English dark. I know not how to determine.]
Secrecy; by-place.

Now hold in huggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of floods and land.

Hubberd's Tale.

But if I can but find them out,

Where'er th' in huggermugger lurk,

I'll make them rue their handy work.

Hudibras.

There's a distinction betwixt what's done openly and bare-faced, and a thing that's done in huggermugger, under a seal of secrecy and concealment.

L'Estrange.

HUGY. adj. [See HUGE.] Vast; great;
huge. Not in use.

This hugy rock one finger's force apparently will move.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HUKE. n. f. [buque, French.] A cloak.

As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger, in a rich huke.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

HULK. n. f. [bulcke, Dutch; hulc, Sax.]

1. The body of a ship.

There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold.

Shakspeare.

The custom of giving the colour of the sea to the hulks, sails, and mariners of their fly-boats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti.

Arbuthnot.

The Argo's hulk will tax,

And scrape her pitchy sides for wax.

Swift.

The footy hulk

Steer'd sluggish on.

Thomson.

2. Any thing bulky and unweildy. This sense is still retained in Scotland: as, a hulk of a fellow.

And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk sir
John,

Is prisoner to your son.

Shakspeare.

To HULK. v. a. To exentrate: as, to
hulk a hare.

Ainsworth.

HUM

HULL. n. f. [bulgan, Gothick, to cover.]

1. The hull or integument of any thing; the outer covering: as, the hull of a nut covers the shell. [bule, Scottish.]

2. The body of a ship; the hull. Hull and hulk are now confounded; but hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.

Dryden.

So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the hull and tackle of a thinking creature.

Grew.

To HULL. v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.

They saw a fight full of piteous strangeness;
a ship, or rather the carcase of a ship, or rather some few bones of the carcase, hulling there, part broken, part burned, and part drowned.

Sidney.

Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.

— No, good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer.

Shakspeare.

He look'd, and saw the ark hull on the flood.

Milton.

People walking down upon the shore, saw somewhat come hulling toward them.

L'Estrange.

HULLY. adj. [from hull.] Siliquose;
hulky.

Ainsworth.

HULVER. n. f. Holly.

Save hulver and thorn, thereof sail for to make.

Tusser.

To HUM. v. a. [homelan, Dutch.]

1. To make the noise of bees.

The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing.

Bacon.

An airy nation flew

Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew

Dryden.

In summer's heat.

So weary bees in little cells repose;

But if night-robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,

An humming through their waxen city grows.

Dryden.

2. To make an inarticulate and buzzing sound.

I think he'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.

Shakspeare.

Upon my honour, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me.

Shakspeare.

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, you'll rue.

Shaksp.

3. To pause in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.

Having pump'd up all his wit,

And hum'd upon it, thus he writ.

Hudibras.

I still acquiesc,

And never hum'd and haw'd sedition,

Nor snuffled treason.

Hudibras.

The man lay humming and hawing a good while; but in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians.

L'Estrange.

4. To make a dull heavy noise.

The musical accents of the Indians, to us, are but inarticulate *humming*s; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs.

Glanville.

Still humming on, their drowsy course they keep,

And lash'd so long, like tops, are lash'd asleep.

Pope.

5. To sing low.

Hum half a tune.

Pope.

6. To applaud. Approbation was commonly expressed in public assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.

HUM. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of bees or insects.

To black Hecat's summon
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums
Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shakspeare.
Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,
To him who muses through the woods at noon. Thomson.

2. A low confused noise, as of bustling crowds at a distance.

From camp to camp, thro' the foul womb of
night,
The hum of either army still reflows. Shakspeare.
Tower'd cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men. Milton.
One theatre there is of vast resort,
Which whilom of requests was call'd the court;
But now the great exchange of news 'tis hight,
And full of hum and buz from noon 'till night. Dryden.

3. Any low dull noise.

Who sat the nearest, by the words o'ercome,
Slept fast: the distant nodded to the hum. Pope.

4. A pause with an inarticulate sound.

These shrugs, these hums and haws,
When you have said the 's goodly, come between,
Ere you can say the 's honest. Shakspeare.
Your excuses want some grains to make 'em current: hum and ha will not do the business. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. In Hudibras it seems used for ham.

And though his countrymen the Huns,
Did stew their meat between their hums
And the horses backs, on which they straddle,
And ev'ry man eat up his saddle. Hudibras.

6. An expression of applause.

You hear a hum in the right place. Spectator.

HUM. interject. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.

Let not your eyes despise the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.
—Hum! I guess at it. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
See fir Robert—hum!

And never laugh for all my life to come. Pope.

HUMAN. adj. [humanus, Lat. humain, French.]

1. Having the qualities of a man.

It will never be asked whether he be a gentleman born, but whether he be a human creature? Swift.

2. Belonging to man.

The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakspeare.
For man to tell how human life began
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew? Milton.

Thee, serpent, subtil'st beast of all the field,
I knew; but not with human voice indu'd. Milt.
Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any, this being the highest of all human certainty. Locke.

HUMA'NE. adj. [humaine, Fr.] Kind; civil; benevolent; good-natured.

Love of others, if it be not spent upon a few, doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable. Bacon.

Envy, malice, covetousness and revenge are abolished: a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral, more humane, are planted in their stead. Sprat.

HUMA'NELY. adv. [from humane.] Kindly; with good-nature.

If they would yield us the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely. Shakspeare.

HU'MANIST. n. f. [humaniste, Fr.] A philologer; a grammarian: a term used in the schools of Scotland.HUMA'NITY. n. f. [humanité, Fr. humanitas, Latin.]

1. The nature of man.

Look to thyself: reach not beyond humanity. Sidney.

A rarer spirit never did steer humanity. Shak.
The middle of humanity thou never knewest,
but the extremity of both ends. Shakspeare.
To preserve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.

2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.

If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind by his information. Glanville.

3. Benevolence; tenderness.

All men ought to maintain peace and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Locke.

How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,
And court the offices of soft humanity?
Like thee reserve their raiment for the naked,
Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,
Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep? Rowe.

4. Philology; grammatical studies. In Scotland, humaniores literæ.

To HU'MANIZE. v. a. [humaniser, Fr.]
To soften; to make susceptible of tenderness or benevolence.

Here will I paint the characters of woe,
And here my faithful tears in show'rs shall flow,
To humanize the flints whereon I tread. Wotton.

Was it the business of magick to humanize our natures with compassion, forgiveness, and all the instances of the most extensive charity? Addison.

HU'MANKIND. n. f. [human and kind.] The race of man; mankind.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd;
A knowledge both of books and humankind. Pope.

HU'MANLY. adv. [from human.]

1. After the notions of men; according to the power of men.

Thus the present happy prospect of our affairs, humanly speaking, may seem to promise. Atterbury.

2. Kindly; with good-nature. This is now written humanely.

Though learn'd, well bred; and though well bred, sincere;
Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope.

HU'MBIRD. n. f. [from hum and bird.] The humming bird.

All ages have conceived the wren the least of birds, yet our own plantations have shewed one far less; that is, the humbird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown.

HU'MBLE. adj. [humble, Fr. humilis, Lat.]

1. Not proud; modest; not arrogant.

And mighty proud to humble weak does yield. Spenser.

Now we have shewn our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a-doing. Shakspeare.

Thy humble servant vows obedience,
And faithful service, 'till the point of death. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

We should be as humble in our imperfections and sins, as Christ was in the fulness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect life. Taylor.

You, if an humble husband, may request,
Provide and order all things for the best. Dryd.

Ten thousand trifles light as these,
Nor can my rage nor anger move:
She should be humble who would please;
And she must suffer, who can love. Prior.

2. Low; not high; not great.

Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow-poet, Cowley, mark!
Above the skies let thy proud musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.
Denied what ev'ry wretch obtains of fate,
An humble roof and an obscure retreat. Yalden.

Ah! prince, hadst thou but known the joys which dwell

With humbler fortunes, thou wouldst curse thy royalty! Rowe.

Far humbler titles suit my lost conditions. Smith.

To HU'MBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make humble; to make submissive; to make to bow down with humility.

Take this purse, thou whom the heav'n's plagues

Have humbled to all strokes. Shakspeare.

The executioner

Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon. Shakspeare.

Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you. 1 Peter.

Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart. 2 Chronicles.

Why do I humble thus myself, and suing
For peace, reap nothing but repulse and hate? Milton.

Let the sinner put away the evil of his doings, and humble himself by a speedy and sincere repentance; let him return to God, and then let him be assured that God will return to him. Rogers.

2. To crush; to break; to subdue; to mortify.

Yearly injoin'd, some say, to undergo
This annual humbling certain number'd days,
To dash their pride and joy, for man seduc'd. Milton.

We are pleased by some implicit kind of revenge, to see him taken down and humbled in his reputation, who had so far raised himself above us. Addison.

The mistress of the world, the seat of empire,
The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods,
That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth. Addison's Cato.

Men that make a kind of insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the public tranquillity. Freeholder.

Fortune not much of humbling me can boast;
Though double tax'd, how little have I lost! Pope.

3. To make to condescend.

This would not be to condescend to their capacities, when he humbles himself to speak to them, but to lose his design in speaking. Locke.

4. To bring down from a height.

In process of time the highest mountains may be humbled into vallies; and again, the lowest vallies exalted into mountains. Hakewill.

HU'MBLEBEE. n. f. [humble and bee.]

What may be the true etymology of this word I am in doubt. The humble-bee is known to have no sting. The Scotch call a cow without horns a humble cow; so that the word seems to signify inermis, wanting the natural weapons. Dr. Beattie. A buzzing wild bee.

The honeybags steal from the humblebees,
And for night tapers crop their waxen thighs. Shakspeare.

This puts us in mind once again, of the humblebees and the tinderboxes. Atterbury.

HU'MBLEBEE. n. f. An herb. *Ainsw.*HU'MBLEBEE Eater. n. f. A fly that eats the humblebee. *Ainsworth.*HU'MBLENESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humility; absence of pride.

With how true humbleness

They look'd down to triumph over pride! Sidney.

I am rather with all subjected humbleness, to thank her excellencies, since the duty thereunto gave me rather heart to save myself, than to receive thanks. Sidney.

It was answered by us all, in all possible hum-

bleness; but yet with a countenance, that we knew he spoke it but merrily. Bacon.
A grain of glory, mixed with humbleness,
Cures both a fever and lethargickness. Herbert.

HU'MBLER. n. f. [from humble.] One that humbles or subdues himself or others.

HU'MBLEMOUTHED. adj. [humble and mouthe.] Mild; meek.

You are meek and humblemouth'd: but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogancy, spleen, and pride. Shakspeare.

HU'MBLEPLANT. n. f. A species of sensitive plant.

The humbleplant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, it prostrates itself on the ground, and in a short time elevates itself again: it is raised in hotbeds. Mortimer.

HU'MBLES. n. f. Entrails of a deer.

HU'MBLESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humbleness; humility. Obsolete.

And with meek humbleness, and afflicted mood,
Pardon for thee, and grace for me intreat. Spenser.

HU'MBLY. adv. [from humble.]

1. Without pride; with humility; modestly; with timorous modesty.

They were us'd to bend,
To send their smiles before them to Achilles,
To come humbly as they us'd to creep to holy altars. Shakspeare.

Here the tam'd Euphrates humbly glides
And there the Rhine submits her swelling tides. Dryden.

Write him down a slave, who, humbly proud,
With presents begs preferments from the crowd. Dryden.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death,
Thy goodness I'll adore;
And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humbly hope for more. Addison.

2. Without height; without elevation.

HU'MDRUM. adj. [from hum, drone, or humming drone.] Dull; dronish; stupid.

Shall we, quoth she, stand still humdrum,
And see stout Bruin, all alone,
By numbers basely overthrown? Hudibras.
I was talking with an old humdrum fellow, and, before I had heard his story out, was called away by business. Addison.

TO HUME'CT. } v. a. [hume'cto,
TO HUME'CTATE. } Lat. hume'cter,
French.] To wet; to moisten.

The Nile and Niger do not only moisten and contemporate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and hume'ctate the earth by their annual inundations. Brown.

Her rivers are divided into sluices, to hume'ctate the bordering soil. Howel's Vocal Forest.

The medicaments are of a cool hume'cting quality, and not too much astringent. Wiseman.

HUME'CTA'TION. n. f. [hume'ctation, Fr. from hume'ctate.] The act of wetting; moistening.

Plates of brass, applied to a blow, will keep it down from swelling: the cause is repercussion, without hume'ctation, or entrance of any body. Bacon's Natural History.

That which is concreted by exiccation, or expression of humidity, will be resolved by hume'ctation, as earth and clay. Brown.

HU'MERAL. adj. [humeral, French, from humerus, Latin.] Belonging to the shoulder.

The largest crooked needle should be used, with a ligature, in taking up the humeral arteries in amputation. Sharp.

HUMICUBA'TION. n. f. [humi and cubo,

H U M

Latin.] The act of lying on the ground.

Fasting and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and humicubations, used to be companions of repentance. Bramhall.

HUMID. adj. [humide, French; humidus, Latin.] Wet; moist; watery.

Iris there, with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers of more mingl'd hue
Than her purpled scarf can shew. Milton.

The queen, recover'd, rears her humid eyes,
And first her husband on the poop espies. Dryd.
If they slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opticks.

HUMI'DITY. n. f. [humidité, Fr. from humid.] That quality which we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies.

Humidity differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the congruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quicksilver is not a moist liquor, in respect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to; but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere: And even water itself, that wets almost every thing, and is the great standard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing, for it stands and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl. Quincy.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watry pumpkin. Shakspeare.

O blessing-breeding sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy sister's orb Infect the air! Shakspeare's Timon of Athens.

Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and relishing. Arbuthnot.

HUMILIA'TION. n. f. [French.]

1. Descent from greatness; act of humility.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed upon the latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Hooker.

Thy humiliation shall exalt
With thee thy manhood also to this throne. Milton.

2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.

John fared poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

With tears
Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.

3. Abatement of pride.

It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the habits and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.

HUMI'LITY. n. f. [humilité, French.]

1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

H U M

I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility. Shakspeare.
What the height of a king tempteth to revenge, the humility of a christian teacheth to forgive. King Charles.

The humility of the style gained them many friends. Clarendon.

There are some that use
Humility to serve their pride, and seem Humble upon their way, to be the prouder
At their wish'd journey's end. Denham.

It is an easy matter to extol humility in the midst of honour, or to begin a fast after dinner. South.

As high turrets for their airy steep,
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot,
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lye,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

2. Act of submission.

With these humilities they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avoided the present storm. Davies.

HU'MMER. n. f. [from hum.] That which hums; an applauder. Ainsworth.

This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harvey on Consumptions.

HU'MORIST. n. f. [humorista, Italian; humoriste, French.]

1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; one who gratifies his own humour.

The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watts.

This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives his superfluities to purchase heaven. Addison.

2. One who has odd conceits.

The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist. Spektor.

3. One who has violent and peculiar passions.

By a wise and timeous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon to Villiers.

HU'MOROUS. adj. [from humour.]

1. Full of grotesque or odd images.

Some of the commentators tell us, that Marfya was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the satire Marfyas, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.

2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.

I am known to be a humorous patrician; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Thou fortune's champion, that do'st never fight

But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To teach thee safety. Shakspeare's King John.

He's humorous as winter, and as sudden
As flaws congeal'd in the spring of day. Shaksp.

O, you awake then: come away,
Times be short, are made for play;
The humorous moon too will not stay:

What doth make you thus delay? Ben Jonson.

Vast is his courage, boundless in his mind,
Rough as a storm, and humorous as the wind. Dryden.

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts's Logic.

3. Pleasant; jocular.

Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot;

Watts.

HUNGER. n. ſ. [hungen, Sax. honger, Dutch.]

1. Deſire of food; the pain felt from faſting.

An uneaſy ſenſation at the ſtomach for food. When the ſtomach is empty and the fibres in their natural tenſion, they draw up ſo cloſe as to rub againſt each other, ſo as to make that ſenſation: but when they are diſtended with food, it is again removed; unleſs when a perſon faſteth ſo long as for want of ſpirits, or nervous fluid, to have thoſe fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we ſay a perſon has faſted away his ſtomach.
Quincy.

Thou ſhalt ſerve thine enemies in hunger and in thirſt.
Deuteronomy.

The ſubacid part of the animal ſpirits, being caſt off by the lower nerves upon the coats of the ſtomach, vellicates the fibres, and thereby produces the ſenſe we call hunger.
Grew.

Something viſcous, fat and oily, remaining in the ſtomach, deſtroys the ſenſation of hunger.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Any violent desire.

My more having, would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Widely they gape, and to the eye they roar,
As if they hunger'd for the food they bore. Cowley.

2. To desire with great eagerness; to long.

Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours,
Before thy hour be ripe? O, foolish youth,
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!
Stay but a little. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
I content me,
And from the sting of famine fear no harm,
Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts that feed Me hung'ring more to do my Father's will. Milton.

HUNGERBIT. } adj. [hunger and HUNGERBITTEN. } bit.] Pained or

They belch us. Shakspeare.

HUNGERSTARVED. adj. [hunger and starved.] Starved with hunger; pinched by want of food.

All my followers to th' eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,
Or lambs pursu'd by hungerstarved wolves. Shakspeare.
Go, go, cheer up thy hungerstarved men. Shakspeare.

As to some holy house th' afflicted came,
Th' hungerstarv'd, the naked, and the lame,
Want and diseases, fled before her name. Dryd.

HUNGRED. adj. [from hunger.] Pinched by want of food.

Odours do in a small degree nourish, and we see men an hungred love to smell hot bread. Bacon.

HUNGRILY. adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,
Who pity'd suffering mortals long ago;
When on harsh acorns hungrily they fed,
And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread. Dryd.

HUNGRY. adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.

That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood. Shakspeare.

before he was dry, he was sure never to eat or drink much at a time. Temple.

They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it;
whereas hunger consists in that very sensation. Locke.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolific; more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.

Cassius has a lean and hungry look. Shakspeare.
The more fat water will bear sop best; for the hungry water doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon.

In rushy grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Mortimer.

To the great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, for reaping the fruits that we here sow in the most hungry and barren soil. Smalridge.

HUNKS. n. f. [hunsker, fordid, Islandick.] A covetous fordid wretch; a miser; a curmudgeon.

The old hunks was well served, to be tricked out of a whole hog for the securing of his puddings. L'Esrange.

She has a husband, a jealous, covetous, old hunks. Dryden.

Irus has given all the intimations of being a close hunks, worth money. Addison.

TO HUNT. v. a. [huntran, Sax. from hund, a dog.]

1. To chase wild animals.

The man that once did fell the lion's skin,
While the best liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him. Shakspeare.

Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Job.

We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison.

2. To pursue; to follow close.

Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Psalms.

The heart strikes five hundred sorts of pulses in an hour, and is hunted unto such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that fain would it break. Harvey on Consumptions.

3. To search for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Spenser.

All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from principles: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.

He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison.

TO HUNT. v. n.

1. To follow the chase.

When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Esau went to the field to hunt for venison. Gen.

One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and hunting. Locke.

On the old pagan tombs, masks, hunting matches, and bacchanals are very common. Addison on Italy.

2. To pursue or search.

Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pack of hounds.

The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd

By sov'reign pow'r, her company disdain'd, Grinn'd as they pass'd. Dryd. Hind and Panther.

2. A chase.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakspeare.

3. Pursuit.

I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree
Escap'd the hunt. Shakspeare's King Lear.

HUNTER. n. f. [from hunt.]

1. One who chases animals for pastime or food.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, boggs, and woods within the limits of forests, chaces and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Davies on Ireland.

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milton.

Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden's Aeneid.

This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a passage of Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron. Addison on Italy.

Bold Nimrod first the savage chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

2. A dog that scents game or beasts of prey.

Of dogs, the valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakspeare.

HUNTINGHORN. n. f. [hunting and horn.] A bugle; a horn used to cheer the hounds.

Whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his huntinghorn and pole. Prior.

HUNTRESS. n. f. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chase.

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway. Shakspeare.

Shall I call
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?

Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow, Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste. Milton.

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope.

Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder; but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Broome.

HUNTSMAN. n. f. [hunt and man.]

1. One who delights in the chase.

Like as a huntsman, after weary chase,
Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him. Spenser's Sonnets.

Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
What huntsman of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a monster chase? Waller.

2. The servant whose office it is to manage the chase.

Apply this moral rather to the huntsman, that managed the chase, than to the master. L'Esrange.

HUNTSMANSHIP. n. f. [from huntsman.]

The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day
Give the art of rhiming, huntsmanship, or play. Donne.

HURDLE. n. f. [hyrdel, Saxon.]

1. A texture of sticks woven together; a crate.

The sled, the tumbrel, hurdles and the flail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden's Georg.

2. Crate on which criminals were dragged to execution.

Settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither. Shakspeare.

The blacksmith was hanged, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn; taking pleasure upon the hur- dle, to think that he should be famous in after-times. Bacon.

HURDS. n. f. The refuse of hemp or flax. Ainsworth.

TO HURL. v. a. [from huorlt, to throw] down, Islandick; or, according to Skinner, from whirl.]

1. To throw with violence; to drive impetuously.

If heav'n's have any grievous plagues in store,
O, let them keep it 'till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee! Shakspeare's Richard III.

He holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

Shakspeare.

I with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame. Shakspeare.

If he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait. Numbers.

They use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones. Chronicles.

Hurl ink and wit,
As madmen stones. Ben Jonson.

His darling sons,
Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse
Their frail original and faded blifs. Milton.

She strikes the lute; but if it sound,
Threatens to hurl it on the ground. Waller.

Corrupted light of knowledge hurl'd
Sin, death, and ignorance, o'er all the world.

Denham.

Young Phaeton,
From east to north irregularly hurl'd,
First set himself on fire, and then the world.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,
And hurl'd them headlong to their fleet and main. Pope.

2. To utter with vehemence. [hurler, Fr. to make a howling or hideous noise.] This sense is not in use.

The glad merchant that does view
His ship far come from wat'ry wilderness,
He hurls out vows. Spenser.

Highly they rag'd against the Highest,
Hurling defiance towards the vaults of heav'n. Milton.

3. To play at a kind of game.

Hurling taketh its denomination from throwing of the ball, and is of two sorts; to goals, and to the country: for hurling to goals there are fifteen or thirty players, more or less, chosen out on each side, who strip themselves, and then join hands in ranks, one against another: out of these ranks they match themselves by pairs, one embracing another, and so pass away; every of which couple are to watch one another during this play. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

- HURL. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult; riot; commotion.

He in the same hurl murdering such as he thought would withstand his desire, was chosen king. Knolles.

- HURLBAT. n. f. [hurl and bat.] Whirlbat.

Ainsworth.

- HURLER. n. f. [from hurl.] One that plays at hurling.

The hurlers must hurl man to man, and not two set upon one man at once. Carew.

- HURLWIND. n. f. [hurl and wind.] A whirlwind; a violent gust. A word not in use.

Like scatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,
By rapid hurlwinds from his mansion thrown.

Sandys.

- HURLY. } n. f. [from the Fr. hurlubrelu, inconsiderately.] Tumult; commotion; bustle.

Winds take the ruffian billows by the top,
That with the hurly death itself awakes. Shakspeare.

Poor discontents,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurlyburly innovation. Shakspeare.

Methinks, I see this hurly all on foot. Shakspeare.

All places were filled with tumult and hurly;
hurly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, and in cities presently to be besieged. Knolles.

- HURRICANE. } n. f. [huracan, Span. ouragan, Fr.] A violent storm, such as is often experienced in the western hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;
Your cataracts and hurricanes spout! Shakspeare.

A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havoc where it comes.

Burnet's Theory.

A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and blustering;
heaven and earth were coming together at every word;
a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners with selected friends withdraw;
There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wife,
Whispering like winds, ere hurricanes arise.

Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.

Addison.

- HURRIER. n. f. [from hurry.] One that hurries; a disturber.

Mars, that horrid hurrier of men. Chapman.

- TO HURRY. v. n. [hengrian, to plunder, Saxon: hurs was likewise a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb.] To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.

Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone
To offer service to your enemy;
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends.

Shakspeare.

For whom all this haste
Of midnight march, and hurry'd meeting here?

Milton.

Impetuous lust hurries him on to satisfy it.

Sout h.

That hurry'd o'er
Such swarms of English to the neighb'ring shore.

Dryden.

A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage. Addison.

Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That hurry you away. Rowe's Royal Convert.

If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed, the reader is hurried out of himself by the poet's imagination. Pope.

- TO HURRY. v. n. To move on with precipitation.

Did you but know what joys your way attend,
You would not hurry to your journey's end.

Dryden.

- HURRY. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult; precipitation; commotion.

Among all the horrible hurries in England,
Ireland was then almost quiet. Hayward.

It might have pleased him in the present heat and hurry of his rage; but must have displeased him infinitely in the sedate reflection. South.

After the violence of the hurry and commotion was over, the water came to a state somewhat more calm. Woodward.

Ambition raises a tumult in the soul, it inflames the mind, and puts it into a violent hurry of thought. Addison.

A long train of coaches and six ran through the heart, one after another, in a very great hurry.

Addison.

I do not include the life of those who are in a perpetual hurry of affairs, but of those who are not always engaged.

Addison.

The pavement sounds with trampling feet,
And the mixt hurry barricades the street. Gay.

- HURST. n. f. [hýrzt, Saxon.] A grove or thicket of trees. Ainsworth.

TO HURT. v. a. pret. I hurt; part. pass. I have hurt. [hýrzt, wounded, Saxon; heurter, to strike, French.]

1. To mischief; to harm.

He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death. Revelation.

Virtue may be assail'd, but never hurt;
Surpris'd by unjust force, but not enthrall'd.

Milton.

The Adonis of the sea is so called, because it is a loving and innocent fish, that hurts nothing that has life. Walton.

2. To wound; to pain by some bodily harm.

My heart is turn'd to stone: I strike it, and it hurts my hand. Shakspeare's Othello.

It breeds contempt
For herds to listen, or presume to pry,
When the hurt lion groans within his den.

Dryden.

3. To damage; to impair.

See thou hurt not the oil and wine. Revelation.

- HURT. n. f. [from the verb.]

I have slain a man to my hurt. Genesis.

I found it stand there uncorrected, as if there had been no hurt done. Baker on Learning.

2. Wound or bruise.

Where is he wounded?
—There will be large cicatrices to shew the people: he received seven hurts i' th' body.

Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Carter adventured bravely, and received two great hurts in his body. Hayward.

The pains of sickness and hurts, hunger, thirst and cold, all men feel. Locke.

In arms and science 'tis the same,
Our rival's hurts create our fame. Prior.

3. Injury; wrong.

Why should damage grow to the hurt of the king? Exra.

- HURTER. n. f. [from hurt.] One that does harm.

- HURTFUL. adj. [hurt and full.] Mischievous; pernicious.

Secret neglect of our duty is but only our own hurt: one man's contempt of the common prayer of the church of God may be most hurtful unto many. Hooker.

The hurtful hazle in the vineyard shun,
Nor plant it to receive the setting sun. Dryden.

- HURTFULLY. adv. [from hurtful.] Mischievously; perniciously.

- HURTLESS. adj. [from hurt.]

1. Innocent; harmless; innoxious; doing no harm.

Unto her home he oft would go,
Where bold and hurtless many a play he tries,
Her parents liking well it should be so;
For simple goodness shined in his eyes. Sidney.
She joy'd to make proof of her cruelty
On gentle dame, so hurtless and so true.
Fairy Queen.

Shorter ev'ry gasp he takes,
And vain efforts and hurtless blows he makes.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. Receiving no hurt.

HURTLESSLY. adv. [from hurtless.]
Without harm.

Your neighbours have found you so hurtlessly Strong, that they thought it better to rest in your friendship than make new trial of your enmity.
Sidney.

HURTLESSNESS. n. f. [from hurtless.]

Freedom from any pernicious quality.

HUSBAND. n. f. [hofsband, master,

Lorenzo, I commit into your hands

The husbandry and manage of my house. Shaksp.

HUSH. interj. [without etymology.]

Silence! be still! no noise!

The king hath done you wrong; but hush!
'tis so. Shakespeare.

There's something else to do; hush and be mute,

Or else our spell is marr'd. Shakespeare.

HUSH. adj. [from the interjection.]

Still; silent; quiet.

As we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heavens, the rack stands still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

TO HUSH. v. n. [from the interjection.]

To be still; to be silent.

This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame
did blush;

Another seem'd envious or coy;

Another in her teeth did know a rush;

But at these strangers presence every one did hush.
Spenser.

TO HUSH. v. a. To still; to silence;
to quiet; to appease.

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be hush, and nought at all to say. Shaksp.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;
But since you are a gentle convertite,
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blust'ring land.
Shakespeare.

Speak softly;
All's hush as midnight yet. Shakespeare.

My love would speak; my duty hushes me.
Shakespeare.

When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads,

Wilt thou then talk thus to me? Wilt thou then
Hush my cares thus, and shelter me with love?
Orway.

Hush'd as midnight silence go;
He will not have your acclamations now. Dryd.

Her fire at length is kind,
Calms ev'ry storm, and hushes ev'ry wind;

Prepares his empire for his daughter's case,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas.
Dryden.

The court was hush'd, and a whisper ran.
Aldison.

And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.
Shakespeare.

Most seeds, in their growing, leave their husk or rind about the root. Bacon's Natural History.

Thy food shall be
The fresh brook mussel, withered roots, and husks

Wherein the acorn cradled. Shakespeare.

Fruits of all kinds, in coat

Rough, or smooth rind, or bearded husks, or shell,
She gathers; tribute large! and on the board

Heaps with unsparing hand. Milton.

Some steep their feeds, and some in cauldrons boil

O'er gentle fires; the exuberant juice to drain,
And swell the flatt'ring husks with fruitful grain.
Dryden.

Some when the press

Has drain'd the pulpous mafs, regale their swine
With the dry refuse; thou, more wise, shalt steep

The husks in water, and again employ
The pond'rous engine. Philips.

Barley for ptisan was first steeped in water till it swelled; afterwards dried in the sun, then beat till the husk was taken off, and ground. Arbuth.

If cheefes in dairie have Argus his eyes, Tell Cistley the fault in her huswifery lies. Tupper.

HUT. n. f. [hutte, Saxon; hute, Fr.]

A poor cottage.

Our wand'ring fairs, in woful state, To a small cottage came at last, Where dwelt a good old honest yeoman, Who kindly did these fairs invite In his poor hut to pass the night. Swift.

Sore pierc'd by wintry wind, How many shrink into the sordid hut Of cheerless poverty! Thomson.

HUTCH. n. f. [hpæcca, Saxon; huche, French.] A corn chest.

The best way to keep them, after they are threshed, is to dry them well, and keep them in hatches, or close casks. Mortimer.

To HUZ. v. n. [from the sound.] To buzz; to murmur.

HUZZA', interj. A shout; a cry of acclamation.

The huzzas of the rabble are the same to a bear that they are to a prince. L'Estrange.

You keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me day and night; huzzas and hunting-horns never let me cool. Arbutnot.

All fame is foreign, but of true desert; Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart: One self-approving hour whole years outweighs Of stupid starers and of loud huzzas. Pope.

To HUZZA'. v. n. [from the interjection.] To utter acclamation.

A caldron of fat beef, and stoop of ale, On the huzzing mob shall still prevail. King.

To HUZZA'. v. a. To receive or attend with acclamation.

He was huzzed into the court by several thousands of weavers and clothiers. Addison.

HYACINTH. n. f. [ὑάκινθος; hyacinthe, French; hyacinthus, Latin.]

1. A flower.

It hath a bulbous root: the leaves are long and narrow: the stalk is upright and naked, the flowers growing on the upper part in a spike: the flowers consist each of one leaf, are naked, tubulose, and cut into six divisions at the brim, which are reflexed: the ovary becomes a roundish fruit with three angles, which is divided into three cells, which are filled with roundish seeds. Miller.

The filken fleece, impurpl'd for the loom, Rival'd the hyacinth in vernal bloom. Pope.

2. A gem.

The hyacinth is the same with the lapis lyncurios of the ancients. It is a less showy gem than any of the other red ones. It is seldom smaller than a seed of hemp, or larger than a nutmeg. It is found of various degrees of deepness and paleness; but its colour is always a deadish red, with a considerable admixture of yellow; its most usual is that mixed red and yellow, which we know by the name of flame-colour. Hill.

HYACINTHINE. adj. [ὑακινθινός.] Made of hyacinths; resembling hyacinths.

HYADES. } n. f. [ὑάδες.] A watery

HYADS. } constellation.

Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name

For ev'ry fix'd and ev'ry wand'ring star; The pleiads, hyads. Dryden's Georgicks.

HYALINE. adj. [ὑάλινος.] Glassy; crystalline; made glass; resembling glass.

From heav'n-gate not far, founded in view On the clear hyaline, the glassy sea. Milton.

HYBRIDOUS. adj. [ὑβριδός; hybrida, Lat.] Begotten between animals of different species.

Why such different species should not only mingle together, but also generate an animal, and yet that that hybridous production should not again generate, is to me a mystery. Ray.

HYDATIDES. n. f. [from ὑδῶς.] Little transparent bladders of water in any part: most common in dropical persons, from a distention or rupture of the lymphducts. Quincy.

All the water is contained in little bladders, adhering to the liver and peritoneum, known by the name of hydatides. Wifeman.

HYDRA. n. f. [hydra, Latin.] A monster with many heads slain by Hercules: whence any multiplicity of evils is termed a hydra.

New rebellions raise Their hydra heads, and the false north displays Her broken league to imp her serpent wings. Milton.

More formidable hydra stands within, Whose jaws with iron-teeth severely grin. Dryd.

Subdue The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew. Dryden.

HYDRAGOGUES. n. f. [ὑδρῶς and ἄγω; hydragogue, French.] Such medicines as occasion the discharge of watery humours, which is generally the case of the stronger catharticks, because they shake most forcibly the bowels and their appendages. Quincy.

HYDRAULICAL. } adj. [from hydrau-
HYDRAULICK. } ticks.] Relating to the conveyance of water through pipes.

Among the engines in which the air is useful, pumps may be accounted, and other hydraulical engines. Derham.

We have employed a virtuoso to make an hydraulick engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels. Arbutnot and Pope.

HYDRAULICKS. n. f. [ὑδρῶς, water, and αὐλός, a pipe.] The science of conveying water through pipes or conduits.

HYDROMANCY. n. f. [ὑδρῶς and μαντία; hydromantie, French.] Prediction by water.

Divination was invented by the Persians: there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy. Ayliffe.

HYDROMEL. n. f. [ὑδρῶς and μέλι; hydromel, French.] Honey and water.

Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern part of Europe affords, as well as one of the most ancient. Mortimer.

In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates were ptisans and cream of barley: hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium. Arbutnot.

HYDROMETER. n. f. [ὑδρῶς and μέτρον.] An instrument to measure the extent or profundity of water.

HYDRO'METRY. n. f. [ὑδρῶς and μέτρον.] The act of measuring the extent of water.

HYDROPHO'BIA. n. f. [ὑδροφοβία; hydrophobie, French.] Dread of water.

Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the hydrophobia, or dread of water, is the most remarkable. Quincy.

HYDRO'PICAL. } adj. [ὑδροπικός; hydro- HYDRO'PICK. } pique, French; from hydrops, Latin.]

1. Dropical; diseased with extravasated water.

Cantharides heat the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydropical water. Bacon.

The world's whole sap is sunk: The general balm th' hydropick earth hath drunk. Donne.

Hydropical swellings, if they be pure, are pellucid. Wifeman.

Hydropick wretches by degrees decay, Growing the more, the more they waste away; By their own ruins they augmented lye, With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry. Blackmore.

One sort of remedy, he uses in dropies, the water of the hydropicks. Arbutnot.

2. Resembling dropsy.

Some men's hydropick insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

Every lust is a kind of hydropick distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tibbottson.

HYDROSTA'TICAL. adj. [ὑδρῶς and στατική.] Relating to hydrostatics; taught by hydrostatics.

A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be reconcileable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath.

and something heavier above; because bone, the heaviest in specie, will be ever in the midst.

Bentley.

HYDROSTA'TICALLY. adv. [from hydrostatical.] According to hydrostatics.

The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically, doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mass.

Bentley.

HYDROSTA'TICKS. n. f. [ὕδωρ and στατική; hydrostatique, French.] The science of weighing fluids, or weighing bodies in fluids.

HYDRO'TICK. n. f. [ὕδωρ; hydrotique, French.] Purger of water or phlegm.

He seems to have been the first who divided purges into hydroticks and purgers of bile.

Arbutnot on Coins.

HYE'N. } n. f. [hyene, Fr. hyena, Lat.]

HYE'NA. } An animal like a wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.

I will weep when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, when you are inclined to sleep.

Shakespeare.

A wonder more amazing would we find; Th' hyena shews it, of a double kind; Varying the sexes in alternate years, In one begets, and in another bears.

Dryden.

The hyena was indeed well joined with the beaver, as having also a bag in those parts, if thereby we understand the hyena odorata, or civet cat.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The keen hyena, fellest of the fell.

Thomson.

HYGRO'METER. n. f. [ὕγρος and μέτρον; hygrometre, Fr.] An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.

A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hygrometer than the earth of the river.

Arbutnot.

HY'GROSCOPE. n. f. [ὕγρος and σκοπεῖν; hygroscope, Fr.] An instrument to shew the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme.

Quincy.

Moisture in the air is discovered by hygroscopes.

Arbutnot.

HYLA'RCHICAL. adj. [ὕλη and ἀρχή.] Presiding over matter.

HYM. n. f. A species of dog: unless it is by mistake for lym.

Avaunt, you curs!

Maſſiff, greyhound, mungril grim, Hound or spaniel, brache or hym; Or bobtail tike, or trundle tail, Tom will make him weep and wail.

Shaksp.

HY'MEN. n. f. [ὕμνος.]

1. The god of marriage.

2. The virginal membrane.

HYMENE'AL. } n. f. [ὕμνα.] A marriage song.

And heav'nly choirs the hymeneal sung.

Milt.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;

For her white virgins hymeneals sing.

Pope.

HYMENE'AL. } adj. Pertaining to marriage.

HYMENE'AN. } The suitors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice

A signal of her hymeneal choice.

Pope's Odyssey.

HYMN. n. f. [hymne, Fr. ὕμνος.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superiour being.

As I earst, in praise of mine own dame,

So now in honour of thy mother dear,

An honourable hymn I eke should frame.

Spens.

Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change;

Our bridal flow'rs serve for a buried coarſe.

Shak.

When steel grows

Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made

An overture for the wars.

Shakespeare's Cor.

There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah, and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour.

Bacon.

Farewell, you happy shades,

Where angels first should practise hymns, and string Their tuneful harps, when they to Heav'n would sing.

Dryden.

To HYMN. v. a. [ὕμνω.] To praise in song; to worship with hymns.

Whose business were to serve the Lord High up in heav'n, with songs to hymn his throne.

Milton.

To HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd

God and his works.

Milton.

He had not left alive this patient faint, This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence,

To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,

And hymn it in the quire.

Dryd. Spanish Friar.

HYMNICK. adj. [ὕμνος.] Relating to hymus.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes

In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;

Which, if they did not die, might seem to be

A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy.

Donne.

To HYP. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

I have been, to the last degree, hypped since I saw you.

Spectator.

HYPALLAGE. n. f. [ὕπαλλαξις.] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.

HYP'ER. n. f. [A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,

And hypers upon them again.

Prior.

HYPERBOLA. n. f. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολή and βάλλω.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolic section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex.

Harris.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolas very eccentrick.

Bentley.

HYP'ERBOLE. n. f. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολή.] A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: He runs faster than lightning. His possessions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him.

Terms unsquar'd

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt, Would seem hyperboles.

Shakespeare.

Taſſata phrases, ſilken terms precise,

Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,

Figures pedantical, theſe ſummer flies,

Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.

Shakespeare.

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects.

Glanv.

Hyperboles, so daring and so bold, Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd; Above the clouds, but yet within our sight, They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight.

Granville.

The common people understand rallery, or at least rhetoric, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense.

Swift.

HYPERBO'LICAL. } adj. [hyperbolique, Fr. hyperbolick, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cancellated in the middle with squares, with triangles before and behind with hyperbolick lines.

Grew's Museum.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure.

Ray on the Creation.

2. [from hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolical; and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense.

Boyle.

HYPERBO'LICALLY. adv. [from hyperbolical.]

1. In form of an hyperbola.

2. With exaggeration or extenuation.

Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically.

Brown.

Scylla is seated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbolically described by Homer as inaccessible.

Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

HYPERBO'LIFORM. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.

HYPERBO'REAN. n. f. [hyperboréen, Fr. hyperboreus, Lat.] Northern.

HYPERCRITICK. n. f. [hypercritique, Fr. ὑπερκριτική and κρίτικός.] A critick exact or captious beyond use or reason.

Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages.

Dryden.

HYPERCRIT'ICAL. adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond necessity or use.

We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical punctilios, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to.

Euelyn.

Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner.

Swift.

HYPERMETER. n. f. [ὑπερμετρία.] Any thing greater than the standard requires.

When a man rises beyond six foot, he is a hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club.

Addison.

HYPERSARCO'SIS. n. f. [ὑπερσάρκωσις, ὑπερ and σάρκωσις.] The growth of fungous or proud flesh.

Where the hypersarcosis was great, I sprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more speedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction.

Wifman.

HYPHEN. n. f. [ὕφην.] A note of conjunction: as vir-tue, ever-living.

HYPNOTICK. n. f. [ὕπνος.] Any medicine that induces sleep.

HYPOCHONDRES. n. f. [hypochondria, Fr. ὑποχόνδριον.] The two regions lying on each side the cartilago ensiformis, and those of the ribs, and the tip of the breast, which have in one the liver, and in the other the spleen.

Quincy.

The blood moving too slowly through the celiac and mesenterick arteries, produces various complaints in the lower bowels and in pochondres; from whence such persons are called hypochondriack. Arbutnot on Alliments.

HYPOCHONDRIACAL. } adj. [hypochondria- HYPOCHONDRIACK. } que, Fr. from hypochondres.]

1. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination.

Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Decay of Piety

2. Producing melancholy; having the nature of melancholy.

Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected; as in great fears, and hypochondriacal passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon's Natural History.

HYPOCIST. n. f. [ὕποκιστος; hypociste, Fr.]

An inspissated juice considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. The stem of the plant is thick and fleshy; and much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, gathered before they are ripe: the juice is expressed, then formed into cakes. Hill.

HYPOCRISY. n. f. [hypocrisie, Fr. ὕποκρισις.]

Disimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryd.

Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint: men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private. Swift.

HYPOCRITE. n. f. [hypocrite, French; ὕποκριτης.]

1. A dissembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shakspeare.

A wise man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Eccles.

Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain;
Your silence argues, you ask time to reign. Dryd.

The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.

2. A dissembler.

Beware, ye honest: the third circling glass
Suffices virtue: but may hypocrites,
Who slyly speak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unwar'd drink on,

And through intemp'rance grow a while sincere. Philips.

HYPOCRITICAL. } adj. [from hypocrite.]

HYPOCRITICK. } Dissembling; insincere; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical, down-cast look. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be esteemed an hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine. Rogers.

Let others skew their hypocritical face. Swift.

HYPOCRITICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation; without sincerity; falsely.

Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing at once their profelytes and their religion. Government of the Tongue.

HYPOGA'STRICK. adj. [hypogastrique, Fr. ὑπο and γαστήρ.]

Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries. Wiseman.

HYPOGE'UM. n. f. [ὑπο and γυν.]

A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.

HYPOSTASIS. n. f. [hypostrate, Fr. ὑπόστασις.]

1. Distinct substance.

2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypotheses in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those comprised in the ancient simple article. Hammond.

HYPOSTATICAL. adj. [hypostratique, Fr. from hypostrate.]

1. Constitutive; constituent as distinct ingredients.

Let our Carneades, warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chymists, touching their three hypostratical principles, till they have a little examined it. Boyle.

2. Personal; distinctly personal.

HYPOTENU'SE. n. f. [hypotenuse, French; ὑποτένυσα.] The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle; the subtense.

The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

HYPO'THESIS. n. f. [hypothese, Fr. ὑπόθεσις.]

A supposition; a system formed upon some principle not proved.

The mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole unintelligible. South.

With imagin'd sovereignty

Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns;
He reigns: how long? till some usurper rise:
And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wise,
Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. Prior.

HYPOTHE'TICAL. } adj. [hypothetique, Fr.

HYPOTHE'TICK. } from hypothesis.] Including a supposition; conditional.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move. Watts.

HYPOTHE'TICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition; conditionally.

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubt, and hypothetically. Broom.

HYRST, HURST, HERST, are all from the Saxon hynst, a wood or grove. Gibson.

HY'SSOP. n. f. [hyssope, Fr. hyssopus, Lat.]

A verticillate plant.

It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in scripture. Miller.

The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyssop; for that is not the least of vegetables observed to grow upon walls; but rather some kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown.

HYSTERICAL. } adj. [hysterique, French;

HYSTERICK. } ὕστερικος.] 1. Troubled with fits; disordered in the regions of the womb.

In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike an astonishment into spectators. Harvey on Consumptions.

Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb. Floyer on the Humours.

2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.

Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
Who gave th' hysterick or poetic fit. Pope.

This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit. Arbutnot.

HYSTERICKS. n. f. [ὕστερικος.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

I.

I

I

I

I, Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked with an e final; and a short sound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken freend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the English language, as oil, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word is always expressed by y.

J consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant, as jade, jet, jilt, jolt, just.

I. pronoun personal. [ik, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch.

I, gen. me; plural we, gen. us. ic, me; pe, ur.]

1. The pronoun of the first person, myself.

I do not like these several councils, I. Shaksp.
There is none greater in this house than I. Gen.
Be of good cheer, it is I: be not afraid. Mat.
What shall I do to be for ever known,

And make thy age to come my own;
I shall like beasts to common people dye,
Unless you write my elegy. Cowley.

Hence, and make room for me. Cowley.

When chance of business parts us two,

What do our souls, I wonder do? Cowley

Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain,

I to my longing friends return again. Dryden.

Of night impatient we demand the day,

The day arrives, and for the night we pray. Blackmore.

2. Me is in the following passage written for I.

There is but one man whom she can have,
and that is me. Clarissa.

3. I is more than once in Shakspeare written for ay, or yes.

Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I,
And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice. Shak.

Did your letters pierce the queen?

—I, sir; she took 'em and read 'em in my presence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down. Shakspeare.

To JABBER. v. n. [gabberen, Dutch.]

To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties. Swift.

JABBERER. n. f. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticulately or unintelligibly.

Out came the Babylonian labourers

At all their dialects of jabberers. Hudibras.

JACENT. adj. [jacens, Lat.] Lying at length.

So laid, they are more apt in swagging down to pierce than in the jacent posture. Wotton.

JACINTH. n. f. [for hyacinth, Jerusalem for Hierusalem.]

1. The same with hyacinth.

2. A gem of a deep reddish yellow, approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber. Woodward.

JACK. n. f. [probably by mistake from Jaques, which in French is James.]

1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for saucy or paltry fellows.

I am in estimation:

You will perceive that a Jack gardant cannot

Office me from my son Coriolanus. Shakspeare.

I have in my mind

A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise. Shakspeare.

Every Jack slave has his belly-full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match. Shakspeare.

2. The name of instruments which supply the place of a boy: as, an instrument to pull off boots.

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their masters boots; but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks. Watts' Logick.

3. An engine which turns the spit.

The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square; that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the spindles; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm. Moxon.

The ordinary jacks, used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels. Wilkins.

A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Wise-man.

Some strain in rhyme; the muses on their racks Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks. Pope.

4. A young pike.

No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer.

5. [jacque, Fr.] A coat of mail.

The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.

6. A cup of waxed leather.

Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy maple cup. Dryden.

7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byass, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and so run spontaneously to the jack. Bentley.

8. A part of the musical instrument called a virginal.

In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth. Bacon.

9. The male of animals.

A jack ass, for a stallion, was bought for three thousand two hundred and twenty-nine pounds three shillings and four-pence. Arbutnot

10. A support to saw wood on. Ainsw.

11. The colours or ensign of a ship. Ainsw.

12. A cunning fellow who can turn to any thing, as in the following phrase.

Jack of all trades, show and sound;
An inverse burlesque, an exchange under ground. Cleveland.

JACK Boots. n. f. [from jack, a coat of mail.] Boots which serve as armour to the legs.

A man on horseback, in his breeches and jack boots, dressed up in a commodore and a night-rail. Spectator.

JACK by the hedge. n. f. [erysimum.] An herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other fallads are, and much used in broth. Mortimer.

JACK Pudding. n. f. [jack and pudding.] A zany; a merry Andrew.

Every jack pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover. L'Estr.

A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the dish they like best: in French jean pottage, and in English jack pudding. Guardian.

Jack pudding, in his party-coloured jacket, Tosses the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packer. Gay.

JACK with a Lantern. An ignis fatuus.

JACKAL. n. f. [chacal, Fr.] A small animal supposed to start prey for the lion.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our sterns they send:.

Close by their fireships, like ackas appear,
Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryden.
The mighty lion, before whom stood the little jackal, the faithful spy of the king of beasts. Arbutnot and Pope.

JACKALE'NT. n. f. [Jack in Lent, a poor starved fellow.] A simple sheepish fellow.

You little jackalent, have you been true to us?
—Ay, I'll be sworn. Shakspeare.

2. A term in the canon law for a false pretension to marriage.

JACULATION. n. f. [jaculatio, jaculor, Lat.] The act of throwing missile weapons.

So hills amid' the air, encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton.

JADE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gaad, a goad or spur.]

1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag.

Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!

I am as dull as winter-starved sheep,

Tir'd as a jade in overloaded cart. Sidney.

When they should endure the bloody spur,

They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades,

Sink in the trial. Shakspeare. Julius Caesar.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,

With torchstaves in their hand; and their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips. Shakspeare.

So have I seen with armed heel,

A wight bestride a commonweal,

While still the more he kick'd and spur'd,

The less the sullen jade has stir'd. Hudibras.

The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with him. L'Estrange.

False steps but help them to renew their race,

As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace. Pope.

2. A sorry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice. Shall these, these old jades, pass the flower Of youth, that you have, pass you. Chapman. But she, the cunning 'st jade alive, Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive. Stepney. Get in, hussy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southern. In diamonds, pearl, and rich brocades, She shines the first of batter'd jades, And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.

You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Addison.

JADE. n. f. A species of stone.

The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale blueish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale green, not uniform. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant polish. It is used by the Turks for handles of sabres. Hill.

To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary: applied originally to horses.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks, The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia We've jaded out o' th' field. Shakspeare.

It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast No favour for the stallion we retain, And no respect for the degen'rate strain. Dryden.

The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.

There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; and upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation. Watts.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely, To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet, Farewell nobility. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.

The honourable blood Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shaksp.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.

I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me: for every reason excites to this. Shaksp.

To JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.

Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. South.

JADISH. adj. [from jade.]

1. Vicious; bad, as a horse.

That hors'd us on their backs, to show us A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Hudibras. When once the people get the jadish trick Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe. Southern.

2. Unchaste; incontinent.

'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest. L'Estrange.

To JAGG. v. a. [gagaw, flits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon.

The jagging of pinks and gilliflowers is like the inequality of oak leaves; but they never have any small plain curls. Bacon.

The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentley.

An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watts.

JAGG. n. f. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jaggs or escallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray.

Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jaggs in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible. Mortimer's Husbandry.

JAGGY. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.

His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold; His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold; Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes;

His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Addison.

Amid' those angles, infinitely strain'd, They joyful leave their jaggy salts behind. Thomson.

J'AGGEDNESS. n. f. [from jagged.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.

First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain, before you give them their veins or jaggedness. Peacham on Drawing.

JAIL. n. f. [geol, Fr.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him. Shakspeare.

A dependant upon him paid six thousand pounds ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.

He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew

'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.

One jail did all their criminals restrain, Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain. Dryden.

J'ILBIRD. n. f. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

J'ILER. n. f. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.

Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunned it, seeing and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jailers. Sidney.

This is as a jailer, to bring forth Some monstrous malefactor. Shakspeare.

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd; There let him reign, the jailer of the wind; With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,

And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryd.

Palamon, the pris'ner knight, Restless for woe, arose before the light; And, with his jailer's leave, desired to breathe An air more welcome than the damp beneath. Dryden.

J'AKES. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.] A house of office.

I will tread this inbotted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shaksp.

Their sordid avarice rakes In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden

Some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

J'ALAP. n. f. [jalap, French; jalapium, low Latin.] A medicinal drug.

Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It had its name jalapium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative where ferous humours are to be evacuated. Hill.

JAM. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

JAMB. n. f. [jambe, French, a leg.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the fore-side of the chimney *jamb*s. Maxon.

I'AMBICK. n. f. [iambique, French; iambicus, Latin.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies, It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies: Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

To J'ANGLE. v. n. [jangler, French. Skinner.] To altercation; to quarrel; to bicker in words. A low word.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentles agree, This civil war of wits were much better us'd On Navaire and his book-men. Shakspeare.

So far am I glad it did so fort,

And this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shaksp.

There is no error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling. Raleigh.

To J'ANGLE. v. a. To make to sound untuneably.

Now see that noble and that sovereign reason, Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh.

Shakspeare's Hamlet

'Ere Gothick forms were known in Greece, And in our verse 'ere monkish rhimes

Had jangled their fantastick chimes. Prior.

J'ANGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

J'ANIZARY. n. f. [a Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.

His grand vizir, presuming to invest The chief imperial city of the west,

With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise; The standards lost, and janizaries slain,

Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.

J'ANNOCK. n. f. [probably a corruption of bannock.] Oat-bread. A northern word.

J'ANTY. adj. [corrupted from gentil, Fr.]

Showy; fluttering.

This sort of woman is a janty flattern: she hangs on her cloaths, plays her head, and varies her posture. Spectator.

J'ANUARY. n. f. [Januarius, Latin.]

The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was among the Romans consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying Providence. Peacham.

JAPAN. n. f. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours. It is commonly used with another substantive, and therefore may be considered as an adjective.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush. Swift.

To JAPAN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.

J A R

- For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japann'd avails
The writing of good sense. Swift.
2. To black and gloss shoes. A low phrase.
The god of fire
Among these gen'rous presents joins his part,
And aids with foot the new japanning art. Gay.
- JAPA'NNER. n. f. [from japan.]
1. One skilled in japan work.
2. A shoeblacker. So called because he makes the shoes shine.
The poor have the same itch;
They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner to their shoes. Pope.
- To JAR. v. n. [from eonne, anger, Saxon; or guerre, war, French; or garren, old Teutonic, to clamour.]
1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.
The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryd.
My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.
2. To strike or sound untuneably and irregularly.
O, you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature:
Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father! Shakspeare.
I perceive you delight not in music.
—Not a whit, when it jars so. Shakspeare.
A string may jar in the best master's hand,
And the most skilful archer miss his aim. Roscom.
He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
And every passion aptly harmoniz'd
Amid a jarring world. Thomson's Summer.
3. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.
At last, though long, our jarring notes agree. Shakspeare.
For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milton.
Venus concluded his report:
A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:
As when a torrent rolls with rapid race,
The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
Roars horrible. Dryden's Aeneid.
4. To quarrel; to dispute.
When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
Through stubborn pride, among themselves did jar,
Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar. Spenser.
They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducting to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other. Dryden.
- JAR. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.
In r, the tongue is held stiff at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Holder.
2. Clash of interests or opinions; discord; debate.
He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
And yet his peace is but continual jar:
O miserable men, that to him subject are!
Fairy Queen.
Nath'less, my brother, since we parted are Unto this point, we will appease our jar.
Hubbard's Tale.
Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,
Between whose endless jar justice presides,
Would lose their names; and so would justice too. Shakspeare.
3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened.
The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like open-

J A V

- ing a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.
4. [giarro, Italian.] An earthen vessel.
About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.
He mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.
Warriors welter on the ground,
Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound. Garth.
- JARDES. n. f. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside.
This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied. It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches. Farrier's Dict.
- JA'RGON. n. f. [jargon, Fr. gericonça, Spanish.] Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberish.
Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration; yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematics, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain tuition or jargon. Bramhall.
From this last toil again what knowledge flows?
Just as much, perhaps, as shows
That all his predecessor's rules
Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.
During the usurpation an infusion of enthusiasm jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.
- JA'RGONELLE. n. f. A species of pear. See PEAR.
- JA'SHAWK. n. f. [probably ias or eyas hawk.] A young hawk. Ainsworth.
- JA'SMINE. n. f. [gelsimum; jasmin, Fr.] It is often pronounced jeffamine. A creeping shrub with a fragrant flower.
Thou, like the harmless bee, may'st freely range;
From jasmine grove to grove may'st wander. Thomson.
- JA'SMINE Persian. n. f. A plant. A species of lilach.
- JA'SPER. n. f. [jaspé, French; iasspis, Lat.] A hard stone of a bright beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white, found in masses of various sizes and shapes. It is capable of a very elegant polish, and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China. Hill.
The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue, and spotted with red, yellow, and white. Woodward's Met. Foss.
The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columns of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the vatican library. Addison on Italy.
- IATROLEPTICK. adj. [iatroleptique, Fr. ιατρος and ἀλεῖσθαι.] That cures by anointing.
- To JA'VEL, or jable. v. a. To bemire; to soil over with dirt through unnecessary traversing and travelling. This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties.
- JA'VEL. n. f. [perhaps from the verb.] A wandering or dirty fellow.
When as time, flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that those two javels
Should tender up a reckoning of their travels. Hubbard's Tale.
Sir Thomas More, preparing himself for execution, put on his best apparel, which the lieutenant compelled him to put off again, saying,

J A U

- That he who should have them was but a javel. What, says sir Thomas, shall I account him a javel, who shall this day do me so great a benefit? More's Life of Sir Thomas More.
- JA'VELIN. n. f. [javeline, French.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.
Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and javelin, stones and sulph'rous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds. Milton's Paradise Lost.
She shakes her myrtle javelin, and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind. Dryden.
Flies the javelin swifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm? Addison.
- JA'UNDICE. n. f. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, French.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straiten the motion of the blood so much through that viscus, as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastrick arteries, which go off from the hepatick; to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.
Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shakspeare. Merch. of Venice.
Those were thy thoughts, and thou could'st judge aright,
Till int'rest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.
The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the soul, tinged with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the appearances of things. Watts.
- JA'UNDICED. adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.
All seems infected, that th' infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.
- To JAUNT. v. n. [janter, French.] To wander here and there; to baffle about. It is now always used in contempt or levity.
I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass;
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke. Shakspeare's Richard II.
- JAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Ramble; flight; excursion. It is commonly used ludicrously; but solemnly by Milton.
Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd fore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton.
He sends me out on many a jaunt,
Old houses in the night to haunt. Hud. bras.
They parted, and away posts the cavalier in quest of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court. L'Esrange.
If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest. Dryden's Span. Fryar.
Thus much of the scheme of my design in this part have I run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out those metallick and mineral bodies. Woodward.
- JA'UNTINESS. n. f. [from jaunty, or janty, corrupted from gentil, French. See JANTY.] Airiness; flutter; genteelness.
A certain stiffness in my limbs entirely destroyed that jauntiness of air I was once master of. Addison's Spectator.

JAW. n. f. [joue, a cheek, French; whence jawbone, or cheekbone, then jaw.]

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor.

Proverbs.

The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinable.

Walton's Angler.

Piso, who probably speaks Aristotle's meaning, said that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immoveable.

Grew's Museum.

More formidable hydra stands within, Whose jaws with iron teeth severely grin.

A smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws, And utmost anguish shakes my lab'ring frame.

Rowe.

JAY. n. f. [named from his cry. Skinner.]

A bird; piaglandaria.

Two sharp winged sheers, Deck'd with diverse plumes, like painted jays, Were fixed at his back, to cut his airy ways.

Fairy Queen.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross wat'ry pumpkin— we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.

Shakspeare.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark, Because his feathers are more beautiful?

Shakspeare.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks.

Spectator.

Admires the jay, the insects gilded wings, Or hears the hawk, when philomela sings.

Pope.

JAZEL. n. f. A precious stone of an azure or blue colour.

Diſc.

ICE. n. f. [is, Saxon; eyse, Dutch.]

1. Water or other liquor made solid by cold.

You are no furer, no, Than is the coal of fire upon the ice, Or hailstone in the sun.

Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes.

Shakspeare.

If I should ask whether ice and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative.

Locke.

2. Concreted sugar.

3. To break the ice. To make the first opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat, Achieve the elder, set the younger free For our access, whose hap shall be to have her, Will not so graceless be to be ingrate.

Shakspeare.

Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets.

Peacham.

After he'd a while look'd wife, At last broke silence and the ice.

Hudibras.

To ice. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to turn to ice.

Shakspeare.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam, The season's difference; as, the icy phang, And churlish chiding of the winter's wind.

Shakspeare.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter.

Boyle.

Bear Britain's thunder, and her crows display To the bright regions of the rising day; Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll, Where clearer flames glow round the frozen pole.

Pope.

2. Cold; free from passion.

Thou would'st have never learn'd

The icy precepts of respect.

Shakspeare.

3. Frigid; backward.

If thou do'st find him tractable to us, Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons; If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling, Be thou so too.

Shakspeare's Richard III.

IDE. Contracted for I would.

IDEA. n. f. [idée, French; idea.] Mental image.

Whatsoever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call idea.

Locke.

The form under which these things appear to the mind, or the result of our apprehension, is called an idea.

Watts.

Happy you that may to the faint, your only idea,

Although simply attir'd, your manly affection utter.

Sidney.

Our Saviour himself, being to set down the perfect idea of that which we are to pray and wish for on earth, did not teach to pray or wish for more than only that here it might be with us, as with them it is in heaven.

Hooker.

Her sweet idea wander'd through his thoughts.

Fairfax.

I did infer your lineaments, Being the right idea of your father, Both in your form and nobleness of mind.

Shakspeare.

How good, how fair, Answering his great idea!

The beard's th' identick beard you knew, The same numerically true.

Hudibras.

There majus is identical with magis.

Hale.

Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith.

Tillotson's Sermons.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God.

Bentley's Sermons.

IDENTITY. n. f. [identité, French; identitas, school Latin.] Sameness; not diversity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water.

Brown.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty.

South's Sermons.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with self-existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity.

Locke.

By cutting off the sense at the end of every first line, which must always rhyme to the next following, is produced too frequent an identity in sound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram.

Prior.

IDES. n. f. [ides, French; idus, Latin.]

A term anciently used among the Romans, and still retained in the Romish calendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July, and October, in which it is the 15th day, because in these four months it was six days before the nones, and in the others four days.

A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March. Shakspeare.

Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply. Shakspeare.

3. Unactive; not employed.

VOL. I.

No war or battle's sound Was heard the world around, The idle spear and shield were high up hung. Milton.

Children generally hate to be idle; all the care then is, that their busy humour should be constantly employed in something of use to them. Locke.

Supposing, among a multitude embarked in the same vessel, there are several that in a tempest will rather perish than work; would it not be madness in the rest to stand idle, and rather chuse to sink than do more than comes to their share? Addison.

4. Useless; vain; ineffectual.

They astonish'd, all resistance lost, All courage; down their idle weapons dropp'd. Milton.

And threat'ning France, plac'd like a painted Jove, Held idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

Where was then The power that guards the sacred lives of kings? Why slept the lightning and the thunderbolts, Or bent their idle rage on fields and trees, When vengeance call'd 'em here? Dryden.

5. Unfruitful; barren; not productive of good.

Of antres vast, and deserts idle, It was my hent to speak. Shakspeare. Othello.

The murmuring surge, That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes, Cannot be heard so high. Shakspeare. King Lear.

He was met even now, Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow weeds, Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow In our sustaining corn. Shakspeare. King Lear.

6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.

Suffice it then, thou money god, quoth he, That all thine idle offers I refuse; All that I need I have: what needeth me To covet more than I have cause to use? Fairy Queen.

This answer is both idle in regard of us, and repugnant to themselves. Hooker.

They are not, in our estimation, idle reproofs when the authors of needless innovations are opposed with such negatives, as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker.

His friend smil'd scornful, and with proud contempt,

Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.
An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.

He wishes to recal the precious hours he has spent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diversions. Rogers.

TO IDLE. v. n. [from the adjective.] To lose time in laziness and inactivity.

Yet free from this poetick madness, Next page he says, in sober sadness, That she, and all her fellow-gods, Sit idling in their high abodes. Prior.

1. Lazily; without employment.

I will slay myself, For living idly here in pomp and ease. Shakspeare.

2. Foolishly; in a trifling manner.

And modern Asgil, whose capricious thought Is yet with stores of wilder notions fraught, Too soon convinc'd, shall yield that fleeting breath,

Which play'd so idly with the darts of death. Prior.

3. Carelessly; without attention.

But shall we take the muse abroad, To drop her idly on the road? And leave our subject in the middle, As Butler did his bear and fiddle? Prior.

4. Ineffectually; vainly.

Let this and other allegations, suitable unto it, cease to bark any longer idly against the truth, the course and passage whereof it is not in them to hinder. Hooker.

IDOL. n. f. [idole, Fr. ἰδωλον; idolum, Latin.]

1. An image worshipped as God.

They did sacrifice upon the idol altar, which was upon the altar of God. 1 Mac.

A nation from one faithful man to spring, Him on this side Euphrates yet residing, Bred up in idol worship. Milton's Par. Lost.

The apostle is there arguing against the gnosticks who joined in the idol feasts, and whom he therefore accuses of participating of the idol god. Atterbury.

2. A counterfeit.

Woe to the idle shepherd that leaveth the flock. Zechariah.

3. An image.

Never did art so well with nature strive, Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive; So like the man, so golden to the sight; So base within, so counterfeit and light. Dryden.

4. A representation. Not in use.

Men beholding so great excellence, And rare perfection in mortality, Do her adore with sacred reverence, As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence. Fairy Queen.

5. One loved or honoured to adoration.

He's honoured and lov'd by all; The soldier's god, and people's idol. Denham.

IDOLATER. n. f. [idolatre, French; idolatra, Lat.] One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships for God that which is not God.

The state of idolaters is two ways miserable: first, in that which they worship they find no succour; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion.

J E A

Hooker.

An astrologer may be no christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism.

Bentley's Sermons.

TO IDO'LATRIZE. v. a. [from idolater.] To worship idols.

Ainsworth.

IDO'LATROUS. adj. [from idolater.] Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry, or the worship of false gods.

Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatrous use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped.

Peacham on Drawing.

IDO'LATROUSLY. adv. [from idolatrous.] In an idolatrous manner.

Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done; but let whatsoever they have either thought or done idolatrously, be so far forth abhorred.

Hooker.

IDO'LATRY. n. f. [idolatrie, French; idololatria, Latin.] The worship of images; the worship of any thing as God which is not God.

Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd, and ador'd;

And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statued in thy stead.

Shakspeare.

Idolatry is not only an accounting or worshipping that for God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way unsuitable to his nature; and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal resemblances.

South.

The kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God.

Addison.

IDO'LIST. n. f. [from idol.] A worshipper of images. A poetical word.

I to God have brought Dishonour, obloquy, and op'd the mouths
Of idolists and atheist.

Milton.

TO IDO'LIZE. v. a. [from idol.] To love or reverence to adoration.

Those who are generous, humble, just, and wise,
Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize.

Denham.

Parties, with the greatest violation of christian unity, denominate themselves, not from the grand author and finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions.

Decay of Piety.

IDO'NEOUS. adj. [idoneus, Latin.] Fit; proper; convenient; adequate.

You entangle, and so fix their saline part, by making them corrode some idoneous body.

Ayliffe.

IDYL. n. f. [εἰδύλλιον; idyllium, Latin.] A small short poem.

I. E. for id est, or, that is.

That which raises the natural interest of money, is the same that raises the rent of land, i. e. its aptness to bring in yearly, to him that manages it, a greater overplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour.

Locke.

JEALOUS. adj. [jaloux, French.]

1. Suspicious in love.

To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

Wear your eye thus; not jealous, nor secure;
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self bounty, be abus'd: look to't.

Shakspeare's Othello.

J E E

Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband.

Shakspeare.

A jealous empress lies within your arms,
Too haughty to endure neglected charms.

Dryden.

Clarendon.

5. Suspiciously careful.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the English nation; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues.

Bacon's Henry VII.

They jealous of their secrets, fiercely oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar Protesting fate supreme.

Milton.

How nicely jealous is every one of us of his own repute, and yet how maliciously prodigal of other men's?

Decay of Piety.

6. Suspiciously fearful.

'Tis doing wrong creates such doubts as these;
Renders us jealous, and destroys your peace.

Waller.

While the people are so jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not see any other method left for them to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity.

Swift.

JEALOUSLY. adv. [from jealous.] Suspiciously; emulously; with suspicious fear, vigilance, or caution.

JEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from jealous.] The state of being jealous; rivalry; suspicion; suspicious vigilance.

Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousness of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me.

King Charles.

JEALOUSY. n. f. [jalousie, French; from jealous.]

1. Suspicion in love.

But gnawing jealousy, out of their sight
Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite.

Fairy Q.

How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair;
And shudd'ring fear, and green-eyed jealousy!

O love, be moderate; allay thine extasy.

Shaks.

Why did you suffer Jachimo,

Slight thing of Italy,

To taint his noble heart and brain

With needless jealousy?

Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

Small jealousies, 'tis true, inflame desire;

Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire.

Dryden.

2. Suspicious fear.

The obstinacy in Essex in refusing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealousy, that when the king had got him into his hands he would take revenge upon him.

Clarendon.

3. Suspicious caution, vigilance, or rivalry.

TO JEER. v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To scoff; to flout; to make mock.

The merry world did on a day
With his train bands and mates, agree

To meet together where I lay,

And all in sport to jeer at me.

Herbert.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, petulant uncomely jests, loud talking and jeering, which are called indecencies, and incivilities.

Taylor.

TO JEER. v. a. To treat with scoffs.

The desert came on, and jellies brought.

King.

That jelly's rich, this malmsey healing;

Pray dip your whiskers.

Pope's Sat. of Horace.

JENNETING. n. f. [corrupted from juneting, an apple ripe in June.] A species of apple soon ripe, and of a pleasant taste.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

JENNET. n. f. [See GENNET.] A Spanish horse.

The Spanish king presents a jennet,

To shew his love.

Prior.

TO JEOPARD. v. a. [See JEOPARDY.]

To hazard; to put in danger. Obsolete.

He had been accused of Judaism, and did boldly jeopard his body and life for the religion of the Jews.

2 Mac.

JEOPARDOUS. adj. [from jeopardy.] Hazardous; dangerous.

JEOPARDY. n. f. [This word is supposed to be derived from j'ai perdu, or jeu perdu. Skinner and Junius.] Hazard; danger; peril. Not in use.

And would ye not poor fellowship expel,

Myself would offer you t' accompany,

In this adventure's chanceful jeopardy.

Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn

To ashes ere our blood shall quench that fire:

Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.

Shakspeare.

We may impute to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or at least a casualty or jeopardy. Bacon.

To JERK. v. a. [gepeccan, Saxon.] To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written yerk.

I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times
I thought to 've jerk'd him here under the ribs. Shakspeare.

Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a-working. Swift.

To JERK. v. n. To strike up; to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.

Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet,

But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.

JERK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A smart quick lash.

Contemn the silly taunts of fleeing buffoonry;
and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly. Glanville

Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis; neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden.

2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.

Well run Tawney, the abbot's churl;
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk. Ben Jonson.

Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by jerks, or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.

JERKIN. n. s. [cynzelkin, Saxon.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat.

A man may wear it on both sides like a leather jerkin. Shakspeare.

Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us wool? More's Antidote against Atheism.

Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor frize jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but small audience. South.

Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a flogging. Hudibras.

I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Gulliv. Trav.

JERKIN. n. s. A kind of hawk. Ainsw.

This should be written gyrkin.
JERSEY. n. s. [from the island of Jersey, where much yarn is spun.] Fine yarn of wool.

JERUSALEM Artichoke. n. s. Sunflower, of which it is a species.

Jerusalem artichokes are increased by small offsets, and by quartering the roots. Mortimer.

JESS. n. s. [gelle, French; getto, Italian.] Short straps of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which she is held on the fist. Hanmer.

If I prove her haggard,
Though that my jesses were her dear heart strings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Shakspeare's Othello.

JESSAMINE. n. s. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullamabines;
Her breast like lillies, ere their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossom'd jessamines. Spenser.

To JEST. v. n. [gesticular, Latin.] To divert or make merry by words or action.

Jest not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced. Ecclus.

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?
—You may jest on: but I do not like these several councils. Shakspeare's Richard III.

JEST. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.

But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers, to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake? Shakspeare.

As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon.

No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break jests upon them. Milton.

He had turn'd all tragedy to jest. Prior.

When you the dullest of dull things have said,
And then ask pardon for the jest you made. Young.

2. The object of jests; a laughingstock.

If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me; then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shakspeare.

3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real; ludicrous, not serious; game, not earnest.

That high All-see, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest, what I begg'd in jest. Shakspeare's Richard III.

When his playfellows chose him their king, he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have become a king in earnest. Grew.

JESTER. n. s. [from jest.]

1. One given to merriment and pranks.

The skipping king, he rambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits;
Soon kindled and soon burnt. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

2. One given to sarcasm.

Now as a *jest*er I accost you,
Which never yet one friend hath lost you. Swift.

3. Buffoon; jackpudding. A *jest*er, or licensed scoffer, was kept at court to the time of Charles the first.

Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser on Ireland.

JET. n. s. [gagac, Saxon; get, Dutch; gagates, Latin.]

1. A beautiful fossil, of a firm and even structure, and a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay; of a fine deep black, having a grain resembling that of wood. It is confounded with cannel-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.

Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet. Shakspeare.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakspeare.

The bottom clear
Now laid with many a jet,
Of seed pearl, ere she bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.

One of us in glass is set,
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.

Under flowing jet,
The neck slight shaded. Thomson's Summer.

2. [jet, Fr.] A spout or shoot of water.

Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next an adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end. Blackmore.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.

3. A yard. Obsolete.

What orchard unrobbed escapes,
Or pullet dare walk in their jet? Tusser's Husb.

To JET. v. n. [jetter, Fr.]

1. To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude; to jut out.

Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Shakspeare.

2. To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait.

Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

3. To jolt; to be shaken.

Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach she was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. Wife of Man.

JETSAM. n. s. [jetter, French.] Goods

JETSON. n. s. or other things which, having been cast overboard in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral.

JETTY. adj. [from jet.]

1. Made of jet.

2. Black as jet.

The people about Capo Negro, Cefala, and Madagascar, are of a jetty black. Brown.

Her hair
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd. Prior.

Nigrina black, and Merdamente brown,
Vied for his love in jetty bow'rs below. Pope.

JEWEL. n. s. [joyaux, Fr. jeweelen, Dut.]

1. Any ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.

Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture. Shakspeare.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. Shakspeare.

The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world: a man putting all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel. South.

2. A precious stone; a gem.

Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stone, Stol'n by my daughter! Shakspeare.

Proud fame's imperial seat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great. Pope.

3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.

Bid farewell to your sisters.
—Ye jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you. Shakspeare's King Lear.

JEWEL-HOUSE, or Office. n. s. The place where the regal ornaments are deposited.

The king has made him master of the jewel-house. Shakspeare.

JEWELLER. n. s. [from jewel.] One who trafficks in precious stones.

These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller. Boyle.

The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsic worth of a thing to a man of sense is another. L'Estrange.

I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Addison.

JEWSEAR. n. s. [from its resemblance of the human ear. Skinner.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, while growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and variously hollowed cup; from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in it ridges like those of the human ear. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder-trees decaying. The common people cure themselves of sore throats with a decoction of it in milk. Hill.

An herb called jews-ear groweth upon the lower parts of elder, and sometimes aches: in warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely. Bacon's Natural History.

JEW-HARP. n. f. A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad spring of iron, which being struck by the hand, plays against the breath.

JEW-MALLOW. n. f. [corchorus, Latin.] Ranwolf says it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Miller.

JEW-STONE. n. f. The clavated spine of a very large egg-shaped sea-urchin, petrified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering; about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter; ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky reddishness. It is found in Syria. Hill's Mat. Med.

IF. conjunction. [ȝif, Saxon.]

1. Suppose it be so, or it were so, that. A hypothetical particle.

Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, ifs or ands. Hooker.

If that rebellion
Came like itself in base and abject routs;
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been there. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
If they have done this deed, my noble lord.
—If! talk'st thou to me of ifs? Thou art a traitor. Shakspeare.

This seeing of all things, because we can desire to see all things, Malbranche makes a proof that they are present to our minds; and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.

This infallibility upon supposition, amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

All of them supposed the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maxims to be good; if so be there were no resurrection. Atterbury.

Tisiphone, that oft hath heard my pray'r,
Assist, if Oedipus deserve thy care. Pope.

2. Whether or no.

Uncertain if by augury, or chance;
But by this easy rise they all advance. Dryden.

She doubts if two and two make four:

It can't—it may be—and it must;

To which of these must Alma trust?

Nay, further yet they make her go,

In doubting if she doubts or no. Prior.

3. Allowing that; suppose it be granted that.

Such mechanical circumstances, if I may so call them, were not necessary to the experiments. Boyle.

IGNEOUS. adj. [igneus, Latin.] Fiery; containing fire; emitting fire; having the nature of fire.

That the fire burns by heat, leaves us still ignorant of the immediate way of igneous solutions. Glanville's Scepis.

IGNIPOTENT. adj. [ignis and potens, Latin.] Presiding over fire.

Vulcan is called the pow'r ignipotent. Pope.

IGNIS FATUUS. n. f. [Latin.] Will with the wisp; Jack with the lantern.

Vapours arising from putrified waters are usually called ignes fatui. Newton's Opticks.

TO IGNITE. v. a. [from ignis, fire, Latin.] To kindle; to set on fire. A chymical term.

Take good firm chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it. Greav's Museum.

IGNITION. n. f. [ignition, Fr. from ignite.] The act of kindling, or of setting on fire.

The laborant stirred the kindled nitre, that the ignition might be presently communicated. Boyle.

Those black circular lines we see on dishes, and other turned vessels of wood, are the effects of ignition, by the pressure of an edged stick upon the vessel turned nimbly in the lathe. Ray.

IGNITIBLE. adj. [from ignite.] Inflammable; capable of being set on fire. Not in use.

Such bodies only strike fire which have sulphur or ignitable parts. Brown's Vulg. Err.

IGNIVOMOUS. adj. [ignivomus, Latin.] Vomiting fire.

Vulcanos and ignivomous mountains are some of the most terrible shocks of the globe. Derham.

IGNOBLE. adj. [ignoble, Fr. ignobilis, Latin.]

1. Mean of birth; not noble; not of illustrious race.

As when in tumults rise th' ignoble crowd,
Mad are their motions, and their tongues are loud. Dryden.

2. Worthless; not deserving honour. Used of things or persons.

The noble isle doth want her proper limbs;
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants. Shak.

IGNOBLY. adv. [from ignoble.] Ignominiously; meanly; dishonourably; reproachfully; disgracefully.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives Religious, titled them the sons of God, Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame Ignobly! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Here, over-match'd in fight; in heaps they lie:
There scatter'd o'er the field ignobly fly. Dryden.

IGNOMINIOUS. adj. [ignominieux, Fr. ignominiosus, Lat.] Mean; shameful; reproachful; dishonourable. Used both of persons and things.

They with pale fear surpriz'd, Fled ignominious. Milton.

Cethegus, though a traitor to the state,
And tortur'd, 'scap'd this ignominious fate. Dryd.

They gave, and she transferr'd the curst advice,
That monarchs should their inward soul disguise;
By ignominious arts, for servile ends,
Should compliment their foes, and shun their friends. Prior.

Nor has this kingdom deserved to be sacrificed to one single, rapacious, obscure, ignominious projector. Swift.

IGNOMINIOUSLY. adv. [from ignominious.] Meanly; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully; reproachfully.

It is some allay to the infamy of him who died ignominiously to be buried privately. South.

IGNOMINY. n. f. [ignominie, French; ignominia, Latin.] Disgrace; reproach; shame; infamy; meanness; dishonour.

Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heav'n:
Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave. Shakf.
Strength from truth divided, and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise

And ignominy; yet to glory aspires, Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

Their generals have been received with honour after their defeat, yours with ignominy after conquest. Addison.

IGNORAMUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Ignoramus is a word properly used by the grand inquest impanelled in the inquisition of causes criminal and publick; and written upon the bill, whereby any crime is offered to their consideration, when they mislike their evidence as defective, or too weak to make good the presentment: the effect of which word so written is, that all farther inquiry upon that party for that fault, is thereby stopped, and he delivered without farther answer. Corwell.

2. A foolish fellow; a vain uninstructed pretender. A low word.

Tell an ignoramus, in place and power, that he has a wit and an understanding above all the world, and he shall readily admit the commendation. South.

IGNORANCE. n. f. [ignorance, Fr. ignoratio, Latin.]

1. Want of knowledge; unlearnedness.

If all the clergy were as learned as themselves are that most complain of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same. Hooker.

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakspeare.

Still banish your defenders, 'till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows. Shakspeare.

If we see right, we see our woes;
Then what avails it to have eyes?
From ignorance our comfort flows,
The only wretched are the wise! Prior.

2. Want of knowledge respecting some particular thing.

It is in every body's power to pretend ignorance of the law. Sherlock.

3. Want of knowledge discovered by external effect. In this sense it has a plural. Forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignorances. Common Prayer.

Punish me not for my sins and ignorances. Tobit.

IGNORANT. adj. [ignorant, Fr. ignorans, Latin.]

1. Wanting knowledge; unlearned; uninstructed; unenlightened.

So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast. Psalms.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time, and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

In such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant

More learned than the ears. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

He that doth not know those things which are of use for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson.

Fools grant whate'er ambition craves,
And men, once ignorant, are slaves. Pope.

2. Unknown; undiscovered. This is merely poetical.

If you know aught, which does behove my knowledge

Thereof to be informed, imprison 't not In ignorant concealment. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

3. Without knowledge of some particular. Let not judges be so ignorant of their own right, as to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wife application of laws. Bacon's Essays.

O visions ill foreseen! Better had I Liv'd ignorant of future! so had borne
My part of evil only. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Unacquainted with. In a good sense.
Ignorant of guilt, I fear not shame. Dryden.

5. Ignorantly made or done. Unusual.
His shipping,
Poor ignorant baubles, on our terrible seas
Like egg-shells mov'd. Shakspeare.

IGNORANT. n. f. One untaught, unlettered, uninstructed.

Did I for this take pains to teach
Our zealous ignorants to preach! Denham.

IGNORANTLY. adv. [from ignorant.] Without knowledge; unskilfully; without information.

The greatest and most cruel foes we have,
Are those whom you would ignorantly save. Dryden.

When a poet, an orator, or a painter has performed admirably, we sometimes mistake his blunders for beauties, and are so ignorantly fond as to copy after them. Watts.

To IGNORE. v. a. [ignorer, Fr. ignoro, Latin.] Not to know; to be ignorant of. This word Boyle endeavoured to introduce; but it has not been received.

I ignored not the stricter interpretation, given by modern critics to divers texts, by me alleged. Boyle.

Philosophy would solidly be established, if men would more carefully distinguish those things that they know from those that they ignore. Boyle.

IGNOSCIBLE. adj. [ignoscibilis, Latin.]
Capable of pardon. DiD.

JIG. n. f. [giga, Italian; geige, Teuto-nick, a fiddle.] A light careless dance, or tune.

When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike musick, he appointed to them certain lascivious lays and loose jigs; by which he so mollified and abated their courage, that they forgot their former fierceness. Spenser on Ireland.

As fiddlers still,
Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jig upon you. Donne.

Posterity shall know that you dare, in these jig-given times, to countenance a legitimate poem. Ben Jonson.

All the swains that there abide,
With jigs and rural dance resort. Milton.
The muses blush'd to see their friends exalting
Those elegant delights of jig and vaulting. Fenton.

They wrote to her friends in the country, that she should dance a jig next October in Westminster-hall. Arbutnot.

Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus reigns,
Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains. Pope.

To JIG. v. n. [from the noun.] To dance carelessly; to dance. Expressed in contempt.

As for the jiggling part and figures of dances,
I count that little. Locke.

JIG-MAKER. n. f. [jig and make.] One who dances or plays merrily.

Your only jig-maker! what should a man do but be merry? Shakspeare's Hamlet.

JIGGUMBOB. n. f. [A cant word.] A trinket; a knick-knack; a slight contrivance in machinery.

He rifled all his pokes and fobs
Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs. Hudib.

JILT. n. f. [gilia, Islandick, to entrap in an amour, Mr. Lye. Perhaps from giglot, by contraction; or jillet, or gillot, the diminutive of gill, the ludicrous name of a woman. It is also called jillet in Scotland.]

1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him.

Avoid both courts and camps,
Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools. Ottaway.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.
When love was all an easy monarch's care,
Jilts rul'd the state, and statesmen farces writ. Pope.

To JILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.

Tell who loves who;
And who is jilted for another's sake. Dryden.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted; bring witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

To JILT. v. n. To play the jilt; to practise amorous deceits.

She might have learn'd to cuckold, jilt, and sham,

Had Covent-garden been at Surinam. Congreve.

To JINGLE. v. n. [A word made from jangle, or copied from the sound intended to be expressed.] To clink;
to sound with a kind of sharp rattle.

What should the wars do with these jingling fools? Shakspeare.

With noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
We were awaked. Shakspeare's Tempest.

The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

You ne'er with jingling words deceive the ear;
And yet, on humble subjects, great appear. Smith.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old! Pope.

JINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any clink, or sharp rattle.
2. It is used, I think, improperly, to express the correspondence of sound in the effects of rhyme.

Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit. Dryden.

3. Any thing sounding; a rattle; a bell.
If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon's Essays.

ILE. n. f. [corrupted from aïlle, French.]
A walk or alley in a church or publick building. Properly aile.

Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
And arches widen, and long iles extend. Pope.

ILE. n. f. [aïlle, French.] An ear of corn. Ainsworth.

ILEUS. n. f. [Latin.]

An ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is really either a circumvolution, or inflection of one part of the gut within the other. Arbutnot.

ILEX. n. f. [Latin.]

The ilex, or great scarlet oak, thrives well in England, is a hardy sort of tree, and easily raised of acorns. The Spaniards have a sort they call enzina; the wood of which, when old, is finely chamberlotted, as if it were painted. Mortimer.

ILIAC. adj. [iliacus, Latin.] Relating to the lower bowels.

The iliac passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly.

ILIAC Passion. A kind of nervous colick, whose seat is the ilium, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above; whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvo, to roll.

Those who die of the iliac passion have their bellies much swelled. Floyer on the Humours.

ILL. adv. [eale, Saxon.] The same. It is still retained in Scotland, and denotes each; as, ilk one of you, every one of you. It also signifies, the same; as,
Macintosh of that ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his estate are the same; as, Macintosh of Macintosh.

Shepherds, should it not yshend
Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse
Of Rosalind, who knows not Rosalind,
That Colin made? ilk can I you rehearse. Spenser.

ILL. adj. [contracted from EVIL, and retaining all its senses.]

1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See EVIL.

There some ill planet reigns;
I must be patient, 'till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable. Shakspeare.
Of his own body he was ill, and gave
The clergy ill example. Shakspeare Henry VIII.
Neither is it ill air only that maketh an ill seat;
but ill ways, ill markets, and ill neighbours. Bacon's Essays.

Some, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company to be sad and ill-disposed: others, of a jovial nature, dispose them to be merry. Bacon.

2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that evil is ever used in this sense.

You wish me health in very happy season;
For I am on the sudden something ill. Shakspeare.
I have known two towns of the greatest consequence lost, by the governours falling ill in the time of the sieges. Temple.

ILL. n. f.

1. Wickedness; depravity; contrariety to holiness.

Ill, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance. Bacon.

Young men to imitate all ills are prone;
But are compell'd to avarice alone:
For then in virtue's shape they follow vice. Dryden's Juvenal.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden.

2. Misfortune; misery.

Who can all sense of others ills escape,
Is but a brute at best in human shape. Tate.
Though plung'd in ills and exercis'd in care,
Yet never let the noble mind despair;
When prest by dangers, and beset with foes,
The gods their timely succour interpose;
And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief,
By unforeseen expedients bring relief. A. Phillips.

ILL. adv.

1. Not well; not rightly in any respect.

Ill at ease, both she and all her train
The scorching sun had borne, and beating rain. Dryden.

2. Not easily; with pain; with difficulty.

Thou desir'st
The punishment all on thyself! alas!
Bear thine own first; ill able to sustain
His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part,
And my displeasure bear'st so ill. Milton.

Ill bears the sex a youthful lover's fate,
When just approaching to the nuptial state. Dryden.

ILL, substantive or adverb, is used in composition to express any bad quality or condition, which may be easily understood by the following examples.

ILL. substantive.

Dangerous conjectures in ill breeding minds.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

I have an ill divining soul:
Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shaksp.
No look, no last adieu before he went!
In an ill boding hour to slaughter sent, Dryden.
I know
The voice ill boding, and the solemn sound. Philips.

The wisest prince on earth may be deceived by the craft of ill designing men. Swift's Exam.

Your ill meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies,
Who threat'ning cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To wring from me and tell to them my secret. Milton.

A spy distinguish'd from his airy stand,
To bribe whose vigilance, Ægisthus told
A mighty sum of ill persuading gold, Pope.
ILL. *adverb.

There sounded an ill according cry of the enemies, and a lamentable noise was carried abroad. Wisdom.

My colleague,
Being so ill affected with the gout,
Will not be able to be there in person. Ben Jonson.

The examples
Of every minute's instance, present now,
Have put us in these ill beseeching arms. Shaksp.
Lead back thy Saxons to their ancient Elbe:
I would restore the fruitful Kent, the gift
Of Vortigern, or Hengist's ill bought aid. Dryd.
We simple toasters take delight
To see our women's teeth look white;
And ev'ry saucy ill bred fellow Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.
The ungrateful treason of her ill chosen husband overthrows her. Sidney.
Envy, how does it look? How meagre and ill complexioned?
It preys upon itself, and exhausts the spirits. Collier.

There grows,
In my most ill compos'd affection such
A stanchless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shaksp.
To what end this ill concerted lye,
Palpable and gross? Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Our generals at present are such as are likely to make the best use of their numbers, without throwing them away on any ill concerted projects. Addison on the War.
The second daughter was a peevish, forward,
ill conditioned creature as ever was. Arbutnot.
No Persian arras hides his homely walls
With antick vests, which, through their shady fold,
Betray the streaks of ill dissembled gold. Dryden.
You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
ill ey'd unto you. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
I see thy sister's tears,
Thy father's anguish, and thy brother's death,
In the pursuit of our ill fated loves. Addison.
Others ill fated are condemn'd to toil
Their tedious life. Prior.
Plain and rough nature, left to itself, is much better than an artificial ungratefulness, and such studied ways of being ill fashioned. Locke.
Much better, when I find virtue in a fair lodging, than when I am bound to seek it in an ill favoured creature, like a pearl in a dunghill. Sidney.

Near to an old ill favoured castle they meant to perform their unknighly errand. Sidney.
If a man had but an ill favoured nose, the deep thinkers would contrive to impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.
I was at her house the hour she appointed.
—And you sped, sir?
—Very ill favouredly. Shakespeare.
They would not make bold, as every where they do, to destroy ill formed and mis-shaped productions. Locke.
The fabled dragon never guarded more
The golden fleece, than he his ill got store. Dryd.

Bid him employ his care for these my friends,
And make good use of his ill gotten power,
By shelt'ring men much better than himself. Addison's Cato.

Ill govern'd passions in a prince's breast, Hazard his private, and the public rest. Waller.
That knowledge of theirs is very superficial and ill grounded. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Ill grounded passions quickly wear away;
What's built upon esteem can ne'er decay. Walsh.
Hither, of ill join'd sons and daughters born,
First from the ancient world these giants came. Milton.

Nor has he erred above once by ill judged superfluity. Garth.
Did you never taste delicious drink out of an ill looked vessel? L'Estrange.
The match had been so ill made for Plexirtus, that his ill led life would have tumbled to destruction, had there not come fifty to his defence. Sidney.

These are the product
Of those ill mated marriages thou saw'st,
Where good with bad were match'd. Milton.
The works are weak, the garrison but thin,
Dispirited with frequent overthrows,
Already wavering on their ill mann'd walls. Dryden.

He will not hear me out!
Was ever criminal forbid to plead?
Curb their ill manner'd zeal. Dryden.
It is impossible for the most ill minded, avaricious, or cunning clergyman to do the least injustice to the meanest cottager, in any bargain for tythes. Swift.
Soon as the ill omen'd rumour reach'd his ear,
Who can describe th' amazement in his face! Dryden.

The eternal law of things must not be altered,
to comply with his ill ordered choice. Locke.
When you expose the scene,
Down the ill organ'd engines fall,
Off fly the vizards. Swift.

For Phthia fix'd is my return;
Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn,
Than from an equal here sustain the public scorn. Dryden.

There motley images her fancy strike,
Figures ill pair'd, and families unlike. Pope.
Sparta has not to boast of such a woman;
Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love. Dryden.

I shall direct you, a task for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had opportunities to observe the follies of women. Swift.

Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well-seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relished potion. Locke.

Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
Her thoughts intentive on the bridal day. Pope.
Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain. Dryden.
The god inform'd

This ill shap'd body with a daring soul. Dryden.
There was plenty enough, but the dishes were ill sorted: whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women; but little of solid meat for men. Dryden.

It does not belong to the priest's office to impose this name in baptism: he may refuse to pronounce the same, if the parents give them ludicrous, filthy, or ill sounding names. Ayliffe.

Ill spirited Wor'ster, did we not send grace,
Pardon and terms of love to all of you? Shak.

From thy foolish heart, vain maid, remove An useless sorrow, and an ill star'd love. Prior.

Ah, why th' ill suiting pastime must I try?
To gloomy care my thoughts alone are free:
Ill the gay sports with troubled hearts agree. Pope.

Holding of ill tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Grew.

The maid, with downcast eyes, and mute with
grief,
For death unfinish'd, and ill tim'd relief,
Stood sullen to her suit. Dryden's Ovid.

How should opinions, thus settled, be given up, if there be any suspicion of interest or design, as there never fails to be, where men find themselves ill treated? Locke.

That boldness and spirit which lads get amongst their playfellows at school, has ordinarily a mixture of rudeness and ill turned confidence; so that these misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned. Locke.

IL, before words beginning with l, stands for in.

ILLA'CHRYMABLE. *adj. [illachrymabilis, Latin.] Incapable of weeping. Di.

ILLA'PSE. *n. f. [illapsus, Latin.]

1. Gradual emission or entrance of one thing into another.

As a piece of iron red hot, by reason of the il- lapse of the fire into it, appears all over like fire;
so the souls of the blessed, by the illapse of the divine essence into them, shall be all over divine. Norris.

2. Sudden attack; casual coming.

Life is oft preserved
By the bold swimmer in the swift illapse
Of accident disastrous. Thomson's Summer.

TO ILLA'QUEATE. *v. a. [illaqueo, Latin.] To entangle; to entrap; to ensnare.

I am illoqueated, but not truly captivated into your conclusion. More's Divine Dialogues.

ILLAQUEA'TION. *n. f. [from illaqueate.]

1. The act of catching or ensnaring.

The word in Matthew doth not only signify suspension, or pendulous illaqueation, but also suffocation. Brown.

2. A snare; any thing to catch another;
a noose.

ILLA'TION. *n. f. [illatio, Latin.] Inference; conclusion drawn from premises.

Herein there seems to be a very erroneous il- lation from the indulgence of God unto Cain, concluding an immunity unto himself. Brown.

Illation so orders the intermediate ideas as to discover what connection there is in each link of the chain, whereby the extremes are held together. Locke.

ILLATIVE. *adj. [illatus, Latin.] Relating to illation or conclusion.

In common discourse or writing such casual

therefore. Watts.

ILLA'UDABLE. *adj. [illaudabilis, Latin.]

Unworthy of praise or commendation.

Strength from truth divided, and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise. Milton.

ILLA'UDABLY. *adv. [from illaudable.]

Unworthily; without deserving praise.

It is natural for all people to form, not illau- dably, too favourable a judgment of their own country. Broome.

ILLE'GAL. *adj. [in and legalis, Latin.]

Contrary to law.

No patent can oblige the subject against law, unless an illegal patent passed in one kingdom can bind another, and not itself. Swift.

ILLEGAL'ITY. *n. f. [from illegal.] Contrariety to law.

He wished them to consider what votes they had passed, of the illegality of all those commissions, and of the unjustifiableness of all the proceedings by virtue of them. Clarendon.

ILLE'GALLY. *adv. [from illegal.] In a manner contrary to law.

ILLE'GIBLE. adj. [in and legibilis, from lego, Latin.] What cannot be read.

ILLITERATE. adj. [illiteratus, Lat.] Unlettered; untaught; unlearned; unenlightened by science.

The duke was illiterate, yet had learned at court to supply his own defects, by the drawing unto him of the best instruments of experience. Wotton.

Th' illiterate writer, empirick like, applies
To minds diseas'd unsafe chance remedies:
The learn'd in schools, where knowledge first began,
Studies with care th' anatomy of man;
Sees virtue, vice, and passions in their cause,
And fame from science, not from fortune draws. Dryden.

In the first ages of christianity not only the learned and the wise, but the ignorant and illiterate embraced torments and death. Tillotson.

ILLITERATENESS. n. f. [from illiterate.] Want of learning; ignorance of science.

Many acquainted with chymistry but by report, have, from the illiterateness and impostures of those that pretend skill in it, entertained an ill opinion of the art. Boyle.

ILLITERATURE. n. f. [in and literature.] Want of learning. Not much used.

The more usual causes of this deprivation are want of holy orders, illiterature, or inability for the discharge of that sacred function, and irreligion. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ILLNESS. n. f. [from ill.]

1. Badness or inconvenience of any kind, natural or moral.

He that has his chains knocked off, and the prison-doors set open, is perfectly at liberty, though his preference be determined to stay, by the illness of the weather. Locke.

2. Sickmess; malady; disorder of health.

On the Lord's day which immediately preceded his illness, he had received the sacrament. Atterbury.

Since the account her majesty received of the insolent faction, during her late illness at Windsor, she hath been willing to see them deprived of power to do mischief. Swift.

3. Wickedness.

Thou would be great;
Art not without ambition; but without
The illness should attend it. Shakspeare.

ILLNATURE. n. f. [ill and nature.] Habitual malevolence; want of humanity.

Illnature inclines a man to those actions that thwart and sour and disturb conversation, and consists of a proneness to do ill turns, attended with a secret joy upon the sight of any mischief that befalls another, and of an utter insensibility of any kindness done him. South.

ILLNATURED. adj. [from illnature.]

1. Habitually malevolent; wanting kindness or good-will; mischievous; desirous of another's evil.

These ill qualities denominate a person illnatured, they being such as make him grievous and uneasy to all whom he deals and associates himself with. South.

Stay, silly bird, th' illnatur'd task refuse;
Nor be the bearer of unwelcome news. Addison.

It might be one of those illnatured beings who are at enmity with mankind, and do therefore take pleasure in filling them with groundless terrors. Atterbury.

2. Philips applies it to land. Untractable; not yielding to culture.

The fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold on their illnatured land Induce. Philips.

Far round illumine'd hell. Milton.

What in me is dark,
Illumine! what is low, raise and support!
Milton.

2. To decorate; to adorn.

To Cato, Virgil paid one honest line;
O let my country's friends illumine mine. Pope.

To ILLUMINATE. v. a. [illuminer, French; lumen, Latin.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

Do thou vouchsafe, with thy love-kindling light,
T' illuminate my dim and dulled eye. Spenser.

No painting can be seen in full perfection, but as all nature is illuminated by a single light. Wotton.

He made the stars,
And set them in the firmament of heav'n,
T' illuminate the earth and rule the night. Milton.
Reason our guide, what can the more reply
Than that the sun illuminates the sky;
Than that night rises from his absent ray,
And his returning lustre kindles day? Prior.

2. To adorn with festal lamps or bonfires.
3. To enlighten intellectually with knowledge or grace.

Satan had no power to abuse the illuminated world with his impostures. Sandys' Travels.

When he illuminates the mind with supernatural light, he does not extinguish that which is natural. Locke.

4. To adorn with pictures or initial letters of various colours.

ILLUMINATION. n. f. [illuminatio, Lat. illumination, Fr. from illuminate.]

1. The act of supplying with light.
2. That which gives light.

The sun is but a body illightened, and an illumination created. Raleigh's History.

3. Festal lights hung out as a token of joy.

Flow'rs are strew'd, and lamps in order plac'd, And windows with illuminations grac'd. Dryd.

4. Brightness; splendour.

The illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work. Felton.

5. Infusion of intellectual light; knowledge of grace.

Hymns and psalms are such kinds of prayer as are not conceived upon a sudden; but framed by meditation beforehand, or by prophetic illumination are inspired. Hooker.

We have forms of prayer imploring God's aid and blessing for the illumination of our labours, and the turning them into good and holy uses. Bacon.

No holy passion, no illumination, no inspiration, can be now a sufficient commission to warrant those attempts which contradict the common rules of peace. Sprat's Sermons.

ILLUMINATIVE. adj. [illuminatif, Fr. from illuminate.] Having the power to give light.

What makes itself and other things be seen, being accompanied by light, is called fire: what admits the illuminative action of fire, and is not seen, is called air. Digby on Bodies.

ILLUMINATOR. n. f. [from illuminate.]

1. One who gives light.
2. One whose business it is to decorate books with pictures at the beginning of chapters.

Illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work. Felton.

ILLUSION. n. f. [illusio, Latin; illusion, Fr.] Mockery; false show; counterfeit appearance; error.

That, distill'd by magic flights, Shall raise such artificial sprights, As, by the strength of their illusion, Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shaksp.

There wanted not some about him that would have persuaded him that all was but an illusion. Bacon's Henry VII.

So oft they fell Into the same illusion; not as man Whom they triumph'd, once laps'd. Milton.

An excuse for uncharitableness, drawn from pretended inability, is of all others the most general and prevailing illusion. Atterbury.

Many are the illusions by which the enemy endeavours to cheat men into security, and defeat their salvation. Rogers.

To dream once more I close my willing eyes; Ye soft illusions, dear deceits, arise! Pope.

We must use some illusion to render a pastoral delightful; and this consists in exposing the best side only of a shepherd's life, and in concealing its miseries. Pope.

ILLUSIVE. adj. [from illusus, Lat.] Deceiving by false show.

The heathen bards, who idle fables dress, Illusive dreams in mystick forms express. Blackmore.

While the fond soul Wrapt in gay visions of unreal bliss, Still paints th' illusive form. Thomson.

ILLUSORY. adj. [from in and lusorius, Latin; illusoire, French.] Deceiving; fraudulent.

Subtily, in those who make profession to teach or defend truth, hath passed for a virtue: a virtue indeed, which, consisting for the most part in nothing but the fallacious and illusive use of obscure or deceitful terms, is only fit to make men more conceited in their ignorance. Locke.

TO ILLUSTRATE. v. n. [illustro, Latin; illustrer, French.]

1. To brighten with light.
2. To brighten with honour.

Matter to me of glory! whom their hate Illustrates, when they see all regal pow'r Giv'n to me to quell their pride. Milton.

Thee she enroll'd her garter'd knights among, Illustrating the noble list. Philips.

3. To explain; to clear; to elucidate.

Authors take up popular conceits, and from tradition unjustifiable, or false, illustrate matters of undeniable truth. Brown.

ILLUSTRATION. n. f. [illustration, Fr. from illustrate.] Explanation; elucidation; exposition. It is seldom used in its original signification for material brightness.

Whoever looks about him will find many living illustrations of this emblem. L'Estrange.

Space and duration, being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may perhaps be of use for their illustration. Locke.

ILLUSTRATIVE. adj. [from illustrate.] Having the quality of elucidating or clearing.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people. Brown.

ILLUSTRATIVELY. adv. [from illustrative.] By way of explanation.

Things are many times delivered hieroglyphically, metaphorically, illustratively, and not with reference to action. Brown.

ILLUSTRIOUS. adj. [illustis, Lat. illustre, French.] Conspicuous; noble; eminent for excellence.

In other languages the most illustrious titles are derived from things sacred. South.

Of ev'ry nation, each illustrious name, Such toys as those have cheated into fame. Dryd.

ILLUSTRIOUSLY. adv. [from illustrious.] Conspicuously; nobly; eminently.

He disdain'd not to appear at festival entertainments, that he might more illustriously manifest his charity. Atterbury.

You carrying with you all the world can boast, To all the world illustriously are lost. Pope.

ILLUSTRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from illustrious.] Eminence; nobility; grandeur.

I'M. Contracted from I am.

IM is used commonly, in composition, for in before mute letters. What is im in Latin, when it is not negative, is often em in French; and our writers, as the Latin or French occurs to their minds, use im or em: formerly im was more common, and now em seems to prevail.

IMAGE. n. f. [image, Fr. imago, Lat.]

1. Any corporeal representation, generally used of statues; a statue; a picture.

Whose is this image and supercription? Matt.

The one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's oldest son, evermore talking. Shakspere.

Thy brother I, Even like a stony image, cold and numb. Shaksp.
The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion. South.

Still must I be upbraided with your line; But your late brother did not prize me less, Because I could not boast of images. Dryden.

2. An idol; a false god.

Manasseh set the carved image in God's house. Chronicles.

3. A copy; representation; likeness.

Long may'st thou live, To bear his image and renew his glories! Shak.
I have bewept a worthy husband's death, And liv'd by looking on his images: But now two mirrors of his princely semblance Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death. Shakspere's Richard III.

He made us to his image all agree: That image is the soul, and that must be, Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden.

4. Semblance; show; appearance.

Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary.

They have travell'd all night! Mere fetches, The images of revolt. Shakspere's King Lear.

This is the man should do the bloody deed: The image of a wicked heinous fault Lives in his eye. Shakspere's King John.

The face of things a frightful image bears, And present death in various forms appears. Dryden's Æneid.

5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.

The image of the jest I'll shew you here at large. Shakspere.

Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive Image of aught delightful, soft, or great? Prior.

When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles, we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles; but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles. Watts.

TO IMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy; to imagine.

How are immaterial substances to be imaged, which are such things whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.

Image to thy mind How our forefathers to the Stygian shades Went quick. Philips.

His ear oft frighted with the imag'd voice Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd. Prior.

Fate some future bard shall join, In sad similitude of griefs to mine, Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore, And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

I'MAGERY. n. f. [from image.]

1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.

Of marble stone was cut An altar carv'd with cunning imagery. F. Queen.

When in those oratories might you see Rich carvings, portraitures, and imagery; Where ev'ry figure to the life express'd The godhead's pow'r. Dryden.

Your gift shall two large goblets be Of silver, wrought with curious imagery, And high emboss'd. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Show; appearance.

Things of the world fill the imaginative part with beauties and fantastick imagery. Taylor.

What can thy imagery of sorrow mean? Secluded from the world, and all its care, Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear? Prior.

All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the paint and imagery that attracted our senses, fade and disappear. Rogers.

3. Forms of the fancy; false ideas; imaginary phantasms.

It might be a mere dream which he saw; the imagery of a melancholick fancy, such as musing men mistake for a reality. Atterbury.

4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.

I wish there may be in this poem any instance of good imagery. Dryden.

IMA'GINABLE. adj. [imaginable, French, from imagine.] Possible to be conceived.

It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot esteem. South.

Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity. Tillotson.

IMA'GINANT. adj. [imaginant, French.] Imagining; forming ideas.

We will enquire what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon.

IMA'GINARY. adj. [imaginaire, Fr. from imagine.] Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.

False sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shakespeare.

Expectation whirls me round:

Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,

That it enchants my sense. Shakespeare.

Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raleigh's History.

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer,
Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison.

IMAGINATION. n. f. [imaginatio, Latin; imagination, French; from imagine.]

1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.

Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Glanville.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The fight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton.

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.

Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginations; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sidney.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unselt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shaksp

Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakespeare.

His imaginations were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.

3. Contrivance; scheme.

Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me. Lamentations.

4. An unsolid or fanciful opinion.

VOL. I.

We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself, leads us. Locke.

IMA'GINATIVE. adj. [imaginatif, French; from imagine.] Fantastick; full of imagination.

Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon.

Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastick part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gauds. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To IMA'GINE. v. a. [imaginer, French; imagine, Latin.]

1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.

Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,

Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed. Shakespeare.

Present fears

Are less than horrible imaginings. Shakespeare.

What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition? Locke.

2. To scheme; to contrive.

They intended evil against thee, they imagined a mischievous device. Psalms.

IMA'GINER. n. f. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.

The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a garter that was held up; and still he did it, by first telling the imaginer, and after bidding the actor think. Bacon.

IMBE'CILE. adj. [imbecilis, Latin; imbecille, French.] Weak; feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.

To IMBE'CILE. v. a. [from the adjective. This word is corruptly written embezzle.] To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations.

Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbeciled. Taylor.

IMBECILITY. n. f. [imbecillité, French.] Weakness; feebleness of mind or body.

A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imperfection. Hooker.

No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Hooker.

We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves. Hooker.

That way we are contented to prove, which, being the worse in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brooked. Hooker.

Strength would be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son would strike his father dead. Shakespeare.

Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them. King Charles.

When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Woodward.

To IMBIBE. v. a. [imbibo, Latin; imbiber, French.]

1. To drink in; to draw in.

A pot of ashes will receive more hot water than cold, forasmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt. Brown.

The torrent merciless imbibes
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes. Swift.

Illumin'd wide,
The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the sun. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To admit into the mind.

Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises. Hammond.

It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom. Locke.

Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts.

3. To drench; to saturate; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissoluble in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newton.

IMBIBER. n. f. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.

Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous steams. Arbutnot.

IMBIBITION. n. f. [imbibition, Fr. from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.

Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon.

A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To IMBITTER. v. a. [from bitter.]

1. To make bitter.

2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.

Let them extinguish their passions which im-bitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Addison.

Is there any thing that more imbitters the enjoyments of this life than shame? South.

3. To exasperate.

To IMBODY. v. a. [from body.]

1. To condense to a body.

2. To invest with matter; to make corporeal.

An opening cloud reveals
An heav'nly form imbody'd, and array'd
With robes of light. Dryden.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our imbodyed souls can bear without lassitude. Glanville's Scepis.

3. To bring together into one mass or company; to incorporate.

I by vow am so imbodyed yours,
That she which marries you must marry me. Shakespeare.

Never since created, man
Met such imbodyed force, as nam'd with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry
Warr'd on by cranes. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Under their head imbody'd all in one. Milton.
Then Clausus came, who led a num'rous band
Of troops imbodyed, from the Sabine land. Dryd.

4. To enclose. Improper.

In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral imbodyed in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marble. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBODY. v. n. To unite into one mass; to coalesce.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodyes and imbrutes, 'till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.

IMB

The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow to-day, put together in your mind, imbody and run into one. Locke.

To IMBO'IL. v. n. [from boil.] To exesuate; to effervesce; to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron. Not in use.

With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imboiling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Fairy Queen.

To IMBO'LDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence; to encourage.

'Tis necessary he should die:

Nothing imboldens sin so much as mercy. Shaksp.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something im-

boldened me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shaksp.

I was the more imboldened, because I found I had a foul congenial to his. Dryden.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;

Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay. Dryden.

Their virtues and superior genius imboldened them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms. Swift.

To IMBO'SOM. v. a. [from bosom.]

1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.

The Father infinite,

By whom in blis imbosom'd sat the Son. Milton.

Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,

And spiry towns by surging columns mark'd.

Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.

But glad desire, his late imbosom'd guest,

Yet but a babe, with milk of fight he nurst.

Sidney.

Who glad t' imbosom his affection vile,

Did all the might, more plainly to appear.

Fairy Queen.

To IMBO'UND. v. a. [from bound.] To enclose; to shut in.

That sweet breath,

Which was imbounded in this beauteous clay.

Shakspere.

To IMBO'W. v. a. [from bow.] To arch; to vault.

Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond sure,

Imbow'd with gold and gorgeous ornament.

Fairy Queen.

Imbow'd windows be pretty retiring places for conference: they keep both the wind and sun off. Bacon.

Let my due feet never fail

To walk the studious cloister's pale,

And love the high imbow'd roof,

With antick pillar massy proof. Milton.

To IMBO'WER. v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower; to shelter with trees.

And stooping thence to Ham's imbow'ring

walks,

In spotless peace retired. Thomson.

IMBO'WMENT. n. f. [from imbow.] Arch;

vault.

The roof all open, not so much as any imbow-

To IMBRA'NGLE. v. a. To entangle.

A low word.

With subtle cobweb cheats

They're catch'd in knotted law, like nets;

In which, when once they are imbrangled,

The more they flir, the more they're tangled.

Hudibras.

IMBRICATED. adj. [from imbrex, Lat.]

Indented with concavities; bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMB

IMBRICA'TION. n. f. [imbrex, Latin.]

Concave indenture.

All is guarded with a well-made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries. Derham.

To IMBRO'WN. v. a. [from brown.]

To make brown; to darken; to obscure; to cloud.

Where the morning sun first warmly smote

The open field, and where the unpierc'd shade

Imbrown'd the noontide bow'rs. Milton.

The foot grows black that was with dirt im-

brown'd,

And in thy pocket gingling halfpence found.

Gay.

Another age shall see the golden ear

Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre.

Pope.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands. Pope.

To IMBRU'E. v. a. [from in and brue.]

1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long. This seems indifferently written with im or em. I have sustained both modes of writing.

Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed

Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embru'd,

And by thy cruel darts to thee subdu'd. Spenser.

There streams a spring of blood so fast

From those deep wounds, as all embru'd the face

Of that accursed caitiff. Daniel's Civil War.

The merciless Turks, embru'd with the christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Knolles' History.

At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,

Whose arrows in my blood their wings imbrue.

Sandys.

Lucius pities the offenders,

That would embrue their hands in Cato's blood.

Addison.

Lo! these hands in murder are imbru'd,

Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.

There, where two ways in equal parts divide,

The direful monster from afar deserv'd

Two bleeding babes depending at her side;

Whose panting vitals, warm with life, she draws,

And in their hearts embru'd her cruel claws. Pope.

His virgin sword Aegythus' veins imbru'd;

The murd'rer fell, and blood aton'd for blood.

Pope.

A good man chuses rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbrue his hands in blood.

Clarissa.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.

Some bathed kisses, and did oft embrue

The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips.

Fairy Queen.

To IMBRU'TE. v. a. [from brute.] To degrade to brutality.

I, who erst contend'd

With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd

Into a beast; and mix with bestial slime,

This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton.

To IMBRU'TE. v. n. To sink down to brutality.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,

Imbodies and imbrutes, till she quite lose

The divine property of her first being. Milton.

To IMBU'E. v. a. [imbuo, Latin.] This word, which seems wanting in our language, has been proposed by several writers, but not yet adopted by the rest.

Imbu, French, the participial adj. is only used.] To tincture deep; to imbibe or soak with any liquor or die.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastick learning; among whom I expect it will have a fairer passage, than among those that are deeply imbued with other principles. Digby.

Clothes which have once been thoroughly im- bued with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into lighter colour. Boyle.

IMM

Where the mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imbued and tinctured with the colour. Woodward.

To IMBU'RSE. v. a. [bourse, Fr.] To stock with money. This should be emburse, from embourser, French.

IMITABI'LITY. n. f. [imitabilitas, Latin.]

The quality of being imitable.

According to the multifariousness of this imi-

tability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

IMITABLE. adj. [imitabilis, Lat. imitable, French.]

1. Worthy to be imitated; deserving to be copied.

How could the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish course? Raleigh.

As acts of parliament are not regarded by most

imitable writers, I account the relation of them improper for history. Hayward.

2. Possible to be imitated; within reach of imitation.

The characters of men placed in lower stations of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers. Atterbury.

To IMITATE. v. a. [imitor, Latin; imiter, French.]

1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any out of your muskets. Bacon.

Despise wealth, and imitate a god. Cowley.

I would carefs some stableman of note,

And imitate his language and his coat.

Man of Taste.

2. To counterfeit.

This hand appear'd a shining sword to wield,

And that sustain'd an imitated shield. Dryden.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.

For shame! what, imitate an ode! Gay.

IMITA'TION. n. f. [imitatio, Latin; imi*tation*, French.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.

2. That which is offered as a copy.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater; for both these arts are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

3. A method of translating looser than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestick for foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion; and, taking only some general hints from the original, runs division on the ground-work. Dryden.

IMITATIVE. adj. [imitativus, Latin.]

1. Inclined to copy: as, man is an imitative

being.

2. Aiming at resemblance: as, painting is an imitative art.

3. Formed after some original.

This temple, less in form, with equal grace,

Was imitative of the first in Thrace. Dryden.

IMITA'TOR. n. f. [Latin; imitator, Fr.]

One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle, says

the poet. Dryden.

IMMA'ULATE. adj. [immaculatus, Lat.

immaculé, French.]

1. Spotless; pure; undefiled.

To keep this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ.

Huckle.

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate. Shaksp.
The king, whom catholicks count a faint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

Were but my soul as pure
From other guilts as that, Heav'n did not hold
One more immaculate. Denham's Sophy.

2. Pure; limpid.

Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,
Hath had his current and defil'd himself. Shaksp.

To IMMA'NACLE. v. a. [from manacle.]

To fetter; to confine.

Thou can'st not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immanacled. Milton.

IMMA'NE. adj. [immanis, Latin.] Vast;
prodigiously great.

IMMANENT. adj. [immanent, French; in and maneo, Latin.] Intrinsic; inherent; internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow selves, we ascribe intellects, volitions, and such like immanent actions, to that nature which hath nothing in common with us. Glanville.

What he wills and intends once, he willed and intended from all eternity; it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite perfections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God. South.

IMMA'NIFEST. adj. [in and manifest.]

Not manifest; not plain. Not in use.

A time not much unlike that which was before time, immanifest and unknown. Brown.

IMMA'NITY. n. f. [immanitas, Latin.]

Barbarity; savageness.

It was both impious and unnatural,
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith. Shaksp.

IMMARCE'SSIBLE. adj. [in and marcesco, Latin.] Unfading. Diſt.

IMMA'RTIAL. adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My pow'rs are unfit, Myself immartial. Chapman's Odyssey.

To IMMA'SK. v. a. [in and mask.] To cover; to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask our noted outward garments. Shaksp.

IMMATE'RIAL. adj. [immaterial, French;
in and materia, Latin.]

1. Incorporeal; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual,
the glorious inhabitants of those sacred palaces,
where there is nothing but light and immortality;
no shadow of matter for tears, discontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon;
but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even for ever and ever, do dwell. Hooker.

As then the soul a substance hath alone,
Besides the body, in which she is confin'd;
So hath she not a body of her own,
But is a spirit, and immaterial mind. Davies.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us.

Decay of Piety.

No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tillot.

2. Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATERIA'LITY. n. f. [from immaterial.]

Incorporeity; distinctness from body or matter.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMATE'RIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.]

In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporal rays do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMMATE'RIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia, Latin.] Distinct from matter;
incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanville's Sceptis.

IMMATE'RIALNESS. n. f. [from immaterial.] Distinctness from matter.

IMMATE'RIATE. adj. [in and materia, Latin.] Not consisting of matter; incorporeal; wanting body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immaterial, whereof there be in nature but few. Bacon.

After a long enquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immate-riate, or less materiate; such as this of sounds.

Bacon.

IMMATURE. adj. [immaturus, Lat.]

1. Not ripe.

2. Not perfect; not arrived at fulness or completion.

The land enterprize of Panama was an ill measured and immature counsel, grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better fortified than Drake had left them. Bacon.

This is your time for faction and debate,
For partial favour, and permitted hate:
Let now your immature dissension cease, Sit quiet. Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

We are pleased, and call not that death immature, if a man lives 'till seventy. Taylor.

IMMATURELY. adv. [from immature.]

Too soon; too early; before ripeness or completion.

IMMATURENESS. } n. f. [from immature.]

IMMATUREITY. } Unripeness; incompleteness; a state short of completion.

I might reasonably expect a pardon from the ingenious for faults committed in an immaturity of age and judgment. Glanville.

IMMEABI'LITY. n. f. [immediabilis, Latin.]

Want of power to pass. So it is used in the example; but it is rather, incapability of affording passage.

From this phlegm proceed white cold tumours, viscidities, and consequently immeability of the juices. Arbuthnot.

IMMEASURABLE. adj. [in and measure.]

Immense; not to be measured; indefinitely extensive.

Churches reared up to an height immeasurable, and adorned with far more beauty in their restoration than their founders before had given them.

Hooker.

From the shore

They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss,
Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild.

Milton.

Immeasurable strength they might behold
In me, of wisdom nothing more than mean.

Milton.

What a glorious show are those beings entertained with, that can see such tremendous objects wandering through those immeasurable depths of ether! Addison's Guardian.

Nor friends are there, nor vessels to convey,
Nor oars to cut th' immeasurable way. Pope.

IMMEASURABLY. adv. [from immeasurable.] Immensely; beyond all measure.

The Spaniards immeasurably bewail their dead.

Spenser.

There ye shall be fed, and fill'd

Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey.

Milton.

IMMECHA'NICAL. adj. [in and mechanical.]

Not according to the laws of mechanics.

We have nothing to do to show any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the established laws of nature. Cheyne.

Nothing will clear a head possessed with *imme-

IMMEDIACY. n. f. [from immediate.]

Personal greatness; power of acting without dependance. This is a harsh word, and sense peculiar, I believe, to Shakspere.

He led our pow'rs,

Bore the commission of my place and person,

The which immediacy may well stand up,

And call itself your brother. King Lear.

IMMEDIATE. adj. [immediat, French;
in and medius, Latin.]

1. Being in such a state with respect to something else as that there is nothing between them; proximate; with nothing intervening.

Moses mentions the immediate causes of the deluge, the rains and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens. Burnet.

2. Not acting by second causes.

It is much to be ascribed to the immediate will of God, who giveth and taketh away beauty at his pleasure. Abbot.

3. Instant; present with regard to time.
Prior therefore should not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief

Must not be tost and turn'd to me in words,

But find supply immediate. Shakspere.

Death denounc'd that day,

Which he presumes already vain, and void,

Because not yet inflicted, as he fear'd

By some immediate stroke. Milton.

But she, howe'er of vict'ry sure,

Contemns the wreath too long delay'd;

And arm'd with more immediate pow'r,

Calls cruel silence to her aid. Prior.

IMMEDIATELY. adv. [from immediate.]

1. Without the intervention of any other cause or event.

God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himself, or mediately by the hands of the bishop, is that which vests the whole property of a thing in God. South.

2. Instantly; at the time present; without delay.

Her father hath commanded her to slip

Away with Slender, and with him at Eaton

Immediately to marry. Shakspere.

IMMEDIATENESS. n. f. [from immediate.]

1. Presence with regard to time.

2. Exemption from second or intervening causes.

IMMEDICABLE. adj. [immedicabilis, Lat.]

Not to be healed; incurable.

My griefs ferment and rage,

Nor less than wounds immedicable,

Rankle and fester, and gangrene

To black mortification. Milton's Agonistes.

IMMEMORABLE. adj. [immemorabilis,
Latin.] Not worth remembering.

IMMEMORIAL. adj. [immemorial, French; in and memoria, Latin.] Past time of memory; so ancient that the beginning cannot be traced.

All the laws of this kingdom have some memorials in writing; yet all have not their original in writing; for some obtained their force by immemorial usage or custom. Hale.

By a long immemorial practice, and prescription of an aged thorough-paced hypocrisy, they come to believe that for a reality, which, at first practice of it, they themselves knew to be a cheat. South.

IMMENSE. adj. [immense, French; immensus, Latin.] Unlimited; unbounded; infinite.

O goodness infinite! goodness immense! That all this good of evil shall produce! Milton.

As infinite duration hath no relation unto motion and time, so infinite or immense essence hath no relation unto body; but is a thing distinct from all corporeal magnitude, which we mean when we speak of immensity, and of God as of an immense being. Grew.

IMMENSELY. adv. [from immense.] Infinitely; without measure.

We shall find that the void space of our system is immensely bigger than all its corporeal mass. Bentley.

IMMENSITY. n. f. [immensité, French.] Unbounded greatness; infinity.

By the power we find in ourselves of repeating, as often as we will, any idea of space, we get the idea of immensity. Locke.

He that will consider the immensity of this fabric, and the great variety that is to be found in this inconsiderable part of it which he has to do with, may think that in other mansions of it there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

All these illustrious worlds, And millions which the glass can ne'er descry, Lost in the wilds of vast immensity, Are suns, are centers. Blackmore's Creation.

IMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from immensurable.] Impossibility to be measured.

IMMENSURABLE. adj. [in and mensurabilis, Latin.] Not to be measured.

TO IMMERGE. v. a. [immergo, Latin.] To put under water.

IMMERIT. n. f. [immerito, Latin.] Want of worth; want of desert. This is a better word than demerit, which is now used in its stead.

When I receive your lines, and find there expressions of a passion, reason and my own immerit tell me it must not be for me. Suckling.

TO IMMERSE. v. a. [immersus, Latin.]

1. To put under water.

2. To sink or cover deep.

He stood More than a mile immers'd within the wood; At once the wind was laid. Dryden.

They observed that they were immersed in their rocks, quarries, and mines, in the same manner as they are at this day found in all known parts of the world. Woodward.

3. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.

It is a melancholy reflection, that our country, which, in times of popery, was called the nation of saints, should now have less appearance of religion in it than any other neighbouring state or kingdom; whether they be such as continue still immersed in the errors of the church of Rome, or such as are recovered out of them. Addison's Freeholder.

We are prone to engage ourselves with the business, the pleasures, and the amusements of this world: we give ourselves up too greedily to the pursuit, and immerse ourselves too deeply in the enjoyments of them. Atterbury.

It is impossible to have a lively hope in another life, and yet be deeply immersed in the enjoyments of this. Atterbury.

IMMERSE. adj. [immersus, Lat.] Buried; covered; sunk deep.

After long inquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less material; such as this of sounds, that the intellect may become not partial. Bacon.

IMMERSION. n. f. [immersio, Latin; immersion, French.]

1. The act of putting any body into a fluid below the surface.

Achilles's mother is said to have dipped him, when he was a child, in the river Styx, which made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which the mother held in her hand during this immersion. Addison's Guardian.

2. The state of sinking below the surface of a fluid.

3. The state of being overwhelmed or lost in any respect.

Many persons, who, through the heat of their lusts and passions, through the contagion of ill example, or too deep an immersion in the affairs of life, swerve from the rules of their holy faith; yet would, upon extraordinary warning, be brought to comply with them. Atterbury.

IMMETHODICAL. adj. [in and methodical.] Confused; being without regularity; being without method.

M. Bayle compares the answering of an immethoudical author to the hunting of a duck: when you have him full in your sight, he gives you the slip, and becomes invisible. Addison.

IMMETHODICALLY. adv. [from immethoudical.] Without method; without order.

IMMINENCE. n. f. [from imminent.] Any ill impending; immediate or near danger. Not in use.

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death; But dare all imminence, that gods and men Address their dangers in. Shakspeare.

IMMINENT. adj. [imminent, French; imminens, Latin.] Impending; at hand; threatening. Always in an ill sense.

What dangers at any time are imminent, what evils hang over our heads, God doth know, and not we. Hooker.

Three times to-day You have defended me from imminent death. Shakspeare.

These she applies for warnings and portents Of evils imminent; and on her knee Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day. Shakspeare.

To them preach'd Conversion and repentance, as to souls In prison, under judgments imminent. Milton. Men could not fail without imminent danger and inconveniences. Pope.

TO IMMINGLE. v. a. [in and mingle.] To mingle; to mix; to unite.

Some of us, like thee, through stormy life Toild, tempest-beaten, ere we could attain This holy calm, this harmony of mind, Where purity and peace immingle charms. Thomson.

IMMINUTION. n. f. [from imminuo, Latin.] Diminution; decrease.

These revolutions are as exactly uniform as the earth's are, which could not be, were there any place for chance, and did not a Providence continually oversee and secure them from all alteration or imminution. Ray on the Creation.

IMMISCIBILITY. n. f. [from immiscibile.] Incapacity of being mingled.

IMMISCIBLE. adj. [in and miscible.] Not capable of being mingled. Clarissa.

Objects divine
 Must needs impair, and weary human sense. Milton.

That soon refresh'd him weary'd, and repair'd
What hunger, if aught hunger had impair'd,
Or thirst. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.
In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years.
Pope.

To IMPAIR. v. n. To be lessened or worn out.

Flesh may impair, quoth he; but reason can repair. Fairy Queen.

IMPAIR. n. f. [from the verb.] Diminution; decrease. Not used.

A loadstone, kept in undue position, that is, not lying on the meridian, or with its poles inverted, receives in longer time impair in activity and exchange of faces, and is more powerfully preserved by site than dust of steel. Brown.

IMPAIRMENT. n. f. [from impair.] Diminution; injury.

His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMPALPABLE. adj. [impalpable, French; in and palpable.] Not to be perceived by touch.

If beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out, it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion. Boyle.

To IMPARADISE. v. a. [imparadisare, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.

This imparadised neighbourhood made Zelmane's soul cleave unto her, both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did over-cloud it. Sidney.

All my souls be
Imparadis'd in you, in whom alone
I understand, and grow, and see. Donne.

Thus these two,
Imparadis'd in one another's arms,
The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill
Of bliss on bliss. Milton's Paradise Lost.

IMPARITY. n. f. [imparitas, impar, Lat.]

1. Inequality; disproportion.

Some bodies are hard, some soft: the hardness is caused chiefly by the jejuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts. Bacon.

2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.

What verity is there in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man, by even and odd; and so by parity or imparity of letters in men's names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies? Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To IMPARK. v. a. [in and park.] To enclose with a park; to sever from a common.

To IMPART. v. a. [impartior, Latin.]

1. To grant; to give.

High state and honours to others impart,
But give me your heart. Dryden.

2. To make known; to show by words or tokens.

Gentle lady,
When first I did impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

As in confession the revealing is for the ease of a man's heart, so secret men come to the knowledge of many things, while men rather discharge than impart their minds. Bacon.

Thou to me thy thoughts
Wast wont, I mine to thee was wont t' impart.
Milton.

3. To communicate; to grant as to a partaker.

I find thee knowing of thyself;
Expressing well the spirit within thee free,
My image, not imparted to the brute. Milton.

IMPARTIAL. adj. [impartial, Fr. in and partial.] Equitable; free from regard to party; indifferent; disinterested; equal in distribution of justice; just. It is used as well of actions as persons: an impartial judge; an impartial sentence.

Success I hope, and fate I cannot fear:
Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name;
Jove is impartial, and to both the same. Dryden.

IMPARTIALITY. n. f. [impartialité, Fr. from impartial.] Equitableness; justice; indifference.

A pious and well-disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success unto our inquiries into truth; it being scarce possible for that man to hit the mark, whose eye is still glancing upon something beside it. South.

IMPARTIALLY. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiassed judgment; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.

Since the scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition. South.

IMPARTIBLE. adj. [impartible, French; from impart.] Communicable; that may be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant, though used by few writers.

The same body may be conceived to be more or less impartible than it is active or heavy. Digby.

IMPASSABLE. adj. [in and passable.] Not to be passed; not admitting passage; impervious.

There are in America many high and impassable mountains, which are very rich. Raleigh.

Over this gulf
Impassable, impervious; let us try
To found a path from hell to that new world. Milton.

When Alexander would have passed the Ganges, he was told by the Indians that all beyond it was either impassable marshes, or sandy deserts. Temple.

IMPASSIBILITY. n. f. [impassibilité, Fr. from impassible.] Exemption from suffering; insusceptibility of injury from external things.

Two divinities might have pleaded their prerogative of impassibility, or at least not have been wounded by any mortal hand. Dryden.

IMPASSIBLE. adj. [impassible, French; in and passio, Latin.] Incapable of suffering; exempt from the agency of external causes; exempt from pain.

If the upper soul check what is consented to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope that, after a few years of sensuality, that rebellious servant shall be eternally cast off, drop into a perpetual impassible nothing, take a long progress into a land where all things are forgotten, this would be some colour. Hammond.

Secure of death, I should contemn thy dart,
Though naked, and impassible depart. Dryden.

IMPASSIBLENESS. n. f. [from impassible.] Impassibility; exemption from pain.

How shameless a partiality is it, thus to reserve all the sensualities of this world, and yet cry out for the *impassible*ness of the next? Decay of Piety.

IMPASSIONED. adj. [in and passion.] Disordered by passion.

So, standing, moving, or to height upgrown,
The tempter, all impassion'd, thus began. Milton.

IMPASSIVE. adj. [in and passive.] Exempt from the agency of external causes.

She told him what those empty phantoms were,
Forms without bodies, and impassive air. Dryden.
Pale suns, unfelt at distance, roll away;
And on th' impassive ice the lightnings play. Pope.

IMPASTED. adj. [in and paste.] Concreted as into paste. Not in use.

Horribly trickt
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons, Bak'd and impasted with the parching fires. Shakspere.

IMPATIENCE. n. f. [impatience, French; impatientia, Latin.]

1. Inability to suffer pain; rage under suffering.

All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience. Shakspere's King Lear.

The experiment I resolved to make was upon thought, and not rashness or impatience. Temple.

2. Vehemence of temper; heat of passion.

3. Inability to suffer delay; eagerness.

IMPATIENT. adj. [impatient, French; impatiens, Latin.]

1. Not able to endure; incapable to bear with of.

Fame, impatient of extremes, decays
Not more by envy than excess of praise. Pope.

2. Furious with pain; unable to bear pain.

The tortur'd savage turns around,
And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound. Dryden.

3. Vehemently agitated by some painful passion: with at before the occasion: with of impatience is referred more to the thing, with at to the person.

To be impatient at the death of a person, concerning whom it was certain he must die, is to mourn because thy friend was not born an angel. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

4. Hot; hasty.

The impatient man will not give himself time to be informed of the matter that lies before him. Addison's Spectator.

5. Eager; ardently desirous; not able to endure delay: with for before the thing desired.

The mighty Cæsar waits his vital hour,
Impatient for the world, and grasps his promis'd pow'r. Dryden.

On the seas prepar'd the vessel stands;
Th' impatient mariner thy speed demands. Pope.

IMPATIENTLY. adv. [from impatient.]

1. With rage, under uneasiness.

2. Passionately; ardently.

He considered one thing so impatiently, that he would not admit any thing else to be worth consideration. Clarendon.

3. Eagerly; with great desire.

To IMPATRONIZE. v. a. [impatroniser, Fr. in and patronize.] To gain to one's self the power of any feigniory. This word is not usual.

The ambition of the French king was to impatronize himself of the dutchy. Bacon.

To IMPAWN. v. a. [in and pawn.] To impignorate; to pawn; to give as a pledge; to pledge.

Go to the king, and let there be impawn'd
Some surety for a safe return again. Shaksp.

Many now in health

Shall drop their blood, in approbation

Of what your reverence shall invite us to;

Therefore take heed how you impawn out person,

How you awake our sleeping sword of war. Shakspere.

To IMPEACH. v. a. [empecher, Fr.]

1. To hinder; to impede. This sense is little in use.

Each door he opened without any breach;
There was no bar to stop, no foe him to impeach.

Spenser.

His sons did impeach his journey to the Holy Land, and vexed him all the days of his life.

Davies.

If they will impeach the purposes of an army, which they have no reason to think themselves able to resist, they put themselves out of all expectation of mercy.

Hayward.

A defluxion on my throat impeached my utterance.

Howel.

2. To accuse by publick authority.

They were both impeached by a house of commons.

Addison.

Great diffentions were kindled between the nobles and commons on account of Coriolanus, whom the latter had impeached.

Swift.

IMPEACH. n. f. [from the verb.] Hinderance; let; impediment.

Why, what an intricate impeach is this!

If here you hous'd him, here he would have been;

If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly.

Shakspeare.

IMPEACHABLE. adj. [from impeach.] Accusable; chargeable.

Had God omitted by positive laws to give religion to the world, the wisdom of his providence had been impeachable.

Greav.

IMPEACHER. n. f. [from impeach.] An accuser; one who brings an accusation against another.

Many of our fiercest impeachers would leave the delinquent to the merciful indulgence of a Saviour.

Government of the Tongue

IMPEACHMENT. n. f. [from impeach.]

1. Hinderance; let; impediment; obstruction. Not in use.

Tell us what things, during your late continuance there, are most offensive, and the greatest impeachment to the good government thereof.

Spenser on Ireland.

Tell thy king I do not seek him now;
But could be willing to march on to Calais,
Without impeachment.

Shakspeare.

Neither is this accession of necessity any impeachment to christian liberty, or ensnaring of men's consciences.

Sanderfon.

2. Publick accusation; charge preferred.

The king, provok'd to it by the queen,
Devis'd impeachments to imprison him.

Shakspeare.

The lord Somers, though his accusers would gladly have dropped their impeachment, was instant with them for the prosecution.

Addison.

The consequences of Coriolanus's impeachment had like to have been fatal to their state.

Swift.

To IMPEARL. v. a. [in and pearl.]

1. To form in resemblance of pearls.

Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impearls on every leaf, and ev'ry flow'r.

Milton.

2. To decorate as with pearls.

The dews of the morning impearl every thorn, and scatter diamonds on the verdant mantle of the earth.

Digby to Pope.

IMPECCABILITY. n. f. [impeccabilit , Fr. from impeccable.] Exemption from sin; exemption from failure.

Infallibility and impeccability are two of his attributes.

Pope.

IMPECCABLE. adj. [impeccable, Fr. in and pecco, Lat.] Exempt from possibility of sin.

That man pretends he never commits any act prohibited by the word of God, and then that were a rare charm to render him impeccable, or that is the means of consecrating every sin of his.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

To IMPEDE. v. a. [impedio, Lat.] To hinder; to let; to obstruct.

All the forces are mustered to impede his passage.

Decay of Piety.

The way is open, and no stop to force

The stars return, or to impede their course.

Creech.

IMPEDIMENT. n. f. [impedimentum, Lat.] Hinderance; let; obstruction; opposition.

The minds of beasts grudge not at their bodies comfort, nor are their senses letted from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience.

Sidney.

What impediments there are to hinder it, and which were the speediest way to remove them.

Hooker.

The life is led most happily wherein all virtue is exercised without impediment or let.

Hooker.

But for my tears,
The moist impediments unto my speech,
I had foretall'd this dear and deep rebuke.

Shakspeare.

May I never

To this good purpose, that so fairly shews, Dream of impediment.

Shak. Ant. and Cleo.

They bring one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech.

Mark.

Fear is the greatest impediment to martyrdom; and he that is overcome by little arguments of pain, will hardly consent to loose his life with torments.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

Free from th' impediments of light and noise,
Man, thus retir'd, his nobler thoughts employs.

Waller.

To IMPELL. v. a. [impello, Lat.] To drive on toward a point; to urge forward; to press on.

So Mirrah's mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide.

Dryd.

The furge impell'd me on a craggy coast.

Pope.

Propitious gales

Attend thy voyage, and impel thy sails.

Pope.

A mightier pow'r the strong direction sends,
And sev'ral men impels to sev'ral ends;

This drives them constant to a certain coast.

Pope.

IMPELLENT. n. f. [impellens, Lat.] An impulsive power; a power that drives forward.

How such a variety of motions should be regularly managed, in such a wilderness of passages, by mere blind impellents and material conveyances, I have not the least conjecture.

Glanville.

To IMPE'ND. v. n. [impendeo, Latin.]

1. To hang over.

Destruction sure o'er all your heads impends;
Ulysses comes, and death his steps attends.

Pope.

2. To be at hand; to press nearly. It is used in an ill sense.

It expresses our deep sorrow for our past sins,
and our lively sense of God's impending wrath.

Smalridge's Sermons.

No story I unfold of publick woes,
Nor bear advices of impending foes.

Pope.

IMPE'NDENT. adj. [impendens, Lat.] Imminent; hanging over; pressing closely. In an ill sense.

If the evil feared or impendent be a greater sensible evil than the good, it over-rules the appetite to averation.

Hale.

Dreadful in arms, on Landen's glorious plain Place Ormond's duke: impendent in the air

Prior.

Let his keen sabre, comet-like, appear.

IMPE'NDENCE. n. f. [from impendent.]

The state of hanging over; near approach.

Good sometimes is not safe to be attempted,
by reason of the impudence of a greater sensible evil.

Hale.

IMPENETRABILITY. n. f. [impenetrabilit , Fr. from impenetrable.]

1. Quality of not being pierceable, or permeable.

All bodies, so far as experience reaches, are either hard, or may be hardened; and we have no other evidence of universal impenetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception.

Newton's Opticks.

2. Insusceptibility of intellectual impression.

IMPENETRABLE. adj. [impenetrable, Fr. impenetrabilis, Lat.]

1. Not to be pierced; not to be entered by any external force.

With hard'ning cold, and forming heat,
The cyclops did their strokes repeat,
Before th' impenetrable shield was wrought.

Dryd.

2. Impervious; not admitting entrance.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,
Impenetrable to the stars or sun.

Dryden.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross: things, thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty in them, and are thought to be wrapped up in impenetrable obscurity.

Locke.

3. Not to be taught; not to be informed.

4. Not to be affected; not to be moved.

It is the most impenetrable cur
That ever kept with men.

— Let him alone;

I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers.

Shakspeare.

Some will never believe a proposition in divinity, if any thing can be said against it: they will be credulous in all affairs of life, but impenetrable by a sermon of the gospel.

Taylor.

IMPENETRABLY. adv. [from impenetrable.] With hardness to a degree incapable of impression.

Blunt the sense, and fit it for a skull
Of solid proof, impenetrably dull.

Pope.

IMPE'NITENCE. } n. f. [impenitence, Fr.

IMPE'NITENCY. } in and penitence.] Obduracy; want of remorse for crimes; final disregard of God's threatenings or mercy.

Where one man ever comes to repent, a thousand end their days in final impenitence.

South.

Before the revelation of the gospel the wickedness and impenitency of the heathens was a much more excuseable thing, because they were in a great measure ignorant of the rewards of another life.

Tillotson.

He will advance from one degree of wickedness and impenitence to another, 'till at last he becomes hardened without remorse.

Rogers.

IMPE'NITENT. adj. [impenitent, Fr. in and penitent.] Finally negligent of the duty of repentance; obdurate.

Our Lord in anger hath granted some impenitent men's request; as, on the other side, the apostle's suit he hath of favour and mercy not granted.

Hooker.

They dy'd
Impenitent, and left a race behind

Like to themselves.

Milton.

When the reward of penitents, and punishment of impenitents, is once assented to as true, 'tis impossible but the mind of man should wish for the one, and have dislikes to the other.

Hammond.

IMPE'NITENTLY. adv. [from impenitent.] Obdurately; without repentance.

The condition required of us is a constellation of all the gospel graces, every one of them rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully, and impenitently lived and died in.

Hammond.

What crowds of these impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,

Still run on poets!

Pope.

IMPE'NNOUS. adj. [in and penna, Lat.]

Wanting wings. This word is convenient, but, I think, not used.

It is generally received an earwig hath no wings, and is reckoned amongst impenious insects; but he that shall, with a needle, put aside the short and sheathy cases on their back, may draw forth two wings, larger than in many flies. Brown.

IMPERATE. adj. [imperatus, Lat.] Done with consciousness; done by direction of the mind.

The elicit internal acts of any habit may be quick and vigorous, when the external imperate acts of the same habit utterly cease. South.

Those natural and involuntary actions are not done by deliberation, yet they are done by the energy of the soul and instrumentality of the spirits, as well as those imperate acts, wherein we see the empire of the soul. Hale.

IMPERATIVE. adj. [imperatif, Fr. imperativus, Lat.] Commanding; expressive of command.

The verb is formed in a different manner, to signify the intention of commanding, forbidding, allowing, disallowing, intreating; which likewise, from the principal use of it, is called the imperative mood. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

IMPERATIVELY. adv. In a commanding style; authoritatively.

IMPERCEPTIBLE. adj. [imperceptible, Fr. in and perceptible.] Not to be discovered; not to be perceived; small; subtle; quick or slow, so as to elude observation.

Some things are in their nature imperceptible by our sense; yea, and the more refined parts of material existence, which, by reason of their subtilty, escape our perception. Hale.

In the sudden changes of his subject with almost imperceptible connections, the Theban poet is his master. Dryden.

The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling flames, of the gliding of a snake upon the ground: they must be almost imperceptible to the touch, and even. Dryden.

The alterations in the globe are very slight, and almost imperceptible, and such as tend to the benefit of the earth. Wood.

IMPERCEPTIBLENESS. n. f. [from imperceptible.] The quality of eluding observation.

Many excellent things there are in nature, which, by reason of their subtilty and imperceptibility to us, are not so much as within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.

IMPERCEPTIBLY. adv. [from imperceptible.] In a manner not to be perceived.

Upon reading of a fable we are made to believe we advise ourselves: the moral insinuates itself imperceptibly, we are taught by surprise, and become wiser and better unawares. Addison.

IMPERFECT. adj. [imparfait, Fr. imperfectus, Lat.]

1. Not complete; not absolutely finished; defective. Used either of persons or things.

Something he left imperfect in the state, Which, since his coming forth, is thought of, Which brought the kingdom so much fear and danger,

That his return was most required. Shakspeare

Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination; but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. Ben Jonson.

The middle action, which produceth imperfect bodies, is fitly called, by some of the ancients, inquisition or concoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.

The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of meteors, by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks. Brown.

Divers things we agree to be knowledge, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure. Boyle.

A marcor is either imperfect, tending to a greater withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an intire wasting of the body, excluding all cure. Harvey on Consumptions.

The still-born sounds upon the palate hung, And dy'd imperfect on the salt ring tongue. Dryden.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men. Locke.

2. Frail; not completely good: as, our best worship is imperfect.

IMPERFECTION. n. f. [imperfectio, Fr. from imperfect.] Defect; failure; fault, whether physical or moral; whether of persons or things.

Laws, as all other things human, are many times full of imperfectio; and that which is supposed behoveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker.

The duke had taken to wife Anne Stanhope, a woman for many *imperfectio*s intolerable; but for pride monstrous. Hayward.

*Imperfectio*s would not be half so much taken notice of, if vanity did not make proclamation of them. L'Estrange.

The world is more apt to censure than applaud, and himself fuller of *imperfectio*s than virtues. Addison's Spectator.

These are rather to be imputed to the simplicity of the age than to any imperfectio in that divine poet. Addison.

IMPERFECTLY. adv. [from imperfect.] Not completely; not fully; not without failure.

Should sinking nations summon you away, Maria's love might justify your stay: Imperfectly the many vows are paid, Which for your safety to the gods were made. Stepney.

Those would hardly understand language or reason to any tolerable degree; but only a little and imperfectly about things familiar. Locke.

IMPERFORABLE. adj. [in and perforo, Lat.] Not to be bored through.

IMPERFORATE. adj. [in and perforatus, Latin.] Not pierced through; without a hole.

He is an imperious dictator of the principles of vice, and impatient of all contradiction. More's Divine Dialogues.

How much I suffer'd, and how long I strove Against th' assaults of this imperious love! Dryden. Recollect what disorder haughty or imperious words from parents or teachers have caused in his thoughts. Locke.

2. Powerful; ascendant; overbearing.

A man, by a vast and imperious mind, and a heart large as the sand upon the sea shore, could command all the knowledge of nature and art. Tillotson.

IMPERIOUSLY. adv. [from imperious.] With arrogance of command; with insolence of authority.

Who's there, that knocketh so imperiously? Shakspeare.

Who can abide, that, against their own doctors, six whole books should, by their fatherhoods of Trent, be under pain of a curse, imperiously obtruded upon God and his church? Hall.

It is not to insult and domineer, to look disdainfully, and revile imperiously, that procures an esteem from any one. South.

The sage, transported at th' approaching hour, Imperiously thrice thunder'd on the floor! Garrick.

IMPERIOUSNESS. n. f. [from imperious.]

1. Authority; air of command.

So would he use his imperiousness, that we had a delightful fear and awe, which made us loth to lose our hopes. Sidney.

2. Arrogance of command.

Imperiousness and severity is but an ill way of treating men, who have reason of their own to guide them. Locke.

IMPERISHABLE. adj. [imperissable, Fr. in and perish.] Not to be destroyed.

We find this our empyreal form Incapable of mortal injury, Imperishable; and though pierc'd with wound, Soon closing, and by native vigour heal'd. Milt.

IMPERSONAL. adj. [impersonel, Fr. impersonalis, Lat.] Not varied according to the persons.

Impersonals be declined throughout all moods and tenses; a verb impersonal hath no nominative case before it. Accidence.

IMPERSONALLY. adv. [from impersonal.] According to the manner of an impersonal verb.

IMPERSONABLE. adj. [in and persuasibilis, Lat.] Not to be moved by persuasion.

Every pious person ought to be a Noah, a preacher of righteousness; and if it be his fortune to have as impersuasive an auditory, if he cannot avert the deluge, it will yet deliver his own soul, if he cannot benefit other men's. Decay of Piety.

IMPERTINENCE. } n. f. [impertinence, Fr. impertinency.] } from impertinent.

1. That which is of no present weight; that which has no relation to the matter in hand.

Some, though they lead a single life, yet their thoughts do end with themselves, and account future times impertinencies. Bacon.

2. Folly; rambling thought.

O, matter and impertinency mixt, Reason and madness! Shaksp. King Lear.

3. Troublesomeness; intrusion.

It will be said I handle an art no way suitable to my employments or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency. Wotton.

We should avoid the vexation and impertinence of pedants, who affect to talk in a language not to be understood. Swift.

4. Trifle; thing of no value.

I envy your felicity, delivered from the gilded impertinencies of life, to enjoy the moments of a solid contentment. Evelyn.

Nothing is more easy than to represent as im- pertinencies any parts of learning, that have no immediate relation to the happiness or convenience of mankind. Addison.

There are many subtle impertinencies learnt in the schools, and many painful trifles, even among the mathematical theorems and problems.
Watts on the Mind.

IMPERTINENT. adj. [impertinent, Fr. in and pertinens, Latin.]1. Of no relation to the matter in hand; of no weight.

officious impertinent. L'Estrange.

IMPERTINENTLY. adv. [from imperti- nent.]

1. Without relation to the present matter.

2. Troublesomely; officiously; intrusively.

I have had joy given me as preposterously, and as impertinently, as they give it to men who marry where they do not love. Suckling.

The blessedness of mortals, now the highest faint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so impertinently importuned, that great part of the liturgy was addressed solely to her. Hooker.

Why will any man be so impertinently officious as to tell me all this is only fancy? If it is a dream, let me enjoy it. Addison.

IMPERTRANSABILITY. n. f. [in and per- trans, Lat.] Impossibility to be passed through.

I willingly declined those many ingenious reasons given by others; as of the *impe*tr<sup>ans</sup>ability of eternity, and impossibility therein to attain to the present limit of antecedent ages. Hale.

IMPERVIOUS. adj. [impervius, Lat.]

1. Unpassable; impenetrable.

Let the difficulty of passing back stay his return, perhaps, over this gulf
Impassable, impervious; let us try
To found a path from hell to that new world.
Milton.

We may thence discern of how close a texture glass is, since so very thin a film proved so impervious to the air, that it was forced to break the glass to free itself. Boyle.

The cause of reflection is not the impinging
of light on the solid or impervious parts of bodies.
Newton's Opticks.

A great many vessels are, in this state, imper- vious by the fluids. Atbutnot.

impetratio, from impetro, Lat.] The act of obtaining by prayer or intreaty.
Not much used.

The blessed sacrament is the mystery of the death of Christ, and the application of his blood, which was shed for the remission of sins, and is the great means of impetration, and the meritorious cause of it. Taylor.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful liturgy, and means of impetration in this world. Taylor.

IMPETUOSITY. n. f. [impetuosité, Fr. from impetuous.] Violence; fury; vehemence; force.

I will set upon Aguecheek a notable report of valour, and drive the gentleman into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury, and impe- tuosity. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

The whole intrigue was contrived by the duke, and so violently pursued by his spirit and impe- tuosity. Clarendon.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to take their freest range, and act with the utmost impetuosity
Decay of Piety.

IMPETUOUS. adj. [impetueux, Fr. from impetus, Latin.]

1. Violent; forcible; fierce.

Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood,
Rolling its course, design'd their country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed
From the low earth tore some polluted weed.
Prior.

2. Vehement of mind; passionate.

The king, 'tis true, is noble, but impetuous.
Rowe.

IMPETUOUSLY. adv. [from impetuous.]

While froth and foam the fretting surface hides.
Addison.

IMPETUOUSNESS. n. f. [from impetuous.]
Violence; fury; vehemence of passion.

I wish all words of rage might vanish in that breath that utters them; that as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuousness, so they might in transiency. Decay of Piety.

IMPETUS. n. f. [Latin.] Violent tendency to any point; violent effort.

Why did not they continue their descent 'till they were contiguous to the sun, whither both mutual attraction and impetus carried them?
Bentley's Sermons.

IMPIERCABLE. adj. [in and pierce.] Impenetrable; not to be pierced.

Exceeding rage inflam'd the furious beast;
For never felt his impierceable breast
So wond'rous force from hand of living wight.
Spenser.

IMPIETY. n. f. [impiété, French; impietas, Latin.]1. Irreverence to the Supreme Being;
contempt of the duties of religion.

To keep that oath were more impiety
Than Jephtha's, when he sacrific'd his daughter.
Shakspere.

2. An act of wickedness; expression of irreligion. In this sense it has a plural.

If they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of those impieties for which they are now visited. Shakspere.

Can Juno such impieties approve? Denham.

We have a melancholy prospect of the state of our religion: such amazing impieties can be equalled by nothing but by those cities consumed of old by fire. Swift.

Latin.] To pawn; to pledge.IMPIGNORATION. n. f. [from impignorare.]
The act of pawning or putting to pledge.To IMPINGE. v. n. [impingo, Latin.]
To fall against; to strike against; to clash with.

Things are reserved in the memory by some corporeal exuvia and material images, which, having impinged on the common sense, rebound thence into some vacant cells of the brain. Glan.

The cause of reflection is not the impinging
of light on the solid or impervious parts of bodies. Newton's Opticks.

To IMPINGUATE. v. a. [in and pinguis,
Latin.] To fatten; to make fat.

Frictions also do more fill and impinguate the body than exercise; for that in frictions the inward parts are at rest. Bacon.

IMPIOUS. adj. [impius, Latin.] Irreligious; wicked; profane; without reverence of religion.

That scripture standeth not the church of God in any stead to direct, but may be let pass as needless to be consulted with, we judge it profane, impious, and irreligious to think. Hooker.

Cease then this impious rage. Milton.

Then lewd Auchemolus he laid in dust,
Who stain'd his stepdame's bed with impious lust.
Dryden.

And impious nations fear'd eternal night.
Dryden.

Shame and reproach is generally the portion of the impious and irreligious. South.

When vice prevails, and impious men beat sway,

The post of honour is a private station. Addison.

Since after thee may rise an impious line,
Coarse manglers of the human face divine;

Paint on, 'till fate dissolve thy mortal part,
And live and die the monarch of thy art. Tickel.

They, impious, dar'd to prey
On herds devoted to the god of day. Pope.

Grand mistakes in religion proceed from taking literally what was meant figuratively, from which several impious absurdities followed, terminating in infidelity. Forbes.

IMPIOUSLY. adv. [from impious.] Pro-fanely; wickedly.

The Roman wit, who impiously divides
His hero and his gods to different sides,
I would condemn. Granville.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw one of these in his time; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peacham.

IMPUGNER. n. f. [from impugn.] One that attacks or invades.

IMPUSSANCE. n. f. [French.] Impotence; inability; weakness; feebleness.

As he would not trust Ferdinand and Maximilian for supports of war, so the impussance of the one, and the double proceeding of the other, lay fair for him for occasions to accept of peace. Bacon's Henry VII.

IMPULSE. n. f. [impulsus, Latin.]

1. Communicated force; the effect of one body acting upon another.

If these little impulses set the great wheels of devotion on work, the largeness and height of that shall not at all be prejudiced by the smallness of its occasion. South.

Bodies produce ideas in us manifestly by impulse. Locke.

Bodies, from the impulse of a fluid, can only gravitate in proportion to their surfaces, and not according to their quantity of matter, which is contrary to experience. Cheyne.

2. Influence acting upon the mind; motive; idea impressed.

Meantime, by Jove's impulse, Mezentius arm'd, Succeeded Turnus. Dryden.

These were my natural impulses for the undertaking; but there was an accidental motive, which was full as forcible. Dryden.

Moses saw the bush burn without being consumed, and heard a voice out of it: this was something, besides finding an impulse upon his mind to go to Pharaoh; that he might bring his brethren out of Egypt. Locke.

3. Hostile impression.

Like two great rocks against the raging tide,
Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide,
Sustain th' impulse, and receive the war. Prior.

IMPULSION. n. f. [impulsion, French; impulsus, Latin.]

1. The agency of body in motion upon body.

The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without sound; for that sound that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulsion of the air. Bacon's Natural History.

To the impulsion there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.

But thou didst plead
Divine impulsion, prompting how thou might'st Find some occasion to infect our foes. Milton.

IMPULSIVE. adj. [impulsif, French; from impulse.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellent.

Nature and duty bind him to obedience:
But those being placed in a lower sphere,
His fierce ambition, like the highest mover,
Has hurried with a strong impulsive motion Against their proper course. Denham's Sophy.

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is perfectly free grace. South.

Poor men! poor papers! we and they Do some impulsive force obey,
And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.

IMPUNITY. n. f. [impunité, French; impunitas, Latin.] Freedom from punishment; exemption from punishment.

In the condition of subjects they will gladly continue, as long as they may be protected and justly governed, without oppression on the one side, or impunity on the other. Davies.

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar will never believe, that there is a crime where they see no penalty. Addison.

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their ill-gotten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themselves or dependents. Atterbury.

IMPURE. adj. [impur, French; impurus, Latin.]

1. Defiled with guilt; unholy: of men.

No more can impure man retain and move
In that pure region of a worthy love,
Than earthly substance can unforc'd aspire,
And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.

2. Contrary to sanctity; unhallowed; unholy: of things.

Hypocrites austere talk,
Condemning as impure what God has made Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton.

3. Unchaste.

If black scandal, or foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meek enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shakspeare.

One could not devise a more proper hell for an impure spirit, than that which Plato has touched upon. Addison.

4. Feculent; foul with extraneous mixtures; drossy.

IMPURELY. adv. [from impure.] With impurity.

In this wild action. Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida.

If a son that is sent by his father about merchandise, do fall into some lewd action, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father. Shakspeare.

To use intelllections and volitions in the infinite essence, as hypotheses, is allowable; but a rigorous imputation is derogatory to him, and arrogant in us. Glanville's Sceptis.

I have formerly said that I could distinguish your writings from those of any others: 'tis now time to clear myself from any imputation of self-conceit on that subject. Dryden.

2. Sometimes of good.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakspeare.

3. Censure; reproach.

Whatsoever happens they also the least feel that scourge of vulgar imputation, which notwithstanding they deserve. Hooker.

Let us be careful to guard ourselves against these groundless imputations of our enemies, and to rise above them. Addison.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. Swift.

4. Hint; slight notice.

—Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?
—No, no; my meaning is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shakspeare.

IMPUTATIVE. adj. [from impute.] That may impute.

TO IMPUTE. v. a. [imputer, French; imputo, Latin.]

1. To charge upon; to attribute: generally ill; sometimes good.

It was imputed to him for righteousness. Rom.
Men in their innovations should follow the example of time, which innovateth but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived; for otherwise whatsoever is new and unlooked for, ever mends some, and impairs others; and he that is holpen takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt for a wrong, imputeth it to the author. Bacon's Essays.

I made it by your persuasion, to satisfy those who imputed it to folly. Temple.

Impute your dangers to our ignorance. Dryden.
This obscurity cannot be imputed to want of language in so great a master of stile. Locke.

I have read a book imputed to lord Bathurst, called a dissertation on parties. Swift.

2. To reckon to one what does not properly belong to him.

Thy merit
Imputed shall absolve them who renounce Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds. Milton.

IMPUTER. n. f. [from impute.] He that imputes.

IN. prep. [in, Latin.]

1. Noting the place where any thing is present; not without.

In school of love are all things taught we see;
There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guise. Fairfax.

Is this place here not sufficient strong
To guard us in? Daniel's Civil War.

2. Noting the state or thing present at any time.

The other is only by error and misconception named the ordinance of Jesus Christ: no one proof is yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in very deed. Hooker.

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes. Shakspeare.

Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confederates, are in arms. Shakspeare.

Danger before, and in, and after the act,
You needs must grant is great. Daniel.

However it be in knowledge, I may truly say it is of no use at all in probabilities; for the assent there, being to be determined by the preponderancy, after a due weighing of all the proofs on both sides, nothing is so unfit to assist the mind in that as syllogism. Locke.

God hath made our eternal and temporal interests, in most cases, very consistent. Smalridge.
None was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those whom they had most abused. Dunciad.

3. Noting the time.

When we would consider eternity a parte ante, what do we but, beginning from ourselves and the present time we are in, repeat in our minds the ideas of years or ages past? Locke.

4. Noting power.

To feed men's souls, quoth he, is not in man. Hubbard's Tale.

5. Noting proportion.

Let usury in general be reduced to five in the hundred, and let that rate be proclaimed to be free and current. Bacon.

I cannot but lament the common course, which, at least, nine in ten of those who enter into the ministry are obliged to enter. Swift.

6. According to.

In all likelihood I brought all my limbs out of the bed, which, 'tis probable, he has not done off the breach. Collier.

7. Concerning.

I only consider what he, who is allowed to have carried this argument farthest, has said in it. Locke.

8. For the fake. A solemn phrase.

Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat does this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great? Shakspeare.

In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him our city. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Now, in the name of honour, fir, I beg you
That I may see your father's death reveng'd.
Dryden.

9. Noting cause.

King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shak.

10. In that. Because.

Some things they do in that they are men; in that they are wise men, and christian men, some things; some things in that they are men misled, and blinded with error. Hooker.

He cannot brook such disgrace well, as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search. Shakspeare.

11. In as much. Since; seeing that.

Those things are done voluntarily by us, which other creatures do naturally, in as much as we might stay our doing of them if we would.
Hooker.

In. adv.

1. Within some place; not out.

How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable person; especially if he be arrived at that consummate and robust degree of falseness as to play in and out, and show tricks with oaths, the sacred bonds which the conscience of man can be bound with. South.

I fear me, you'll be in 'till then. Shakspeare.

2. Engaged to any affair.

We know the worst can come; 'tis thought upon:

We cannot shift being in, we must go on. Dan.

These pragmatical flies value themselves for being in at every thing, and are found at last to be just good for nothing. L'Estrange.

3. Placed in some state.

Poor rogues talk of court news,
Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's out.
Shakspeare

Must never patriot then declaim at gin,
Unless, good man, he has been fairly in? Pope.

4. Noting immediate entrance.

Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.
Shakspeare.

He's too big to go in there: what shall I do?
—Let me see't; I'll in, I'll in: follow your friend's advice.

I'll in. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

5. Into any place.

Next fill the hole with its own earth again,
And trample with thy feet, and tread it in.
Dryden.

Is it not more eligible to come in with a smooth gale, than to be tossed at sea with a storm?
Collier.

In the said cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve, larger than could be introduced in at those holes. Woodward.

6. Close; home.

The posture of left-handed fencers is so different from that of the right-handed, that you run upon their swords if you push forward; and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Tatler.

7. In has commonly in composition a negative or privative sense, as in the Latin: so, active denotes that which acts, inactive that which does not act. In before
r is changed into r; as irregular: before l into l; as illative: and into m before some other consonants; as improbable.

INABILITY. n. f. [in and ability.] Im-puissance; impotence; want of power.

If no natural nor casual inability cross their desires, they always delighting to injure themselves.

with actions most beneficial to others, cannot but gather great experience, and through experience
the more wisdom. Hooker.

Neither ignorance nor inability can be pretended; and what plea can we offer to divine justice to prevent condemnation? Rogers.

INABSTINENCE. n. f. [in and abstinence.]
Intemperance; want of power to abstain; prevalence of appetite.

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear, that thou may'st know
What misery the inabstinence of Eve Shall bring on man. Milton.

INACCESSIBLE. adj. [inaccessible, French;
in and accessible.] Not to be reached;
not to be approached.

Whate'er you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time.
Shakspeare.

Many other hidden parts of nature, even of a far lower form, are inaccessible to us. Hale.

There shall we see the ends and uses of these things, which here were either too subtle for us to penetrate, or too remote and inaccessible for us to come to any distant view of. Ray.

This part, which is so noble, is not altogether inaccessible; and that an easy way may be found to it, 'tis to consider nature and to copy
her. Dryden.

INACCURACY. n. f. [from inaccurate.]
Want of exactness.

INACCURATE. adj. [in and accurate.]
Not exact; not accurate. It is used sometimes of persons, but more frequently of performances.

INACTION. n. f. [inaction, French; in and action.] Cessation from labour; forbearance of labour.

The times and amusements past are not more like a dream to me, than those which are present: I lie in a refreshing kind of inaction. Pope.

INACTIVE. adj. [in and active.] Not busy; not diligent; idle; indolent;
sluggish.

INACTIVELY. adv. [from inactive.] Idly; without labour; without motion; sluggishly.

In seasons of perfect freedom, mark how your son spends his time; whether he inactively loiters it away, when left to his own inclination
Locke.

INACTIVITY. n. f. [in and activity.] Idleness; rest; sluggishness.

A doctrine which manifestly tends to discourage the endeavours of men, to introduce a lazy inactivity, and neglect of the ordinary means of grace. Rogers.

Virtue, conceal'd within our breast,
Is inactivity at best. Swift.

INADEQUATE. adj. [in and adequatus, Latin.] Not equal to the purpose;
defective; falling below the due proportion.

Remorse for vice
Not paid, or paid inadequate in price,
What farther means can reason now direct?
Dryden.

Inadequate ideas are such, which are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes to which they are referred. Locke.

INADEQUATELY. adv. [from inadequate.]
Defectively; not completely.

These pores they may either exactly fill, or but inadequately. Boyle.

INADVERTENCE. } n. f. [inadvertance, INADVERTENCY. } French; from in-advertent.]

1. Carelessness; negligence; inattention.

There is a difference between them, as between inadvertency and deliberation, between surprise and set purpose. South.

From an habitual heedless inadvertency, men are so intent upon the present that they mind nothing else. L'Estrange.

2. Act or effect of negligence.

Many persons have lain under great and heavy scandals, which have taken their first rise only from some inadvertence or indiscretion.

Government of the Tongue.

The productions of a great genius, with many lapses and inadvertencies, are infinitely preferable to the works of an inferior kind of author, which are scrupulously exact. Addison.

INADVERTENT. adj. [in and advertens, Latin.] Negligent; careless.

To INA'RCH. v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmines, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

of his happiness. Norris.

In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions, whether it be that some of the incident rays are refracted more and others less constantly, or one and the same ray is by refraction disturbed. Newton's Opticks.

The permanent whiteness argues, that in like incidences of the rays there is no such separation of the emerging rays. Newton.

2. [incidens, Latin.] Accident; hap;
casualty.

What incidency thou do'st guess of harm-declare,

Is creeping towards me. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

INCIDENT. adj. [incident, Fr. incidens, Latin.]

1. Casual; fortuitous; occasional; happening accidentally; issuing in beside the main design; happening beside expectation.

As the ordinary course of common affairs is disposed of by general laws, so likewise men's rarer incident necessities and utilities should be with special equity considered. Becker.

I would note in children not only their articulate answers, but likewise smiles and frowns upon incident occasions. Wotton.

In a complex proposition the predicate or subject is sometimes made complex by the pronouns who, which, whose, whom, &c. which make another proposition: as, every man, who is pious, shall be saved: Julius, whose surname was Cæsar, overcame Pompey: bodies, which are transparent, have many pores. Here the whole proposition is called the primary or chief, and the additional proposition is called an incident proposition. Watts.

2. Happening; apt to happen.

Constancy is such a firmness of friendship as overlooks all those failures of kindness, that through passion, incident to human nature, a man may be guilty of. South.

INCIDENT. n. f. [incident, French; from the adjective.] Something happening beside the main design; casualty.

His wisdom will fall into it as an incident to the point of lawfulness. Bacon's Holy War.

No person, no incident in the play, but must be of use to carry on the main design. Dryden.

INCIDENTAL. adj. Incident; casual; happening by chance; not intended;
not deliberate; not necessary to the chief purpose.

The satisfaction you received from those inci- dental discourses which we have wandered into.
Milton.

By some religious duties scarce appear to be regarded at all, and by others only as an incident business, to be done when they have nothing else to do. Rogers.

INCIDENTALLY. adv. [from incident.]
Beside the main design; occasionally.

These general rules are but occasionally and in- cidentially mentioned in scripture, rather to manifest unto us a former, than to lay upon us a new obligation. Sanderson.

I treat either purposely or incidentally of colours. Boyle.

INCIDENTLY. adv. [from incident.] Occasionally; by the by; by the way.

It was incidently moved amongst the judges what should be done for the king himself, who was attainted; but resolved that the crown takes away defects. Bacon's Henry VII.

TO INCINERATE. v. a. [in and cineres, Latin.] To burn to ashes.

By baking, without melting, the heat indurateth, then maketh fragile; lastly, it doth inci- nerate and calcinate. Bacon.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly broken and in- cinerate. Bacon.

These dregs are soon incinerated and calcined into such salts which produce coughs. Harvey.

INCINERATION. n. f. [incineration, Fr. from incinerate.] The act of burning any thing to ashes.

I observed in the fixt salt of urine, brought by deuration to be very white, a taste not unlike common salt, and very differing from the caustick lixiviate taste of other salts made by in- cineration. Boyle.

INCIRCUMSPECTION. n. f. [in and cir- cumspection.] Want of caution; want of heed.

An unexpected way of delusion, whereby he more easily led away the incircumspection of their belief. Brown.

INCISED. adj. [inciser, French; incisus, Latin.] Cut; made by cutting: as,
an incised wound.

I brought the incised lips together. Wise man.

INCISION. n. f. [incision, Fr. incisio, Lat.]

1. A cut; a wound made with a sharp instrument. Generally used for wounds made by a surgeon.

Let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine.

God help thee, shallow man: God make incision in thee, thou art raw.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower.

A small incision knife is more handy than a larger for opening the bag.

2. Division of viscosities by medicines.

Absterfion is a scouring off, or incision of viscid humours, and making them fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as in nitrous water, which scoureth linen.

INCI'SIVE. adj. [incisif, Fr. from incisus, Lat.] Having the quality of cutting or dividing.

The colour of many corpuscles will cohere by being precipitated together, and be destroyed by the effusion of very piercing and incisive liquors.

INCI'SOR. n. f. [incisor, Latin.] Cutter; tooth in the forepart of the mouth.

INCI'SORY. adj. [incisoire, Fr.] Having the quality of cutting.

INCI'SURE. n. f. [incisura, Latin.] A cut; an aperture.

In some creatures it is wide, in some narrow, in some with a deep incisure up into the head, for the better catching and holding of prey, and comminuting of hard food.

INCITATION. n. f. [incitatio, Latin.] Incitement; incentive; motive; impulse; the act of inciting; the power of inciting.

Dr. Ridley defines magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity, an union of one magnetical body unto another.

The multitude of objects do proportionably multiply both the possibilities and incitations.

Government of the Tongue.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to act with the utmost impetuosity.

TO INCI'TE. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, Fr.] To stir up; to push forward in a purpose; to animate; to spur; to urge on.

How many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to? Shaksp.
No blown ambition doth our arms incite;
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans, comparing it to a fire, that took and spread from kingdom to kingdom.

Nature and common reason, in all difficulties, where prudence or courage are required, do rather incite us to fly for assistance to a single person than a multitude.

INCITEMENT. n. f. [from incite.] Motive; incentive; impulse; inciting cause.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, having such incitements to make him desirous of all furtherances unto his cause, could espy in the whole scripture of God nothing which might breed at the least a probable opinion of likelihood, that divine authority was the same way inclinable.

Hartlib seems sent hither by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great good to this island.

If thou must reform the stubborn times,
From the long records of distant age
Derive incitements to renew thy rage.

INCI'VIL. adj. [incivil, French.] Unpolished. See UNCIVIL.

INCIVILITY. n. f. [incivilité, French; in and civility.]

1. Want of courtesy; rudeness.

He does offend against that reverence which is due to the common apprehensions of mankind, whether true or not, which is the greatest incivility.

2. Act of rudeness. In this sense it has a plural.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, uncomely jests, loud talking, and jeering which, in civil account, are called indecencies and incivilities.

INCLE'MENCY. n. f. [inclemence, French; inclementia, Latin.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,
In heav'n's inclemency some ease we find:
Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left.

INCLE'MENT. adj. [in and clemens, Lat.] Unmerciful; un pitying; void of tenderness; harsh. It is used oftener of things than of men.

Teach us further by what means to shun
Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail and snow.

I stand
Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land:
Propitious to my wants, a vest supply,
To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky.

INCLI'NABLE. adj. [inclinabilis, Latin.] 1. Having a propension of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition: with to.

People are not always inclinable to the best.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable.

The gall and bitterness of certain men's writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less inclinable to that truth which he himself should have honoured.

Inclinable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye.

2. Having a tendency.

If such a crust naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinable to fall this thousand years than the last: but if the crust was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally.

INCLINA'TION. n. f. [inclinaiison, inclinatio, French; inclinatio, Latin.]

1. Tendency toward any point: with to.

The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclinatio to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclinatio of half a degree answering to the sun's diameter.

2. Natural aptness.

Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclinatio of the soil leans that way.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.

The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of or inclinatio to the marriage.

A mere inclinatio to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law?

4. Love; affection; regard. In this sense it admits for.

We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclinatio which princes have for painting.

5. Disposition of mind.

Report the features of Octavia, her years,
Her inclinatio.

6. The tendency of the magnetical needle to the east or west.

[In pharmacy.] The act by which a clear liquor is poured off from some feces or sediment by only stooping the vessel, which is also called decantation.

INCLI'NATORY. adj. [from incline.] Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

If that inclinatory virtue be destroyed by a touch from the contrary pole, that end which before was elevated will then decline.

INCLI'NATORILY. adv. [from inclinatory.] Obliquely; with inclination to one side or the other; with some deviation from north and south.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatoryly, or somewhat equinoctially, that is, toward the eastern or western points, they discover some verticity.

TO INCLI'NE. v. n. [inclino, Latin; inclinor, French.]

1. To bend; to lean; to tend toward any part: with to or toward.

Her house inclineth unto death, and her paths unto the dead.

Still to this place
My heart inclines, still hither turn my eyes;
Hither my feet unbidden find their way.

2. To be favourably disposed to; to feel desire beginning.

Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?
— He seems indifferent;
Or rather swaying more upon our part.

Their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech.

TO INCLI'NE. v. a.

1. To give a tendency or direction to any place or state.

The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumb'rous weight, inclines
Our eye-lids.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the baron fate inclines the field.

A tow'ring structure to the palace join'd;
To this his steps the thoughtful prince inclined.

2. To turn toward any thing, as desirous or attentive.

Incline our hearts to keep this law. Com. Pr.
You have not inclined your ear unto me.

But that from us aught should ascend to heav'n
So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,
Hard to belief may seem, yet this will prayer.

3. To bend; to incurvate.

With due respect my body I inclin'd,
As to some being of superior kind.

TO INCLI'P. v. a. [in and clip.] To grasp; to enclose; to surround.

Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,
Is thine, if thou wilt ha't.

TO INCLO'ISTER. v. a. [in and cloister.] To shut up in a cloister.

TO INCLO'UD. v. a. [in and cloud.] To darken; to obscure.

In their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be inclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour.

TO INCLU'DE. v. a. [include, Latin.]

1. To enclose; to shut in: as, the shell includes a pearl.

2. To comprise; to comprehend.

This desire being recommended to her majesty, it liked her to include the same within one intire leaf.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a whig or a tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included.

INCLUSIVE. adj. [inclusif, French.]

1. Enclosing; encircling.

O, would that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to sear me to the brain!

2. Comprehended in the sum or number: as, from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.

I'll search where ev'ry virtue dwells,
From courts inclusive down to cells.

INCLUSIVELY. adv. [from inclusive.]
'The thing mentioned reckoned into the account. See INCLUSIVE.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively.

All articulation is made within the mouth, from the throat to the lips inclusively; and is differenced partly by the organs used in it, and partly by the manner and degree of articulating.

INCOAGULABLE. adj. [in and coagulable.]
Incapable of concretion.

INCOEXISTENCE. n. f. [in and coexistence.]
The quality of not existing together; non-association of existence. An unusual word.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connection between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on.

INCOGNITO. adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognito, Latin.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog,
Depend upon it, he'll remain incog.

INCOGITANCY. n. f. [incogitantia, Lat.]
Want of thought.

One man's fancies are laws to succeders, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy presumption.

Next to the stupid and meekly vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration.

INCOGITATIVE. adj. [in and cogitative.]
Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our beards, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cogitative and incogitative beings.

INCOGNITO. adv. [incognitus, Latin.]
In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago
Since gods came down incognito.

INCOHERENCE. } n. f. [in and coherence.]
INCOHERENCY. }

1. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaister be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass.

2. Want of connexion; incongruity; inconsequence of argument; want of dependance of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms.

Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handfomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason.

INCOHERENT. adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Wanting cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as pervious as those of marl or gravel.

2. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependance of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being!

INCOHERENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.]
Inconsistently; inconsequentially.

The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally and incoherently.

INCOLUMITY. n. f. [incolumitas, Latin.]
Safety; security. Little in use.

The parliament is necessary to assert and preserve the national rights of a people, with the incolumity and welfare of a country.

INCOMBUSTIBILITY. n. f. [from incombustible.] The quality of resisting fire so that it cannot consume.

The stone in the Appennines is remarkable for its shining quality, and the amianthus for its incombustibility.

INCOMBUSTIBLE. adj. [incombustible, Fr. in and combustibile.] Not to be consumed by fire.

It agrees in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustible, and not consumable by fire.

INCOMBUSTIBLENESS. n. f. [from incombustible.] The quality of not being wasted by fire.

INCOME. n. f. [in and come.] Revenue; produce of any thing.

Thou who repinest at the plenty of thy neighbour, and the greatness of his incomes, consider what are frequently the dismal consequences of all this.

No fields afford
So large an income to the village lord.

St. Gaul has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no income but what arises from its trade: the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture.

Notwithstanding the large incomes annexed to some few of her preferments, this church hath in the whole little to subsist on.

INCOMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from incommensurable.] The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

INCOMMENSURABLE. adj. [French; from in, con, and mensurabilis, Latin.] Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incommensurable quantities, the infinite divisibility of matter, and eternal duration, will lead us to see the weakness of our nature.

INCOMMENSURATE. adj. [in, con, and mensura, Latin.] Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrate, which, to our apprehension, are incommensurate, are yet commensurable to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect.

As all other measures of time are reducible to these three; so we labour to reduce these three, though strictly of themselves incommensurate to one another, for civil use, measuring the greater by the less.

If the year comprehend days, it is but as any greater space of time may be said to comprehend a less, though the less space be incommensurate to the greater.

TO INCOMMULATE. } v. a. [incom-
TO INCOMMUTE. } modo, Latin;
incommuter, French.] To be inconvenient to; to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.

A goat, planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon; but rather than incommute ye, says he, I'll remove.

Although they sometimes molest and incommute the inhabitants, yet the agent, whereby both the one and the other is effected, is of that indispensable necessity to the earth and to mankind, that they could not subsist without it.

INCOMMODOUS. adj. [incommodus, Lat.] Inconvenient; vexatious without great mischief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience doth ever follow it? may by some accident be incommo-dious to a few.

Mens intentions in speaking are to be understood, without frequent explanations and incommo-dious interruptions.

INCOMMODOUSLY. adv. [from incommo-dious.] Inconveniently; not at ease.

INCOMMODOUSNESS. n. f. [from incommo-dious.] Inconvenience.

Diseases, disorders, and the incommodiousness of external nature, are inconsistent with happiness.

INCOMMODY. n. f. [incommodité, Fr. incommo-ditas, Latin.] Inconvenience; trouble.

Declare your opinion, what incommody you have conceived to be in the common law which I would have thought most free from all such dislike.

If iron can be incorporated with flint or stone, without over great charge, or other incommody, the cheapness doth make the compound stuff profitable.

By considering the region and the winds, one might so cast the rooms, which shall most need fire, that he should little fear the incommody of smok.

INCOMMUNICABILITY. n. f. [from incommunica-ble.] The quality of not being impartible.

INCOMMUNICABLE. adj. [incommunicable, French; in and communicable.]

1. Not impartible; not to be made the common right, property, or quality of more than one.

They cannot ask more than I can give, may I but reserve to myself the incommunicable jewel of my conscience.

Light without darkness is the incommunicable claim of him that dwells in light inaccessible.

It was agreed on both sides, that there was one supreme excellency, which was incommunicable to any creature.

2. Not to be expressed; not to be told.

Neither did he treat them with these peculiarities of favour in the extraordinary discoveries of the gospel only, but also of those incommunicable revelations of the divine love, in reference to their own personal interest in it. South.

INCOMMUNICABLY. adv. [from incommunicable.] In a manner not to be imparted or communicated.

To annihilate is both in reason, and by the consent of divines, as incommunicably the effect of a power divine, and above nature, as is creation itself. Hakewill on Providence.

INCOMMUNICATING. adj. [in and communicating.] Having no intercourse with each other.

The judgments and administrations of common justice are preserved from that confusion that would ensue, if the administration was by several incommunicating hands, or by provincial establishments. Hale's Common Law.

INCOMPACT. } adj. [in and compact.]

INCOMPACTED. } Not joined; not cohering.

Salt, say they, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended, but would remain incompact. Boyle.

INCOMPARABLE. adj. [incomparable, Fr. in and comparable.] Excellent above compare; excellent beyond all competition.

My heart would not suffer me to omit any occasion, whereby I might make the incomparable Pamela see how much extraordinary devotion I bore to her service. Sidney.

A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were To an untirable and continue goodness. Shaksp.

Her words do shew her wit incomparable. Shakspere's Henry VI.

Now this mask

Was cried incomparable, and th' ensuing night Made it a fool and beggar. Shakspere.

If I could leave this argument of your incomparable beauty, I might turn to one which would equally oppress me with its greatness. Dryden.

INCOMPARABLY. adv. [from incomparable.]

1. Beyond comparison; without competition.

A founder it had, whom I think incomparably the wisest man that ever the French church did enjoy, since the hour it enjoyed him. Hooker.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South.

2. Excellently; to the highest degree. A low phrase.

There are the heads of Antoninus Pius, the Faustinas, and Marcus Aurelius, all incomparably well cut. Addison on Italy.

INCOMPASSIONATE. adj. [in and compassionate.] Void of pity; void of tenderness.

INCOMPATIBILITY. n. f. [properly incompatibility; in and competo, Latin.] Inconsistency of one thing with another.

He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Wotton.

The reason of the stress rests not upon the incompatibility of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intention or extension; but the incompatibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLE. adj. [incompatible, Fr. rather incompetible, as it is sometimes written; in and competo, Latin.]

1. Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else: it is followed by with.

Fortune and love have ever been so incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Suckling.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompatible with the sincerity of the love of God? Hammond.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures. Bentley.

2. It is used sometimes with to.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLY. adv. [for incompatibly; from incompatible.] Inconsistently.

INCOMPETENCY. n. f. [incompetence, Fr. from incompetent.] Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shadow of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCOMPETENT. adj. [in and competent.]

Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretext, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon.

Every speck does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove, the grosser faults of others. Government of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it must be left to the opinion of the world, in spite of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryden.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Bentley.

INCOMPETENTLY. adv. [from incompetent.] Unsuitably; unduly.

INCOMPLETE. adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleaseth him in mercy to account himself incomplete, and maimed without us. Hooker.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others, especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INCOMPLETENESS. n. f. [from incomplete.] Imperfection; unfinished state.

The incompleteness of our seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but of an intire possession. Boyle.

INCOMPLIANCE. n. f. [in and compliance.]

1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictory temper.

Self-conceit produces peevishness and incompliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent. Tillotson.

2. Refusal of compliance.

Consider the vast disproportion between the worst inconveniencies that can attend our incom- pliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of an offended God. Rogers.

INCOMPOSED. adj. [in and composed.]

Disturbed; discomposed; disordered. Not much used.

Somewhat incomposed they are in their trimming, and extraordinary tender of their young ones. Howell.

IMPOSSIBILITY. n. f. [from impossible.] Quality of being not possible but by the negation or destruction of something; inconsistency with something.

The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same fitness in any modification. More.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude, yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from individuals already actually distinguished. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

INCOMPOSSIBLE. adj. [in, con, and possible.] Not possible together; not possible but by the negation of something else.

To sit upon eggs.

INCUBATION. n. f. [incubation, French;

incubatio, Latin.] The act of sitting upon eggs to hatch them.

Whether that vitality was by incubation, or how else, is only known to God. Raleigh.

Birds have eggs enough at first conceived in them to serve them, allowing such a proportion for every year, as will serve for one or two incu- bations. Ray on the Creation.

When the whole tribe of birds by incubation produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it in a more novercal way. Derham.

As the white of an egg by incubation, so can the serum by the action of the fibres be attenu-ated. Arbuthnot.

INCUBUS. n. f. [Latin; incube, French.]

The nightmare.

The incubus is an inflation of the membranes

These fines are only to be paid to the bishop, during his incumbency in the same see.

INCUMBENT. adj. [incumbens, Latin.]

1. Resting upon; lying upon.

Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air,
That felt unusual weight.

The ascending parcels of air, having now little more than the weight of the incumbent water to surmount, were able both so to expand themselves as to fill up that part of the pipe which they pervaded, and, by pressing every way against the sides of it, to lift upwards with them what water they found above them.

With wings expanded wide ourselves we'll rear,

And fly incumbent on the dusky air.

Here the rebel giants lye,

And, when to move th' incumbent load they try,

Ascending vapours on the day prevail.

Man is the destin'd prey of pestilence,

And o'er his guilty domes

She draws a close incumbent cloud of death.

2. Imposed as a duty.

All men, truly zealous, will perform those good works that are incumbent on all christians.

There is a double duty incumbent upon us in the exercise of our powers.

Thus, if we think and act, we shall shew ourselves duly mindful not only of the advantages we receive from thence, but of the obligations also which are incumbent upon us.

INCUMBENT. n. f. [incumbens, Lat.] He who is in present possession of a benefice.

In many places the whole ecclesiastical dues are in lay hands, and the incumbent lieth at the mercy of his patron.

To INCUMBER. v. a. [encombrer, French.]

My cause is call'd, and that long look'd-for day

Is still incumber'd with some new delay.

To INCUR. v. a. [incurro, Latin.]

1. To become liable to a punishment or reprehension.

I have incurred displeasure from inferiors for giving way to the faults of others.

They, not obeying,

Incurred, what could they less? the penalty;

And manifold in sin, deserv'd to fall.

So judge thou still, presumptuous! 'till the wrath,

Which thou incurrest by flying, meet thy flight

Sev'nfold, and scourge that wisdom back to hell.

They had a full persuasive that not to do it were to desert God, and consequently to incur damnation.

2. To occur; to press on the senses: with to or into.

The motions of the minute parts of bodies are invisible, and incur not to the eye; but yet they are to be apprehended by experience.

The mind of man, even in spirituals, acts with corporeal dependance; and so is he helped or hindered in its operations, according to the different quality of external objects that incur into the senses.

INCURABILITY. n. f. [incurabilité, Fr. from incurable.] Impossibility of cure; utter insusceptibility of remedy.

We'll instantly open a door to the manner of a proper and improper consumption, together with the reason of the incurability of the former, and facile cure of the other.

INCURABLE. adj. [incurable, Fr. in and curable.] Not admitting remedy; not to be removed by medicine; irremediable; hopeless.

Pause not; for the present time 's so sick,
That present medicine must be ministr'd,
Or overthrow incurable ensues.

Stop the rage betime,

Before the wound do grow incurable;

For being green, there is great hope of help.

A schirrus is not absolutely incurable, because it has been known that fresh pasture has cured it in cattle.

If idiots and lunatics cannot be found, incurables may be taken into the hospital.

INCURABLENESS. n. f. [from incurable.]

State of not admitting any cure.

INCURABLY. adv. [from incurable.] Without remedy.

We cannot know it is or is not, being incurably ignorant.

INCURIOS. adj. [in and curious.] Negligent; inattentive.

The Creator did not bestow so much skill upon his creatures, to be looked upon with a careless incurious eye.

He seldom at the Park appear'd;

Yet, not incurious, was inclin'd

To know the converse of mankind.

INCURSION. n. f. [from incurro, Latin.]

1. Attack; mischievous occurrence.

Sins of daily incurSION, and such as human frailty is unavoidably liable to.

Pondo is an indeclinable word, and when it is joined to numbers it signifies libra.

INDECOROUS. adj. [indecorus, Latin.]
Indecent; unbecoming.

What can be more indecorous than for a creature to violate the commands, and trample upon the authority, of that awful Excellence to whom he owes his life? Norris.

INDECORUM. n. s. [Latin.] Indecency; something unbecoming.

The soft address, the castigated grace,
Are indecorums in the modern maid. Young.

INDEED. adv. [in and deed.]

1. In reality; in truth; in verity.

Yet loving indeed, and therefore constant. Sidney.

Though such assemblies he had indeed for religion's sake, hurtful nevertheless they may prove, as well in regard of their fitness to serve the turn of hereticks and such as privily will venture to instil their poison into new minds. Hooker.

Some, who have not deserved judgment of death, have been for their goods sake caught up and carried straight to the bough: a thing indeed very pitiful and horrible. Spenser.

2. Above common rate. This use is emphatical.

Then did'st thou utter, I am yours for ever;
'Tis grace indeed. Shakspeare.

Borrows in mean affairs, his subjects' pains;
But things of weight and consequence indeed,
Himself doth in his chamber then debate. Dav.

Such sons of Abraham, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being Israelites indeed. South.

I were a beast, indeed, to do you wrong,
I who have lov'd and honour'd you so long. Dryden.

3. This is to be granted that. A particle of connexion.

This limitation, indeed, of our author will save those the labour who would look for Adam's heir amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery of one next heir amongst men. Locke.

Some sons indeed, some very few we see,
Who keep themselves from this infection free. Dryden.

There is nothing in the world more generally dreaded, and yet less to be feared than death: indeed, for those unhappy men whose hopes terminate in this life, no wonder if the prospect of another seems terrible and amazing. Wake.

4. It is used sometimes as a slight assertion or recapitulation in a sense hardly perceptible or explicable, and though some degree of obscure power is perceived, might, even where it is properly enough inserted, be omitted without miss.

I said I thought it was confederacy between the juggler and the two servants; tho' indeed I had no reason so to think. Bacon.

There is indeed no great pleasure in visiting these magazines of war, after one has seen two or three of them. Addison.

INDELICACY. n. s. [in and delicacy.]

Want of delicacy; want of elegant decency.

Your papers would be chargeable with worse than indelicacy, they would be immoral, did you treat detestable uncleanness as you rally an impertinent self-love. Addison.

INDELICATE. adj. [in and delicate.]

Wanting decency; void of a quick sense of decency.

INDEMNIFICATION. n. s. [from indemnify.]

1. Security against loss or penalty.

2. Reimbursement of loss or penalty.

TO INDEMNIFY. v. a. [in and damnify.]

1. To secure against loss or penalty.

2. To maintain unhurt.

Insolent signifies rude and haughty; indemnify, to keep safe. Watts.

INDEMNITY. n. s. [indemnité, French.]

Security from punishment; exemption from punishment.

I will use all means, in the ways of amnesty and indemnity, which may most fully remove all fears, and bury all jealousies in forgetfulness. King Charles.

TO INDENT. v. a. [in and dens, a tooth, Latin.] To mark any thing with inequalities like a row of teeth; to cut in and out; to make to wave or undulate.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakspeare's As you like it.

The serpent then, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton.

Trent, who, like some earth-born giant, spreads
His thirty arms along the indented meads. Milt.

The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented. Woodward.

TO INDE'NT. v. n. [from the method of cutting counterparts of a contract together, that, laid on each other, they may fit, and any want of conformity may discover a fraud.] To contract; to bargain; to make a compact.

Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves? Shakspeare.

He descends to the solemnity of a pact and covenant, and has indented with us. Decay of Piety.

INDE'NT. n. s. [from the verb.] Inequality; incisure; indentation. This is little used.

Trent shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shaksp.

INDENTATION. n. s. [in and dens, Lat.]

An indenture; waving in any figure.

The margins do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented; each indentation being continued in a small ridge, to the indentation that answers it on the opposite margin. Woodw.

INDENTURE. n. f. [from indent.] A covenant, so named because the counterparts are indented or cut one by the other; a contract, of which there is a counterpart.

In Hall's chronicle much good matter is quite marred with indenture English. Ascham.

The critick to his grief will find
 How firmly these indentures bind. Swift.

INDEPENDENCE. n. f. [independance, Fr.]
INDEPENDENCY. n. f. [in and dependence.]

Freedom; exemption from reliance or control; state over which none has power.

Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independency on matter. Addison.

Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,
 My bread and independency,
 So bought an annual rent or two,
 And liv'd just as you see I do. Pope.

INDEPENDENT. adj. [independant, French; in and dependent.]

1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from, before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a protestant republick, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addison.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superiour cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance: these alone do very easily guide us to the wise Author of all things. Bentley.

INDEPENDENT. n. f. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superiour authority.

We shall, in our sermons take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrell'd at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Sanderfon.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison's Spectator.

INDEPENDENTLY. adv. [from independent.] Without reference to other things.

Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing independently the one of the other. Dryden.

INDESERT. n. f. [in and desert.] Want of merit. This is an useful word, but not much received.

Those who were once looked on as his equals are apt to think the fame of his merit a reflection on their own indeserts. Addison.

INDESINENTLY. adv. [indefinenter, Fr. in and desinio, Lat.] Without cessation.

They continue a month indefinitely. Ray.

INDESTRUCTIBLE. adj. [in and destructible.] Not to be destroyed.

Glass is so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature. Boyle.

INDETERMINABLE. adj. [in and determinable.] Not to be fixed; not to be defined or settled.

There is not only obscurity in the end, but beginning of the world; that, as its period is inscrutable, so is its nativity indeterminable. Brown.

INDETERMINATE. adj. [indeterminé, Fr. in and determinate.] Unfixed; not defined; indefinite.

The rays of the same colour were by turns transmitted at one thickness, and reflected at another thickness, for an indeterminate number of successions. Newton's Opticks.

INDETERMINATELY. adv. [in and determinately.] Indefinitely; not in any settled manner.

His perspicacity discerned the loadstone to respect the north, when ours beheld it indeterminately. Brown.

The depth of the hold is indeterminately expressed in the description. Arbuthnot on Coins.

INDETERMINED. adj. [in and determined.] Unsettled; unfixed.

We should not amuse ourselves with floating words of indetermined signification, which we can use in several senses to serve a turn. Locke.

INDETERMINATION. n. f. [in and determination.] Want of determination; want of fixed or stated direction.

By contingents I understand all things which may be done, and may not be done, may happen, or may not happen, by reason of the indetermination or accidental concurrence of the causes. Bramhall against Hobbes.

INDEVOTION. n. f. [indevotion, French; in and devotion.] Want of devotion; irreligion.

Let us make the church the scene of our penitence, as of our faults; deprecate our former indevotion, and, by an exemplary reverence, redress the scandal of profaneness. Decay of Piety.

INDEVOUT. adj. [indevot, French; in and devout.] Not devout; not religious; irreligious.

He prays much; yet curses more; whilst he is meek, but indevout. Decay of Piety.

INDEX. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The discoverer; the pointer out.

Tastes are the indexes of the different qualities of plants, as well as of all sorts of aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where least of them resides. Decay of Piety.

2. The hand that points to any thing, as to the hour or way.

They have no more inward self-consciousness of what they do or suffer, than the index of a watch, of the hour it points to. Bentley.

3. The table of contents to a book.

In such indexes, although small To their subsequent volumes, there is seen The baby figure of the giant mass Of things to come, at large. Shakspeare.

If a book has no index or good table of contents, 'tis very useful to make one as you are reading it; and in your index to take notice only of parts new to you. Watts.

INDEXTERITY. n. f. [in and dexterity.] Want of dexterity; want of readiness; want of handiness; clumsiness; awkwardness.

The indexterity of our consumption cures demonstrates their dimness in beholding its causes. Harvey on Consumptions.

INDIAN Arrow-root. n. f. [marcanta, Latin.] A root.

A sovereign remedy for the bite of wasps, and the poison of the manchineel tree. This root the Indians apply to extract the venom of their arrows. Miller.

INDIAN Fig. n. f. [opuntia, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

INDIAN Red. n. f. Is a species of ochre; a very fine purple earth, and of a firm compact texture, and great weight. Hill on Fossils.

INDICANT. adj. [indicans, Lat.] Showing; pointing out; that directs what is to be done in any disease.

To INDICATE. v. a. [indico, Latin.]

1. To show; to point out.

2. [In physick.] To point out a remedy. See INDICATION.

INDICATION. n. f. [indication, French; indicatio, from indico, Latin.]

1. Mark; token; sign; note; symptom. The frequent stops they make in the most convenient places, are a plain indication of their weariness. Addison.

We think that our successes are a plain indication of the divine favour towards us. Atterbury.

2. [In physick.] Indication is of four kinds: vital, preservative, curative, and palliative; as it directs what is to be done to continue life, cutting off the cause of an approaching distemper, curing it while it is actually present, or lessening its effects, or taking off some of its symptoms before it can be wholly removed. Quincy.

The depravation of the instruments of mastication is a natural indication of a liquid diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Discovery made; intelligence given.

If a person that had a fair estate in reversion, should be assured by some skilful physician, that he would inevitably fall into a disease that would totally deprive him of his understanding and memory; if, I say, upon a certain belief of this indication, the man should appear overjoyed at the news, would not all that saw him conclude that the distemper had seized him? Bentley.

4. Explanation; display.

These be the things that govern nature principally, and without which you cannot make any true analysis, and indication of the proceedings of nature. Bacon's Natural History.

INDICATIVE. adj. [indicativus, Latin.]

1. Showing; informing; pointing out.

2. [In grammar.] A certain modification of a verb, expressing affirmation or indication.

The verb is formed in a certain manner to affirm, deny, or interrogate; which formation, from the principal use of it, is called the indicative mood. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

INDICATIVELY. adv. [from indicative.] In such a manner as shows or betokens.

These images, formed in the brain, are indicatively of the same species with those of sense. Grew.

To INDICT. See ENDITE, and its derivatives.

INDICTION. n. f. [indiction, French; indico, Latin.]

1. Declaration; proclamation.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation and indiction of a war, the war is left at large. Bacon.

2. [In chronology.] The indiction, instituted by Constantine the great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly disposed, for fifteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterward, in memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Mezentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, by which an entire freedom was given to christianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Constantine, ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which till that time had been done; but that, instead thereof, the indiction should be made use of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A.D. 313, Jan. 1.

INDIFFERENCE. } n. f. [indifference, Fr.
INDIFFERENCY. } [indifferentia, Lat.]

1. Neutrality; suspension; equipoise or freedom from motives on either side.

In choice of committees it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifferency by putting in those that are strong on both sides.

Bacon's Essays.

By an equal indifferency for all truth, I mean, not loving it as such, before we know it to be true.

Locke.

A perfect indifferency in the mind, not determinable by its last judgment, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifferency to act, or not to act, till determined by the will.

Locke.

Those who would borrow light from expositors, either consult only those who have the good luck to be thought found and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments; or else with indifferency look into the notes of all commentators.

Locke.

2. Impartiality.

Read the book with indifferency and judgment, and thou can't not but greatly commend it.

Whitgift.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedness.

Indifference cannot but be criminal, when it is conversant about objects which are so far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the highest importance.

Addison.

A place which we must pass through not only with the indifference of strangers, but with the vigilance of those who travel through the country of an enemy.

Rogers.

Indiff'rence, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt?

Swift.

He will let you know he has got a clap with as much indifferency as he would a piece of public news.

Swift.

The people of England should be frightened with the French king and the pretender once a year: the want of observing this necessary precept, has produced great indifference in the vulgar.

Arbuthnot.

4. State in which no moral or physical reason preponderates; state in which there is no difference.

The choice is left to our discretion, except a principal bond of some higher duty remove the indifference that such things have in themselves: their indiff'rence is removed, if we take away our own liberty.

Hooker.

INDIFFERENT. adj. [indifferent, Fr.
indifferens, Lat.]

1. Neutral; not determined on either side.

Doth his majesty

Incline to it or no?

—He seems indifferent.

Shakspeare.

Being indifferent, we should receive and embrace opinions according as evidence gives the attestation of truth.

Locke.

Let guilt or fear

Disturb man's rest; Cato knows neither of them:

Indifferent in his choice to sleep or die.

Addison.

2. Unconcerned; inattentive; regardless.

One thing was all to you, and your fondness made you indifferent to every thing else.

Temple.

It was a law of Solon, that any person who, in the civil commotions of the republick, remained neuter, or an indifferent spectator of the contending parties, should be condemned to perpetual banishment.

Addison's Freeholder.

But how indifferent soever man may be to eternal happiness, yet surely to eternal misery none can be indifferent.

Rogers.

3. Not to have such difference as that the one is for its own sake preferable to the other.

The nature of things indifferent is neither to be commanded nor forbidden, but left free and arbitrary.

Hooker.

Customs, which of themselves are indifferent in other kingdoms, became exceedingly evil in this realm, by reason of the inconveniencies which followed thereupon.

Davies.

Though at first it was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet, the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent.

South.

This I mention only as my conjecture, it being indifferent to the matter which way the learned shall determine.

Locke.

4. Impartial; disinterested.

Metcalf was partial to none, but indifferent to all; a master for the whole, and a father to every one.

Ascham.

I am a most poor woman and a stranger,

Born out of your dominions; having here

No judge indiff'rent, and no more assurance

Of equal-friendship and proceeding.

Shakspeare.

There can hardly be an indifferent trial had between the king and the subject, or between party and party, by reason of this general kindred and consanguinity.

Davies.

5. Passable; having mediocrity; of a middling state; neither good nor worst. This is an improper and colloquial use, especially when applied to persons.

Some things admit of mediocrity:

A counsellor, or pleader at the bar,

May want Messala's powerful eloquence,

Or be less read than deep Cassilius;

Yet this indiff'rent lawyer is esteem'd.

Roscom.

Who would excel, when few can make a test,
Betwixt indiff'rent writing and the best?

Dryden.

This has obliged me to publish an indifferent collection of poems, for fear of being thought the author of a worse.

Prior.

There is not one of these subjects that would not sell a very indifferent paper, could I think of gratifying the publick by such mean and base methods.

Addison.

6. In the same sense it has the force of an adverb.

I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better that my mother had not born me.

Shakspeare.

This will raise a great scum on it, and leave your wine indifferent clear.

Mortimer.

INDIFFERENTLY. adv. [indifferenter, Lat.]

1. Without distinction; without preference.

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them.

Newton's Opticks.

Were pardon extended indifferently to all, which of them would think himself under any particular obligation?

Addison.

Though a church-of-England-man thinks every species of government equally lawful, he does not think them equally expedient, or for every country indifferently.

Swift.

2. Equally; impartially.

They may truly and indifferently minister justice.

Common Prayer.

3. In a neutral state; without wish or aversion.

Set honour in one eye, and death i' th' other,
And I will look on death indifferently.

Shakspeare.

4. Not well; tolerably; passably; middlingly.

A moyle will draw indifferently well, and carry great burthens.

Carew.

I hope it may indifferently entertain your lordship at an unbending hour.

An hundred and fifty of their beds, sown together, kept me but very indifferently from the floor.

Gulliver's Travels.

INDIGENCE. } n. f. [indigence, Fr. indigence, Lat.] Want; penury; poverty.

Where there is happiness, there must not be indigency, or want of any due comforts of life:

Burnet's Theory.

For ev'n that indigence, that brings me low,
Makes me myself, and him above to know.

Dryden.

Athens worshipped God with temples and sacrifices, as if he needed habitation and sustenance; and that the heathens had such a mean apprehension about the indigency of their gods, appears from Aristophanes and Lucian.

Bentley.

INDIGENOUS. adj. [indigene, French; indigena, Latin.] Native to a country; originally produced or born in a region.

Negroes were all transported from Africa, and are not indigenous or proper natives of America.

Brown.

It is wonderful to observe one creature, that is, mankind, indigenous to so many different climates.

Arbuthnot.

INDIGENT. adj. [indigent, French; indigens, Latin.]

1. Poor; needy; necessitous.

Charity consists in relieving the indigent.

Add.

2. In want; wanting: with of.

Rejoice, O Albion, sever'd from the world,
By nature's wise indulgence; indigent
Of nothing from without.

Philips.

3. Void; empty.

Such bodies have the tangible parts indigent of moisture.

Bacon.

INDIGEST. } adj. [indigeste, Fr. indigestus, Latin.]

1. Not separated into distinct orders; not regularly disposed.

This mass, or indigested matter, or chaos, created in the beginning, was without the proper form, which it afterwards acquired.

Raleigh.

Before the seas, and this terrestrial ball,
One was the face of nature, if a face;
Rather a rude and undigested mass.

Dryden.

2. Not formed, or shaped. Indigest is not now in use.

Set a form upon that indigest project,
So shapeless and so rude.

Shakspeare.

Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump;
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape.

Shakspeare.

3. Not well considered and methodised.

By irksome deformities, through endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, they oftentimes disgrace the worthiest part of christian duty towards God.

Hooker.

The political creed of the high-principled men sets the protestant succession upon a firmer foundation than all the indigested schemes of those who profess revolution principles.

Swift.

4. Not concocted in the stomach.

Dreams are bred
From rising fumes of indigested food.

Dryden.

5. Not brought to suppuration.

His wound was indigested and inflamed.

Wiseeman.

INDIGESTIBLE. adj. [from in and digestible.] Not conquerable in the stomach; not convertible to nutriment.

Eggs are the most nourishing and exalted of all animal food, and most indigestible: no body can digest the same quantity of them as of other food.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

INDIGESTION. n. f. [indigestion, French; from in and digestion.]

1. A morbid weakness of the stomach; want of concoctive power.
2. The state of meats unconcocted.

The fumes of indigestion may indispose men to thought, as well as to diseases of danger and pain.

INDIGITATE. v. a. [indigito, Latin.] To point out; to show by the fingers.

Antiquity expressed numbers by the fingers: the depressing this finger, which in the left hand implied but six, in the right hand indigitated six hundred.

As though there were a femininity of urine, we foolishly conceive we behold therein the anatomy of every particle, and can thereby indigitate their affections.

We are not to indigitate the parts transmittent.

INDIGITATION. n. f. [from indigitate.] The act of pointing out or showing, as by the finger.

Which things I conceive no obscure indigitation of providence.

INDIGN. adj. [indigne, French; indignus, Latin.]

1. Unworthy; undeserving.

Where there is a kingdom that is altogether unable or indign to govern, is it just for another nation, that is civil or policed, to subdue them?

2. Bringing indignity; disgraceful. This is a word not in use.

And all indign and base adversities
Make head against my estimation.

INDIGNANT. adj. [indignans, Lat.] Angry; raging; inflamed at once with anger and disdain.

He scourg'd with many a stroke th' indignant waves.

The lustful monster fled, pursued by the valorous and indignant Martin.

What rage that hour did Albion's soul possess,
Let chiefs imagine, and let lovers guess!

He strides indignant, and with haughty cries
To single fight the fairy prince defies.

INDIGNATION. n. f. [indignation, Fr. indignatio, Lat.]

1. Anger mingled with contempt or disgust.

Suspend your indignation against my brother, till you derive better testimony of his intent.

From those officers, warm with indignation at the insolences of that vile rabble, came words of great contempt.

But keep this swelling indignation down,
And let your cooler reason now prevail.

2. The anger of a superiour.

There was great indignation against Israel.

3. The effect of anger.

If heav'ns have any grievous plague in store,
Let them hurl down their indignation
On thee, thou troubler of the world.

INDIGNITY. n. f. [indignitas, from indignus, Lat. indignité, Fr.] Contumely; contemptuous injury; violation of right accompanied with insult.

Bishops and prelates could not but have bleeding hearts to behold a person of so great place and worth constrained to endure so foul indignities.

No emotion of passion transported me, by the indignity of his carriage, to any thing unbecoming myself.

Man he made, and for him built Magnificent this world, and earth his seat,
Him lord pronounc'd; and, O indignity!
Subjected to his service angel-wings,
And flaming ministers, to watch and tend
Their earthly charge.

He does not see how that mighty passion for the church can well consist with those indignities and that contempt men bestow on the clergy.

To more exalted glories born,
Thy mean indignities I scorn.

INDIGO. n. f. [indicum, Lat.] A plant, by the Americans called anil. In the middle of the flower is the style, which afterward becomes a jointed pod, containing one cylindrical seed in one partition, from which indigo is made, which is used in dying for a blue colour.

INDIRECT. adj. [indirect, Fr. indirectus, Lat.]

1. Not straight; not rectilinear.
2. Not tending otherwise than obliquely or consequentially to a purpose: as, an indirect accusation.
3. Wrong; improper.

The tender prince
Would fain have come with me to meet your grace;

But by his mother was perforce withheld.
—Fy, what an indirect and peevish course
Is this of hers?

4. Not fair; not honest.

Think you, that any means under the sun
Can assure to indirect a course?

Those things which they do know they may,
upon sundry indirect considerations, let pass; and although themselves do not err, yet may they deceive others.

O pity and shame! that they who to live well
Enter'd so fair, should turn aside, to tread Paths indirect.

Indirect dealing will be discover'd one time or other, and then he loses his reputation.

INDIRECTION. n. f. [in and direction.]

1. Oblique means; tendency not in a straight line.

And thus do we, of wisdom and of reach,
With windlances, and with essays of byas,
By indirections find directions out.

2. Dishonest practice. Not used.

I had rather coin my heart than wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash,
By any indirection.

INDIRECTLY. adv. [from indirect.]

1. Not in a right line; obliquely.
2. Not in express terms.

Still she suppresses the name, which continues his doubts and hopes; and at last she indirectly mentions it.

3. Unfairly; not rightly.

He bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held
From him the true challenger.

He that takes any thing from his neighbour, which was justly forfeited, to satisfy his own revenge or avarice, is tied to repentance, but not to restitution: because I took the forfeiture indirectly, I am answerable to God for my unhand-some, unjust, or uncharitable circumstances.

INDIRECTNESS. n. f. [in and directness.]

1. Obliquity.
2. Unfairness; dishonesty; fraudulent art.

INDISCERNIBLE. adj. [in and discernible.] Not perceptible; not discoverable.

Speculation, which, to my dark soul,
Depriv'd of reason, is as indiscernible
As colours to my body, wanting sight.

INDISCERNIBLY. adv. [from indiscernible.] In a manner not to be perceived.

INDISCERTIBLE. adj. [in and discertible.] Not to be separated; incapable of being broken or destroyed by dissolution of parts.

INDISCERTIBILITY. n. f. [from indiscertible.] Incapability of dissolution.

INDISCREET. adj. [indiscret, Fr. in and discret.] Imprudent; incautious; inconsiderate; injudicious.

Why then
Are mortal men so fond and indiscreet,
So evil gold to seek unto their aid;
And having not complain, and having it upbraid?

If thou be among the indiscreet, observe the time; but be continually among men of understanding.

INDISCREETLY. adv. [from indiscreet.] Without prudence; without consideration; without judgment.

Job on justice hath aspersions flung,
And spoken indiscreetly with his tongue.

Let a great personage undertake an action passionately, let him manage it indiscreetly, and he shall have enough to flatter him.

INDISCRETION. n. f. [indiscretion, Fr. in and discretion.] Imprudence; rashness; inconsideration.

Indiscretion sometimes serves us well,
When our deep plots do fail.

His offences did proceed rather from negligence, rashness, or other indiscretion, than from any malicious thought.

Loose papers have been obtained from us by the importunity and divulged by the indiscretion of friends, although restrained by promises.

INDISCRIMINATE. adj. [indiscriminatus, Latin.] Undistinguishable; not marked with any note of distinction.

INDISCRIMINATELY. adv. [from indiscriminate.] Without distinction.

Others use defamatory discourse purely for love of talk: whose speech, like a flowing current, bears away indiscriminately whatever lies in its way.

Liquors, strong of acid salts, destroy the blueness of the infusion of our wood; and liquors indiscriminately, that abound with sulphureous salts, restore it.

INDISPENSABLE. adj. [French.] Not to be remitted; not to be spared; necessary.

Rocks, mountains, and caverns, against which these exceptions are made, are of indispensable use and necessity, as well to earth as to man.

INDISPENSABLENESS. n. f. [from indispensable.] State of not being to be spared; necessity.

INDISPENSABLY. adv. [from indispensable.] Without dispensation; without remission; necessarily.

Every one must look upon himself as indispensably obliged to the practice of duty.

INDISPOSE. v. a. [indisposer, Fr.]

1. To make unfit: with for.

Nothing can be reckoned good or bad to us in this life, any farther than it prepares or indisposes us for the enjoyments of another.

2. To disincline; to make averse: with to.

It has a strange efficacy to indispose the heart to religion.

3. To disorder; to disqualify for its proper functions.

The soul is not now hindered in its actions by the distemperature of indisposed organs. Glauco.

4. To disorder slightly with regard to health.

Though it weakened, yet it made him rather indisposed than sick, and did no ways disable him from studying. Walton.

5. To make unfavourable: with toward.

The king was sufficiently indisposed towards the persons or the principles of Calvin's disciples. Clarendon.

INDISPO'SEDNESS. n. f. [from indisposed.]

State of unfitness or disinclination; disordered state.

It is not any innate harshness in piety that renders the first essays of it unpleasant; that is owing only to the indisposedness of our own hearts. Decay of Piety.

INDISPOSITION. n. f. [indisposition, Fr. from indispose.]

1. Disorder of health; tendency to sickness; slight disease.

The king did complain of a continual infirmity of body, yet rather as an indisposition in health than any set sickness. Hayward.

I have known a great fleet lose great occasions, by an indisposition of the admiral, while he was neither well enough to exercise, nor ill enough to leave the command. Temple.

Wisdom is still looking forward, from the first indispositions into the progress of the disease. L'Estrange.

His life seems to have been prolonged beyond its natural term, under those indispositions which hung upon the latter part of it. Addison.

2. Disinclination; dislike: with to or toward.

The indisposition of the church of Rome to reform herself, must be no stay unto us from performing our duty to God. Hooker.

The mind, by every degree of affected unbelief, contracts more and more of a general indisposition towards believing. Atterbury.

INDISPUTABLE. adj. [in and disputable.]

Uncontrovertible; incontestable; evident; certain.

There is no maxim in politicks more indisputable, than that a nation should have many honours to reserve for those who do national services. Addison.

The apostle asserts a clear indisputable conclusion, which could admit of no question. Rogers.

INDISPUTABLENESS. n. f. [from indisputable.] The state of being indisputable; certainty; evidence.

INDISPUTABLY. adv. [from indisputable.]

1. Without controversy; certainly; evidently.

The thing itself is questionable, nor is it indisputably certain what death she died. Brown.

2. Without opposition.

They questioned a duty that had been indisputably granted to so many preceding kings. Howel's Vocal Forest.

INDISSOLVABLE. adj. [in and dissolvable.]

1. Indissoluble; not separable as to its parts.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissoluble in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newton.

2. Obligatory; not to be broken; binding for ever.

Deposition and degradation are without hope of any remission, and therefore the law styles them an indissoluble bond; but a censure, a dissolvable bond. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INDISSOLUBILITY. n. f. [indissolubilité, French; from indissoluble.]

1. Resistance to a dissolving power; firmness; stableness.

What hoops hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together from whence steel has its firmness, and the parts of a diamond their hardness and indissolubility? Locke.

2. Perpetuity of obligation.

INDISSOLUBLE. adj. [indissoluble, Fr. indissolubilis, Lat. in and dissolvable.]

1. Resisting all separation of its parts; firm; stable.

When common gold and lead are mingled, the lead may be severed almost unaltered; yet if, instead of the gold, a tantillum of the red elixir be mingled with the saturn, their union will be so indissoluble, that there is no possible way of separating the diffused elixir from the fixed lead. Boyle.

2. Binding for ever; subsisting for ever; not to be loosed.

Far more comfort it were for us, to be joined with you in bands of indissoluble love and amity, to live as if our persons being many, our souls were but one. Hooker.

There is the supreme and indissoluble consanguinity between men, of which the heathen poet faith we are all his generation. Bacon.

They might justly wonder, that men so taught, so obliged to be kind to all, should behave themselves so contrary to such heavenly instructions, such indissoluble obligations. South.

INDISSOLUBLENESS. n. f. [from indissoluble.] Indissolubility; resistance to separation of parts.

Adam, though consisting of a composition intrinsically dissolvable, might have held, by the divine will, a state of immortality and indissolubleness of his composition. Hale.

INDISSOLUBLY. adv. [from indissoluble.]

1. In a manner resisting all separation.

On they move
Indissolubly firm; nor obvious hill,
Nor straitning vale, nor wood, nor stream divide
Their perfect ranks. Milton.

The remaining ashes, by a further degree of fire, may be indissolubly united into glass. Boyle.

They willingly unite,
Indissolubly firm: from Dubris south
To northern Orcades. Philips.

2. For ever obligatorily.

INDISTINCT. adj. [indistinct, Fr. in and distinctus, Lat.]

1. Not plainly marked; confused.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought,
The rack dissimins, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water. Shakspeare.

She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note:
But indistinct, and neither sweet nor clear. Dryd.

When we speak of the infinite divisibility of matter, we keep a very clear and distinct idea of division and divisibility; but when we come to parts too small for our senses, our ideas of these little bodies become obscure and indistinct. Watts.

2. Not exactly discerning.

We throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Ev'n till we make the main and th' aerial blue
An indistinct regard. Shakspeare.

INDISTINCTION. n. f. [from indistinct.]

1. Confusion; uncertainty.

The indistinction of many of the same name, or the misapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt. Brown.

2. Omission of discrimination; indiscrimination.

An indistinction of all persons, or equality of all orders, is far from being agreeable to the will of God. Sprat.

INDISTINCTLY. adv. [from indistinct.]

1. Confusedly; uncertainly; without definiteness or discrimination.

In its sides it was bounded distinctly, but on its ends confusedly and indistinctly, the light there vanishing by degrees. Newton's Opticks.

2. Without being distinguished.

Making trial thereof, both the liquors soaked indistinctly through the bowl. Brown.

INDISTINCTNESS. n. f. [from indistinct.]

Confusion; uncertainty; obscurity.

There is unevenness or indistinctness in the style of these places, concerning the origin and form of the earth. Burnet's Theory.

Old age makes the cornea and coat of the crystalline humour grow flatter; so that the light, for want of sufficient refraction, will not converge to the bottom of the eye, but beyond it, and by consequence paint in the bottom of the eye a confused picture; and according to the indistinctness of this picture, the object will appear confused. Newton.

INDISTURBANCE. n. f. [in and disturb.]

Calmness; freedom from disturbance.

What is called by the stoicks apathy, and by the scepticks indisturbance, seems all but to mean great tranquillity of mind. Temple.

INDIVIDUAL. adj. [individu, individuel, French; individuus, Latin.]

1. Separate from others of the same species; single; numerically one.

Neither is it enough to consult, secundum genera, what the kind and character of the person should be; for the most judgment is shewn in the choice of individuals. Bacon.

They present us with images more perfect than the life in any individual. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Must the whole man, amazing thought! return
To the cold marble, or contracted urn!
And never shall those particles agree,
That were in life this individual he? Prior.

Know all the good that individuals find,
Lies in three words, health, peace, and competence. Pope.

We see each circumstance, of art and individual of nature summoned together by the extent and fecundity of his imagination. Pope.

It would be wise in them, as individual and private mortals, to look back a little upon the storms they have raised, as well as those they have escaped. Swift.

The object of any particular idea is called an individual: so Peter is an individual man, London is an individual city. Watts.

2. Undivided; not to be parted or disjoined.

To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life, to have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual solace dear. Milton.

Long eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss. Milton.

Under his great vicegerent reign abide United, as one individual soul,
For ever happy. Milton.

INDIVIDUALITY. n. f. [from individual.]

Separate or distinct existence.

He would tell his instructor, that all men were not singular: that individuality could hardly be predicated of any man; for it was commonly said, that a man is not the same he was, and that madmen are beside themselves. Arbuthnot.

INDIVIDUALLY. adv. [from individual.]

1. With separate or distinct existence: numerically.

How should that subsist solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it? Hooker.

2. Not separably; incommunicably.

I dare not pronounce him omniscious, that being an attribute individually proper to the godhead, and incommunicable to any created substance. Hakerwill on Providence.

To INDIVIDUATE. v. a. [from individuus, Lat.] To distinguish from others of the same species; to make single.

Life is individuated into infinite numbers, that have their distinct sense and pleasure. More.

No man is capable of translating poetry, who, besides a genius to that art, is not a master both of his author's language and of his own; nor must we understand the language only of the poet, but his particular turn of thoughts and expression, which are the characters that distinguish and individuate him from all other writers. Dryd.

INDIVIDUATION. n. f. [from individuare.] That which makes an individual. What is the principle of individuation? Or what is it that makes any one thing the same as it was before? Watts.

INDIVIDU'ITY. n. f. [from individuus, Latin.] The state of being an individual; separate existence.

INDIVINITY. n. f. [in and divinity.] Want of divine power. Not in use. How openly did the oracle betray his indivinity unto Cresus, who being ruined by his amphibology, and expostulating with him, received no higher answer than the excuse of his impotency? Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INDIVISIB'ILITY. } n. f. [from indivisibile.]
INDIVISIB'LENESS. } fible.] State in which no more division can be made.

A pebble and mortar will as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acute thought of a mathematician. Locke.

INDIVIS'BLE. adj. [indivisible, French; in and divisible.] What cannot be broken into parts; so small as that it cannot be smaller; having reached the last degree of divisibility.

By atom, no body will imagine we intend to express a perfect indivisible, but only the least sort of natural bodies. Digby.

Here is but one indivisible point of time observed, but one action performed; yet the eye cannot comprehend at once the whole object. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

INDIVIS'IBLY. adv. [from indivisible.] So as it cannot be divided.

INDOC'IBLE. adj. [in and docible.] Un-teachable; insusceptible of instruction.

INDOC'IL. adj. [indocile, French; indocilis, Latin.] Un-teachable; incapable of being instructed.

These certainly are the fools in the text, indocil, intractable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments, and is proof against demonstration itself. Bentley's Sermons.

INDOC'ILITY. n. f. [indocilité, Fr. in and docility.] Un-teachableness; refusal of instruction.

To INDOCTRINATE. v. a. [endoc-triner, old French.] To instruct; to tincture with any science, or opinion.

Under a master that discoursed excellently, and took much delight in indoctrinating his young unexperienced favourite, Buckingham had obtained a quick conception of speaking very gracefully and pertinently. Clarendon.

They that never peep beyond the common belief, in which their easy understandings were at first indoctrinated, are strongly assured of the truth of their receptions. Glanville.

INDOCTRINATION. n. f. [from indoctrinare.] Instruction; information.

Although postulates are very accommodable unto junior indoctrinations, yet are these authorities not to be embraced beyond the minority of our intellectuals. Brown.

INDOLENCE. } n. f. [in and doleo, Latin;
INDOLENCY. } indolence, French.]

1. Freedom from pain.

As there must be indolency where there is happiness, so there must not be indigency. Burnet.
I have ease, if it may not rather be called indolence. Hough.

2. Laziness; inattention; listlessness.

Let Epicurus give indolency as an attribute to his gods, and place it in the happiness of the blest: the Divinity which we worship has given us not only a precept against it, but his own example to the contrary. Dryden.

The Spanish nation, roused from their ancient indolence and ignorance, seem now to improve trade. Bolingbroke.

INDOLENT. adj. [French.]

1. Free from pain. So the surgeons speak of an indolent tumour.

2. Careless; lazy; inattentive; listless. Ill fits a chief
To waste long nights in indolent repose. Pope.

INDOLENTLY. adv. [from indolent.]

1. With freedom from pain.
2. Carelessly; lazily; inattentively; listlessly.

While lull'd by sound, and undisturb'd by wit,
Calm and serene you indolently sit. Addison.

To INDO'W. v. a. [indotare, Latin.] To portion; to enrich with gifts, whether of fortune or nature. See ENDOW.

INDRAUGHT. n. f. [in and draught.]

1. An opening in the land into which the sea flows.

Ebbs and floods there could be none, when there was no indraughts, bays, or gulphs to receive a flood. Raleigh.

2. Inlet; passage inward. Navigable rivers are indraughts to attain wealth. Bacon.

To INDR'ENCH. v. a. [from drench.]

To soak; to drown. My hopes lie drown'd; in many fathoms deep
They lie indrench'd. Shakspeare.

INDUBIOUS. adj. [in and dubious.] Not doubtful; not suspecting; certain.

Hence appears the vulgar vanity of reposing an indubious confidence in those antipestilential spirits. Harvey.

INDUBITABLE. adj. [indubitabilis, Lat. indubitable, Fr. in and dubitable.] Undoubted; unquestionable; evident; certain in appearance; clear; plain.

When general observations are drawn from so many particulars as to become certain and indubitable, these are jewels of knowledge. Watts.

INDUBITABLY. adv. [from indubitable.] Undoubtedly; unquestionably.

If we transport these proportions from audible to visible objects, there will indubitably result from either a graceful and harmonious contentment. Wotton's Architecture.

The patriarchs were indubitably invested with both these authorities. Sprat.

I appeal to all sober judges, whether our souls may be only a mere echo from clashing atoms; or rather indubitably must proceed from a spiritual substance. Bentley.

INDUBITATE. adj. [indubitatus, Latin.] Unquestioned; certain; apparent; evident.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York, held then the indubitatus heirs of the crown. Bacon's Henry VII.

I have been tempted to wonder how, among the jealousies of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitatus heir of the Saxon line. Wotton.

To INDU'CE. v. a. [induire, French; induco, Latin.]

1. To influence to any thing; to persuade: of persons.

The self-same argument in this kind, which doth but induce the vulgar sort to like, may constrain the wiser to yield. Hooker.

This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments both of nature and education, yet would she never be induced to entertain marriage with any. Hayward.

Desire with thee still longer to converse Induc'd me. Milton.

Let not the covetous design of growing rich induce you to ruin your reputation, but rather satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name. Dryden.

2. To produce by persuasion or influence: of things.

Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we strive apace to exceed our pattern. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

As belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, the evidence for inducing it must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. Forbes.

3. To offer by way of induction, or consequential reasoning.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people, and take up popular conceits. Brown.

4. To inculcate; to enforce.

This induces a general change of opinion, concerning the person or party like to be obeyed by the greatest or strongest part of the people. Temple.

5. To cause extrinsically; to produce: to effect.

Sour things induce a contraction in the nerves, placed in the mouth of the stomach, which is a great cause of appetite. Bacon.

Acidity, as it is not the natural state of the animal fluids, but induced by aliment, is to be cured by aliment with the contrary qualities. Arbuth.

6. To introduce; to bring into view.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induceth the providence of flocks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.

The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first Iliad, where he discovers their humours, interests, and designs. Pope.

7. To bring on; to superinduce; to effect gradually.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.

INDUCEMENT. n. f. [from induce.] Motive to any thing; that which allures or persuades to any thing.

The former inducements do now much more prevail, when the very thing hath ministered further reason. Hooker.

Many inducements, besides scripture, may lead me to that, which if scripture be against, they are of no value, yet otherwise are strongly effectual to persuade. Hooker.

That mov'd me to't,
Then mark th' inducement. Shakspeare.

He lives
Higher degree of life; inducement strong For us. Milton.

My inducement hither,
Was not at present here to find my son. Milton.

Instances occur of oppression, to which there appears no inducement from the circumstances of the actors. Rogers.

INDUCER. n. f. [from induce.] A persuader; one that influences.

To INDU'CT. v. a. [inductus, Latin.]

1. To introduce; to bring in.

The ceremonies in the gathering were first inducted by the Venetians. Sandys' Travels.

2. To put into actual possession of a benefice.

If a person thus instituted, though not inducted, takes a second benefice, it shall make the first void. Ayliffe's Paragon.

INDUCTION. n. f. [induction, French; inductio, Latin.]

1. Introduction; entrance; anciently preface.

These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosp'rous hope. Shak.

2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of revelations; therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts' Logick.

The inquisition by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon.

Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration: conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.

Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general: and if no exception occur from phenomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton's Opticks.

He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.

3. The act or state of taking possession of an ecclesiastical living.

INDUCTIVE. adj. [from induct.]

1. Leading; persuasive: with to.

A brutish vice,
Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve. Milton.

2. Capable to infer or produce.

Abatements may take away infallible conclusion in these evidences of fact, yet they may be probable and inductive of credibility, though not of science. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Proceeding not by demonstration, but induction.

TO INDUE. v. a. [induo, Latin.]

1. To invest; to clothe.

One first matter all,
Indu'd with various forms. Milton.

2. It seems sometimes to be, even by good writers, confounded with endow or indow, to furnish or enrich with any quality or excellence.

The angel, by whom God indu'd the waters of Bethesda with supernatural virtue, was not seen; yet the angel's presence was known by the waters. Hooker.

His pow'rs, with dreadful strength indu'd.
Chapman.

TO INDULGE. v. a. [indulgeo, Lat.]

1. To encourage by compliance.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep;
Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his sleep. Dryd.

2. To fondle; to favour; to gratify with concession; to foster. If the matter of indulgence be a single thing, it has with before it; if it be a habit, it has in: as, he indulged himself with a draught of wine; and, he indulged himself in shameful drunkenness.

A mother was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well. Locke.

To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Atterbury.

3. To grant not of right but favour.

Ancient privileges, indulged by former kings to their people, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors. Taylor.

The virgin ent'ring bright, indulg'd the day
To the brown cave, and brush'd the dreams away. Dryden.

But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryden's Juvenal.

My friend, indulge one labour more,
And seek Atrides. Pope's Odyssey.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night! Pope.

TO INDULGE. v. n. [a latinism not in use.] To be favourable; to give indulgence: with to.

He must, by indulging to one sort of reproveable discourse himself, defeat his endeavours against the rest. Government of the Tongue.

INDULGENCE. n. f. [indulgence, French; INDULGENCY. n. f. from indulge.]

1. Fondness; fond kindness.

Restraint she will not brook;
And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,
She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milton.

The glories of our isle,
Which yet like golden ore, unripe in beds,
Expect the warm indulgency of heaven. Dryden.

2. Forbearance; tenderness: opposite to rigour.

They err, that through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing less. Hammond.

In known images of life, I guess
The labour greater, as th' indulgence less. Pope.

3. Favour granted; liberality.

If all these gracious indulgencies are without any effect on us, we must perish in our own folly. Rogers.

4. Grant of the church of Rome, not defined by themselves.

Thou, that giv'st whores indulgences to sin,
I'll canvass thee. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Indulgences, dispensations, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton.

In purgatory, indulgences, and supererogation, the assertors seem to be unanimous in nothing but profit. Decay of Piety.

Leo x. is deservedly infamous for his base prostitution of indulgences. Atterbury.

INDULGENT. adj. [indulgent, French; indulgens, Latin.]

1. Kind; gentle; liberal.

God has done all for us that the most indulgent Creator could do for the work of his hands. Rogers.

2. Mild; favourable.

Hereafter such in thy behalf shall be
Th' indulgent censure of posterity. Waller.

3. Gratifying; favouring; giving way to: with of.

The feeble old, indulgent of their ease. Dryd.

INDULGENTLY. adv. [from indulgent.]

Without severity; without censure;
without self-reproach; with indulgence.

He that not only commits some act of sin, but lives indulgently in it, is never to be counted a regenerate man. Hammond.

INDULT. n. f. [Italian and French.]

INDULTO. n. f. Privilege or exemption.

TO INDURATE. v. n. [induro, Latin.]

To grow hard; to harden.

Stones within the earth at first are but rude earth or clay; and so minerals come at first of juices concrete, which afterwards indurate. Bacon's Natural History.

That plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water without approachment of air, we have experiments in corallines. Brown.

TO INDURATE. v. a.

1. To make hard.

A contracted indurated bladder is a circumstance sometimes attending on the stone, and indeed an extraordinary dangerous one. Sharp.

2. To harden the mind; to sear the conscience.

INDURATION. n. f. [from indurate.]

1. The state of growing hard.

This is a notable instance of condensation and induration, by burial under earth, in caves, for a long time. Bacon.

2. The act of hardening.

3. Obduracy; hardness of heart.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.

INDUSTRIOUS. adj. [industrius, Fr. industrius, Latin.]

1. Diligent; laborious; assiduous: opposed to slothful.

Frugal and industrious men are commonly friendly to the established government. Temple.

2. Laborious to a particular end: opposite to remiss.

He himself, being excellently learned, and industrious to seek out the truth of all things concerning the original of his own people, hath set down the testimony of the ancients truly. Spenser.

Let our just censures Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership. Shakspeare.

His thoughts were low:
To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful. Milton.

3. Designed; done for the purpose.

The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, draw the tendons of the third joints through. More.

Observe carefully all the events which happen either by an occasional concurrence of various causes, or by the industrious application of knowing men. Watts on the Mind.

INDUSTRIOUSLY. adv. [from industrious.]

1. With habitual diligence; not idly.

2. Diligently; laboriously; assiduously.

Great Britain was never before united under one king, notwithstanding that the uniting had been industriously attempted both by war and peace. Bacon.

3. For the set purpose; with design.

Some friends to vice industriously defend These innocent diversions, and pretend
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden's Juvenal.

I am not under the necessity of declaring myself, and I industriously conceal my name, which wholly exempts me from any hopes and fears. Swift.

INDUSTRY. n. f. [industrie, Fr. industria, Lat.] Diligence; assiduity; habitual or actual laboriousness.

The sweat of industry would dry and die,
But for the end it works to. Shakspeare.

See the laborious bee
For little drops of honey flee,
And there with humble sweets content her industry. Cowley.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers. More.

TO INEBRIATE. v. a. [inebrio, Lat.]

To intoxicate; to make drunk.

Wine sugared *inebriate*th less than wine pure: sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon.

Fish entering far in and meeting with the fresh water, as if inebriated, turn up their bellies and are taken. Sandys.

To INEBRIATE. v. n. To grow drunk; to be intoxicated.

At Constantinople, fish, that come from the Euxine sea into the fresh water, do inebriate and turn up their bellies, so as you may take them with your hand. Bacon.

INEBRIATION. n. f. [from inebriate.] Drunkenness; intoxication.

That cornelians and bloodstones may be of virtue, experience will make us grant; but not that an amethyst prevents inebriation. Brown.

INEFFABILITY. n. f. [from ineffable.] Unspeakableness.

INEFFABLE. adj. [ineffable, Fr. ineffabilis, Lat.] Unspeakable; unutterable; not to be expressed. It is used almost always in a good sense.

To whom the Son, with calm aspect, and clear, Lightning divine, ineffable, serene! Made answer. Milton.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitted conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. South.

INEFFABLY. adv. [from ineffable.] In a manner not to be expressed.

He all his father full express'd, Ineffably into his face receiv'd. Milton.

INEFFECTIVE. adj. [ineffectif, Fr. in and effective.] That can produce no effect; unactive; inefficient; useless.

As the body, without blood, is a dead and lifeless trunk; so is the word of God, without the spirit, a dead and ineffective letter. Taylor.

He that assures himself he never errs, will always err; and his presumptions will render all attempts to inform him ineffective. Glanville.

INEFFECTUAL. adj. [in and effectual.] Unable to produce its proper effect; weak; wanting power.

The publick reading of the Apocrypha they condemn as a thing effectual unto evil: the bare reading even of scriptures themselves they mislike, as a thing ineffectual to do good. Hooker.

The death of Patrocles, joined to the offer of Agamemnon, which of itself had proved ineffectual. Pope.

INEFFECTUALLY. adv. [from ineffectual.] Without effect.

INEFFECTUALNESS. n. f. [from ineffectual.] Inefficacy; want of power to perform the proper effect.

St. James speaks of the ineffectualness of some men's devotion, Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss. Wake.

INEFFICACIOUS. adj. [inefficace, Fr. inefficax, Lat.] Unable to produce effects; weak; feeble. Ineffectual rather denotes an actual failure; and inefficacious, an habitual impotence to any effect.

Is not that better than always to have the rod in hand, and, by frequent use, misapply and render inefficacious this useful remedy? Locke.

INEFFICACY. n. f. [in and efficacia, Lat.] Want of power; want of effect.

INELEGANCE. n. f. [from inelegant.] INELEGANCY. s. Absence of beauty; want of elegance.

INELEGANT. adj. [inelegans, Lat.]

1. Not becoming; not beautiful: opposite to elegant.

What order, so contriv'd as not to mix Tastes, not well join'd, inelegant, but bring Taste after taste, upheld with kindest change. Milton.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, which is here reputed so inelegant and unbecoming, is indeed extremely charming and agreeable. Woodward.

2. Wanting ornament of language.

Modern critics, having never read Homer but in low and inelegant translations, impute the meanness of the translation to the poet. Broome.

INELOQUENT. adj. [in and eloquens, Lat.] Not persuasive; not oratorical: opposite to eloquent.

INEPT. adj. [ineptus, Lat.]

1. Trifling; foolish.

The works of nature, being neither useless nor inept, must be guided by some principle of knowledge. More.

After their various unsuccessful ways, Their fruitless labour, and inept essays, No cause of these appearances they'll find, But power exerted by th' eternal mind. Blackmore.

2. Unfit for any purpose; useless.

When the upper and vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile matter, such as was wholly inept and improper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

INEPTLY. adv. [ineptè, Lat.] Triflingly; foolishly; unfitly.

None of them are made foolishly or ineptly. More.

All things were at first disposed by an omniscient intellect, that cannot contrive ineptly. Glanville.

INEPTITUDE. n. f. [from ineptus, Lat.] Unfitness.

The grating and rubbing of the axes against the sockets, wherein they are placed, will cause some ineptitude or resistency to the rotation of the cylinder. Wilkins.

An omnipotent agent works infallibly and irresistibly, no ineptitude or stubbornness of the matter being ever able to hinder him. Ray.

There is an ineptitude to motion from too great laxity, and ineptitude to motion from too great tention. Arbuthnot.

INEQUALITY. n. f. [inegalité, Fr. from inequalitas, and inequalis, Lat.]

1. Difference of comparative quantity.

There is so great an inequality in the length of our legs and arms, as makes it impossible for us to walk on all four. Ray.

2. Unevenness; interchange of higher and lower parts.

The country is cut into so many hills and inequalities as renders it defensible. Addison.

The glass seemed well wrought; yet when it was quicksilvered, the reflexion discovered innumerable inequalities all over the glass. Newton.

If there were no inequalities in the surface of the earth, nor in the seasons of the year, we should lose a considerable share of the vegetable kingdom. Bentley.

3. Disproportion to any office or purpose; state of not being adequate; inadequateness.

The great inequality of all things to the appetites of a rational soul appears from this, that in all worldly things a man finds not half the pleasure in the actual possession that he proposed in the expectation. South.

4. Change of state; unlikeness of a thing to itself; difference of temper or quality.

In some places, by the nature of the earth, and by the situation of woods and hills, the air is more unequal than in others; and inequality of air is ever an enemy to health. Bacon.

5. Difference of rank or station.

If so small inequality between man and man make in them modesty a commendable virtue, who respecting superiors as superiors, can neither speak nor stand before them without fear. Hooker.

INERRABILITY. n. f. [from inerrable.] Exemption from error; infallibility.

I cannot allow their wisdom such a completeness and inerrability as to exclude myself from judging. King Charles.

INERRABLE. adj. [in and err.] Exempt from error.

We have conviction from reason, or decisions from the inerrable and requisite conditions of sense. Brown.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hammond.

INERRABLENESS. n. f. [from inerrable.] Exemption from error.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed and inclosed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hammond.

INERRABLY. adv. [from inerrable.] With security from error; infallibly.

INERRINGLY. adv. [in and erring.] Without error; without mistake; without deviation.

That divers limners at a distance, without copy, should draw the same picture, is more conceivable, than that matter should frame itself so inerringly according to the idea of its kind. Glanville.

INERT. adj. [iners, Latin.] Dull; sluggish; motionless.

Body alone, inert and brute, you'll find; The cause of all things is by you assign'd. Blackmore.

Informer of the planetary train! Witout whose quickening glance their cumb'rous orbs Were brute unlively mass, inert and dead. Thomson.

INERTLY. adv. [from inert.] Sluggishly; dully.

Ye pow'rs, Suspend a while your force inertly strong. Dunciad.

INESCATION. n. f. [in and esca, Latin.] The act of baiting. Di.

INESTIMABLE. adj. [inestimable, French; inestimabilis, Latin.] Too valuable to be rated; transcending all price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks, A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon; Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl, Inestimable stones, unvalu'd jewels. Shakespeare.

The pope thereupon took advantage, abusing the simplicity of the king, to suck out ineestimable sums of money, to the intolerable grievance of both the clergy and temporality. Abbot.

There we shall see a fight worthy dying for, that blessed Saviour, of whom the scripture does so excellently entertain us, and who does so highly deserve of us upon the score of his infinite perfections, and his ineestimable benefits. Boyle.

And shall this prize, th' ineestimable prize, On that rapacious hand for ever blaze! Pope.

INEVIDENT. adj. [inevident, Fr. in and evident.] Not plain; obscure. Not in use.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, and a stable assent unto things inevident, upon authority of the divine revealer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INEVITABILITY. n. f. [from inevitable.] Impossibility to be avoided; certainty.

By liberty, I do understand neither a liberty from sin, misery, servitude, nor violence, but from necessity, or rather necessitation; that is, an universal immunity from all inevitability and determination to one. Bramhall against Hobbes.

INEVITABLE. adj. [inevitable, Fr. inevitabilis, Lat.] Unavoidable; not to be escaped.

I had a pass with him: he gives me the sturgeon with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable.
Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

Fate inevitable

Subdues us.

Milton.

Since my inevitable death you know,

You safely unavailing pity show.

Dryden.

INEVITABLY. adv. [from inevitable.]

Without possibility of escape.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die.

Milton.

How inevitably does an immoderate laughter end in a sigh!

South.

If they look no further than the next line, it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point.

Dryden.

Inflammations of the bowels oft inevitably tend to the ruin of the whole.

Harvey.

If our sense of hearing were exalted we should have no quiet or sleep in the silentest nights, and we must inevitably be stricken deaf or dead with a clap of thunder.

Bentley.

INEXCUSABLE. adj. [inexcusable, Fr. inexcusable, Lat. in and excusable.] Not to be excused; not to be palliated by apology.

It is a temerity, and a folly inexcusable, to deliver up ourselves needlessly into another's power.

L'Estrange.

As we are an island with ports and navigable seas, we should be inexcusable if we did not make these blessings turn to account.

Addison.

Such a favour could only render them more obdurate, and more inexcusable: it would enhance their guilt.

Atterbury.

If learning be not encouraged under your administration, you are the most inexcusable person alive.

Swift.

A fallen woman is the more inexcusable, as,
from the cradle, the sex is warned against the de-lusions of men.

Clarissa.

INEXCUSABLENESS. n. f. [from inexcusable.] Enormity beyond forgiveness or palliation.

Their inexcusableness is stated upon the supposition that they knew God, but did not glorify him.

South.

INEXCUSABLY. adv. [from inexcusable.]

To a degree of guilt or folly beyond excuse.

It will inexcusably condemn some men, who having received excellent endowments, yet have frustrated the intention.

Brown.

INEXHA'LABLE. adj. [in and exhale.]

That cannot evaporate.

A new laid egg will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a great stock of humid parts, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the inexhalable parts into confidence.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INEXHA'USTED. adj. [in and exhausted.]

Unemptied; not possible to be emptied.

So wert thou born into a tuneful strain,
An early, rich, and inexhausted vein.

Dryden.

INEXHA'USTIBLE. adj. [in and exhaustible.] Not to be drawn all away; not to be spent.

Reflect on the variety of combinations which may be made with number, whose stock is in- exhaustible and truly infinite.

Locke.

The stock that the mind has in its power, by varying the idea of space, is perfectly in- exhaustible, and so it can multiply figures in infinitum.

Locke.

INEXISTENT. adj. [in and existent.]

1. Not having being; not to be found in nature.

To express complexed significations, they took a liberty to compound and piece together creatures of allowable forms into mixtures inexistent.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Existing in something else. This use is rare.

We doubt whether these heterogeneities be so much as inexistent in the concrete, whence they are obtained.

Boyle.

INEXISTENCE. n. f. [in and existence.]

Want of being; want of existence.

He calls up the heroes of former ages from a state of inexistence to adorn and diversify his poem.

Broome on the Odyssey.

INEXORABLE. adj. [inexorable, Fr. inex- orabilis, Lat.] Not to be entreated; not to be moved by entreaty.

You are more inhuman, more inexorable,
Oh ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania!

Shakspeare.

Inexorable dog! Shakspeare's Merch. of Venice.

The scourge

Inexorable calls to penance.

Milton.

The guests invited came,

And with the rest th' inexorable dame.

Dryden.

Th' inexorable gates were barr'd,

And nought was seen, and nought was heard,

But dreadful gleams, shrieks of woe.

Pope.

We can be deaf to the words of so sweet a charmer, and inexorable to all his invitations.

Rogers.

INEXPEDIENCE. } n. f. [in and expedi-

INEXPEDIENCY. } ency.] Want of fitness; want of propriety; unfuitableness to time or place; inconvenience.

It concerneth superiours to look well to the expediency and inexpediency of what they enjoin in indifferent things.

Sanderson.

INEXPEDIENT. adj. [in and expedient.]

Inconvenient; unfit; improper; un-fuitable to time or place.

It is not inexpedient they should be known to come from a person altogether a stranger to chymical affairs.

Boyle.

We should be prepared not only with patience to bear, but to receive with thankfulness a re-pulsé, if God should see them to be inexpedient.

Smalridge.

INEXPERIENCE. n. f. [inexperience, Fr. in- in and experience.] Want of experimental knowledge; want of experience.

Thy words at random argue thine inexperience.

Milton.

Prejudice and self-sufficiency naturally proceed from inexperience of the world, and ignorance of mankind.

Addison.

INEXPERIENCED. adj. [inexpertus, Lat.]

Not experienced.

INEXPERT. adj. [inexpertus, Lat. in and expert.] Unskillful; unskilled.

The race elect advance

Through the wild desert; not the readiest way,
Left entering on the Canaanite alarm'd,

War terrify them inexpert.

Milton.

In letters and in laws

Not inexpert.

Prior.

INEXPIABLE. adj. [inexpiable, French;
inexpiable, Latin.]

1. Not to be atoned.

2. Not to be mollified by atonement.

Love seeks to have love:

My love how could'st thou hope, who took'st the
way

To raise in me inexpiable hate?

Milton.

INEXPIABLY. adv. [from inexpiable.]

To a degree beyond atonement.

Excursions are inexpiable bad,

And 'tis much safer to leave out than add.

Roscommon.

INEXPLEABLY. adv. [in and expleo, Lat.]

Infatiably. A word not in use.

What were these harpies but flatterers, dela-tors, and the inexpleably covetous?

Sandys.

INEXPLICABLE. adj. [inexplicable, Fr. in and explico, Lat.] Incapable of being explained; not to be made intelligible;

not to be disentangled.

What could such apprehensions breed, but, as their nature is, inexplicable passions of mind, desires abhorring what they embrace, and embracing what they abhor?

Hooker.

To me at least this seems inexplicable, if light be nothing else than pression or motion propagated through ether.

Newton.

None eludes sagacious reason more,
Than this obscure inexplicable pow'r.

Blackmore.

INEXPLICABLY. adv. [from inexplicable.]

In a manner not to be explained.

INEXPRESSIBLE. adj. [in and express.]

Not to be told; not to be uttered; unutterable.

Thus when in orbs

Of circuit inexpressible they stood,

Orb within orb.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of human nature, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy and secret inex- pressible communications.

South.

The true God had no certain name given to him; for Father, and God, and Creator, are but titles arising from his works; and God is not a name but a notion ingrafted in human nature of an inexpressible being.

Stillingfleet.

There is an inimitable grace in Virgil's words: and in them principally consists that beauty, which gives so inexpressible a pleasure to him who best understands their force: this diction of his is never to be copied.

Dryden.

INEXPRESSIBLY. adv. [from inexpressible.]

To a degree or in a manner not to be uttered; unutterably.

God will protect and reward all his faithful servants in a manner and measure inexpressibly abundant.

Hammond.

He began to play upon it: the sound was exceeding sweet, and wrought into a variety of tunes that were inexpressibly melodious.

Addison.

INEXPUGNABLE. adj. [inexpugnabile, Fr. in- inexpugnabilis, Lat.] Impregnable; not to be taken by assault; not to be subdued.

Why should there be implanted in each sex such a vehement and inexpugnable appetite of co-pulation?

Ray.

INEXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [inextinguible, Fr. in and extinguo, Lat.] Unquenchable.

Pillars, statues, and other memorials, are a sort of shadow of an endless life, and show an inextinguishable desire which all men have of it.

Grew.

INEXTRICABLE. adj. [inextricable, Fr. in- inextricabilis, Lat.] Not to be disentangled; not to be cleared; not to be set free from obscurity or perplexity.

He that should tie inextricable knots, only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not to have served his generation.

Decay of Piety.

Stopt by awful heights, and gulphs immense
Of wisdom, and of vast omnipotence,
She trembling stands, and does in wonder gaze,
Lost in the wild inextricable maze.

Blackmore.

Men are led into inextricable mazes by setting up themselves as judges of the world.

Sherlock.

INEXTRICABLY. adv. [from inextricable.]

To a degree of perplexity not to be dis-entangled.

The mechanical atheist, though you grant him his laws of mechanism, is nevertheless inex- tricably puzzled and baffled with the first formation of animals.

Bentley.

In vain they strive; th' intangling snares deny,
Inextricably firm, the power to fly.

Pope.

TO INE'YE. v. n. [in and eye.] To inoculate; to propagate trees by the injection of a bud into a foreign stock.

Let sage experience teach thee all the arts
Of grafting and inveing. Philips.

INFALLIBILITY. } n. f. [infallibilité,
INFALLIBLNESS. } Fr. from infallible.]

Inerrability; exemption from error.

Infallibility is the highest perfection of the knowing faculty, and consequently the firmest degree of assent. Tillotson.

INFALLIBLE. adj. [infallible, Fr. in and fallible.] Privileged from error; incapable of mistake; not to be misled or deceived; certain. Used both of persons and things.

Every cause admitteth not such infallible evidence of proof, as leaveth no possibility of doubt or scruple behind it. Hooker.

Believe my words.
For they are certain and infallible. Shaksp.
The success is certain and infallible, and none ever yet miscarried in the attempt. South.

INFALLIBLY. adv. [from infallible.]

1. Without danger from deceit; with security from error.

We cannot be as God, infallibly knowing good and evil. Smalridge's Sermons.

2. Certainly.

Our blessed Lord has distinctly opened the scene of futurity to us, and directed us to such a conduct as will infallibly render us happy in it. Rogers.

TO INFA'ME. v. a. [infamer, Fr. infamo, Latin.] To represent to disadvantage; to defame; to censure publicly; to make infamous; to brand. To defame is now used.

Livia is infamed for the poisoning of her husband. Bacon.

Hitherto obscur'd, infam'd,
And thy fair fruit let hang, as to no end Created. Milton.

INFAMOUS. adj. [infamé, infamant, Fr. infamis, Lat.] Publicly branded with guilt; openly censured; of bad report.

Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee, which art infamous. Ezekiel.

These are as some infamous bawd or whore Should praise a matron; what could hurt her more? Ben Jonson.

After-times will dispute it, whether Hotham were more infamous at Hull or at Tower-hill.
King Charles.

Persons infamous or branded in any publick court of judicature, are forbidden to be advocates.
Ayliffe.

INFAMOUSLY. adv. [from infamous.]

1. With open reproach; with publick notoriety of reproach.

2. Shamefully; scandalously.

That poem was infamously bad. Dryden.

INFAMOUSNESS. } n. f. [infamie, Fr.
INFAMY. } infamia, Lat.] Publick reproach; notoriety of bad character.

Ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are the infamy of the people. Ezekiel.

The noble isle doth want her proper limbs,
Her face defac'd with scars of infamy. Shaksp.

Wilful perpetrations of unworthy actions brand, with most indelible characters of infamy, the name and memory to posterity. King Charles.

INFANCY. n. f. [infantia, Latin.]

1. The first part of life. Usually extended by naturalists to seven years.

Dare we affirm it was ever his meaning, that unto their salvation, who even from their tender infancy never knew any other faith or religion than only christian, no kind of teaching can be available, saving that which was so needful for the first universal conversion of gentiles, hating christianity? Hooker.

Pirithous came t' attend
This worthy Theseus, his familiar friend:
Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryden.

The insensible impressions on our tender infancies have very important and lasting consequences. Locke.

2. Civil infancy, extended by the English law to one and twenty years.

3. First age of any thing; beginning; original; commencement.

In Spain our springs, like old men's children, be

Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy. Dryd.

The difference between the riches of Roman citizens in the infancy and in the grandeur of Rome, will appear by comparing the first valuation of estates with the estates afterwards possessed. Arbutnot on Coins.

INFANGTHEF, or hingsfangtheft, or infangtheof, is compounded of three Saxon words: the preposition in, fang or song, to take or catch, and thef. It signifies a privilege or liberty granted unto lords of certain manors to judge any thief taken within their fee. Cowell.

INFANT. n. f. [enfant, Fr. infans, Lat.]

1. A child from the birth to the end of the seventh year.

It being a part of their virtuous education, serveth greatly both to nourish in them the fear of God, and to put us in continual remembrance of that powerful grace, which openeth the mouths of infants to sound his praise. Hooker.

There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days. Isaiah.

Young mothers wildly stare, with fear possess'd,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast.
Dryden's Aeneid.

2. [In law.] A young person to the age of one and twenty.

INFANT. adj. Not mature; in a state of initial imperfection.

Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power. Shakspere.

First the shrill sound of a small rural pipe,
Was entertainment for the infant stage. Roscom.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head, Indulge their childhood. Dryden's Virgil.

INFANTA. n. f. [Spanish.] A princess descended from the royal blood of Spain.

INFANTICIDE. n. f. [infanticide, Fr. infanticidium, Lat.] The slaughter of the infants by Herod.

INFANTILE. adj. [infantilis, Lat.] Pertaining to an infant.

The fly lies all the winter in these balls in its infantile state, and comes not to its maturity 'till the following spring. Derham.

INFANTRY. n. f. [infanterie, Fr.] The foot soldiers of an army.

The principal strength of an army consisteth in the infantry or foot; and to make good infantry it requireth men bred in some free and plentiful manner. Bacon's Henry VII.

That small infantry

Warr'd on by cranes. Milton.

INFARCTION. n. f. [in and farcio, Lat.] Stuffing; constipation.

An hypochondriack consumption is occasioned by an infarction and obstruction of the spleen. Harvey.

TO INFA'TUATE. v. a. [infatuo, from in and satuus, Latin; infatuer, French.]

To strike with folly; to deprive of understanding.

The judgment of God will be very visible in infatuating a people, as ripe and prepared for destruction, into folly and madness, making the weak to contribute to the designs of the wicked; and suffering even those, out of a conscience of their guilt, to grow more wicked. Clarendon.

It is the reforming of the vices and sottishness that had long overspread the infatuated gentile world: a prime branch of that design of Christ's sending his disciples. Hammond.

May hypocrites,
That sily speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwar'd, 'till, by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose. Philips.

The people are so universally infatuated with the notion, that, if a cow falls sick, it is ten to one but an old woman is clapt up in prison for it. Addison on Italy.

The carriage of our atheists or deists is amazing: no dotage so infatuate, no phrensy so extravagant as theirs. Bentley.

INFATUATION. n. f. [from infatuate.]

The act of striking with folly; deprivation of reason.

Where men give themselves over to the defence of wicked interests, and false propositions, it is just with God to smite the greatest abilities with the greatest infatuations. South.

INFAUSTING. n. f. [from infaustus, Lat.]

The act of making unlucky. An odd and inelegant word.

As the king did in some part remove the envy from himself, so he did not observe, that he did withal bring a kind of malediction and infausting upon the marriage, as an ill prognostick. Bacon.

INFEASIBLE. adj. [in and feasible.] Impracticable; not to be done.

This is so difficult and infeasible, that it may well drive modesty to despair of science. Glanv.

TO INFE'CT. v. a. [infector, Fr. infectus, Latin.]

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to hurt by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

One of those fantastical mind infected people, that children and musicians call lovers. Sidney.

Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine. Shakspere.

The nature of bad news infects the teller. Shaksp.

Ev'ry day
It would infect his speech, that if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry it so
To make the sceptre his. Shakspere.

Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shakspere.

She speaks poignards, and every word stabs:
if her breath were as terrible as her terminations,
there were no living near her; she would infect to the north star. Shakspere.

I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence. Shakspere.

The love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat. Milton.

2. To fill with something hurtfully contagious.

Infected be the air whereon they ride,
And damn'd all those that trust them! Shaksp.

INFECTIION. n. f. [infection, Fr. infectio, Latin.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison.

Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from distempered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occasion the same disorders as in the bodies they came from. Quincy.

What a strange infection
Is fall'n into thy ear! Shakspeare's Cymb.
The blessed gods
Purge all infections from our air, whilst you Do climate here. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.
Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils, but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy curled self. Shaks.

Hence,
Left that th' infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Shakspeare's King Lear.

The transmission or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and in- fections, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal;
but withal there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no smell at all. Bacon.

INFECTIOUS. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee. Shaks.
In a house,

Where the infectious pestilence did reign.

Shakspeare.
Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such as pestilences and lippitudes. Bacon.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operations of some poisons, that are received only by the smell.
Temple.

INFECTIOUSLY. adv. [from infectious.] Con-tagiously.

The will dotes, that is inclinable
To what infectiously itself affects. Shakspeare.

INFECTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from infectious.] The quality of being infectious; contagiousness.

INFECTIVE. adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of acting by contagion.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power. Sidney.

INFECUND. n. f. [infecundus, Latin.] Un-fruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved. Derham.

INFECUNDITY. n. f. [infecunditas, Lat.] Want of fertility; barrenness.

INFELICITY. n. f. [infelicité, French; in- felicitas, Lat.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy.

Glanville.
Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea. Watts.

TO INFER. v. a. [inferer, Fr. infero, Latin.]

1. To bring on; to induce.

Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs.
Harvey.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition. Locke.

Yet what thou canst attain, which best may serve

To glorify the Maker and infer

Thee also happier, shall not be with-held

Thy hearing.

Milton.

Great,
Or bright, infers not excellence: the earth
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glistening, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines.

Milton.

One would wonder how, from so differing pre-misses, they should all infer the same conclusion.

Decay of Piety.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing public esteem, by deserving well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations. Atterbury.

3. To offer; to produce. Not in use.

Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator,
Inferring arguments of mighty force. Shakspeare.

INFERENCE. n. f. [inference, Fr. from infer.] Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference. Glanville.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument.

Watts.

INFERRIBLE. adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferrible from their premisses. Brown.

INFERIORITY. n. f. [inferiorité, French, from inferiour.] Lower state of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiority which is not possibly to be remedied. Dryden.

INFERIOUR. adj. [inferior, Latin;
inferieur, French.]

1. Lower in place.

2. Lower in station or rank of life: correlative to superiour.

Render me more equal, or perhaps

Superior, for inferior who is free? Milton.

3. Lower in value or excellency.

The love of liberty with life is giv'n,

And life itself th' inferiour gift of heav'n. Dryden.

I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferiour to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of. Dryden.

4. Subordinate.

General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferiour and particular propositions. Watts.

INFERIOUR. n. f. [from the adjective.] One in a lower rank or station than another.

A great person gets more by obliging his infe- riour than by disdainning him. South.

INFERNAL. adj. [infernal, French; in- fernus, Lat.] Hellish; tartarean; detestable.

His gigantick limbs with large embrace,

Infolds nine acres of infernal space. Dryden.

INFERNAL Stone. n. f.

Infernal stone, or the lunar caustick, is prepared from an evaporated solution of silver, or from crystals of silver. It is a very powerful caustick, eating away the flesh and even the bones to which it is applied. Hill's Mat. Med.

INFERTILE. adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity: infecund.

Ignorance being of itself, like stiff clay, and in- fertile soil, when pride comes to scorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable.

Government of the Tongue.

INFERTILITY. n. f. [infertilité, Fr. from infertile.] Unfruitfulness; want of fertility.

The same distemperature of the air that occasioned the plague, occasioned the infertility or noxiousness of the soil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very small, or very unwholesome. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO INFEST. v. a. [infester, French; in- festo, Lat.] To harass; to disturb; to plague.

Unto my feeble breast

Come gently; but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou dost infest,
And hearts of greatest heroes do'st enrage.

Spenser.

They ceased not, in the mean while, to strengthen that part which in heart they favoured, and to infest by all means, under colour of other quarrels, their greatest adversaries in this cause.

Hooker.

Although they were a people infested, and mightily hated of all others, yet was there nothing of force to work the ruin of their state, till the time beforementioned was expired. Hooker.

They were no mean, distressed, calamitous persons that fled to him for refuge; but of so great quality, as it was apparent that they came not thither to protect their own fortune, but to infest and invade his. Bacon's Henry VII.

Envy, avarice, superstition, love, with the like cares and passions infest human life. Addison.

No disease infests mankind more terrible in its symptoms and effects. Arbuthnot on Diet.

INFESTIVITY. n. f. [in and festivity.] Mournfulness; want of cheerfulness.

INFESTRED. adj. [in and fester.] Rankling; inveterate. Obsolete.

This cursed creature, mindful of that old

Infested grudge, the which his mother felt,

So soon as Clarion he did behold,

His heart with vengeful malice inly swelt. Spenser.

INFEDA'TION. n. f. [in and feudum, Latin.] The act of putting one in possession of a fee or estate.

Another military provision was conventional and by tenure, upon the infederation of the tenant, and was usually called knight's service. Hale.

INFIDEL. n. f. [infidelle, Fr. infidelis, Latin.] An unbeliever; a miscreant;
a pagan; one who rejects christianity.

Exhorting her, if she did marry, yet not to join herself to an infidel, as in those times some widows christian had done, for the advancement of their estate in this world. Hooker.

INFIDELITY. n. f. [infidélité, Fr. infide- litas, Latin.]

1. Want of faith.

The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of silencing the murmurs of infidelity. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

2. Disbelief of christianity.

One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the imprudent fervours of religion; but so it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceness and contention, as if the safety of mankind depended upon it. Addison's Spectator.

3. Treachery; deceit; breach of contract or trust.

The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up this business of life, render it silly and uncomfortable. Spectator.

INFINITE. adj. [infini, Fr. infinitus, Latin.]

1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

What 's time, when on eternity we think?
A thousand ages in that sea must sink:
Time 's nothing but a word; a million
Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.
Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will con-trouls

The inward bent and motion of our souls!
Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees
Between the cause and cure of my disease. Prior.

When we would think of infinite space or duration, we at first make some very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times. Locke.

Even an angel's comprehensive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought:
Our vast conceptions are by swelling brought,
Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought. Dennis.

2. It is hyperbolically used for large;
great.

INFINITELY. adv. [from infinite.]

1. Without limits; without bounds; im-menfely.

Nothing may be infinitely desired, but that good which indeed is infinite. Hooker.

2. In a great degree.

This is Antonio,
To whom I am so infinitely bound. Shakspeare.

The king saw that contrariwise it would follow, that England, though much less in territory, yet should have infinitely more soldiers of their native forces than those other nations have. Bacon's Henry VII.

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have professed to act under a full persuasion of this great article. Rogers.

INFINITENESS. n. f. [from infinite.] Im-menfity; boundlessness; infinity.

The cunning of his flattery, the readinefs of his tears, the infiniteness of his vows, were but among the weakest threads of his net. Sidney.

Let us always bear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his Almightynefs, and exprefs that infinite distance between his infinite-ness and our weaknesses. Taylor.

INFINITE'SIMAL. adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

INFINITIVE. adj. [infinitif, Fr. infinitivus, Latin.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one use of the indicative; but then it does not do it absolutely. Clarke.

INFINITUDE. n. f. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immensity.

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood rul'd, stood vast infinitude confin'd. Milton.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompetible to continued or fucceffive motion, or continued quantity, and pends upon the incompossibility of the very nature of things fuc-ceffive or extenfive with infinitude; yet that incompossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that arifeth from parts actually distinguished. Hale.

2. Boundless number.

We fee all the good fenfe of the age cut out,
and minced into almost an infinitude of distinctions. Addifon's Spectator.

INFINITY. n. f. [infinité, French; infinitas,
Latin.]

1. Immensity; boundlessness; unlimited qualities.

There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Raleigh.

The better, the more desirable; that therefore must be desirable, wherein there is infinity of goodness; so that if any thing desirable may be infinite, that must needs be the highest of all things that are desired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he is our felicity and blifs. Hooker.

2. Endless number. A hyperbolical use of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Broome.

The liver, being swelled, compresseth the stomach, stops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad symptoms. Arbuth.

INFIRM. adj. [infirm, Fr. infirmus, Lat.]

1. Weak; feeble; disabled of body.

Here stand I your brave;
A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man. Shakspeare.

2. Weak of mind; irresolute.

I am afraid to think what I have done:
Look on 't again, I dare not.

—Infirm of purpose;
Give me the dagger. Shakspeare. Macbeth.

That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty, and infirm sex, forgiv'n;
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milton.

3. Not stable; not solid.

He who fixes upon false principles, treads upon infirm ground, and so sinks; and he who fails in his deductions from right principles, stumbles upon firm ground, and falls. South.

To INFIRM. v. a. [infirm, Fr. infirm, Latin.] To weaken; to shake; to enfeeble. Not in use.

Some contrary spirits will object this as a fufficient reason to infirm all those points.

The spleen is unjustly introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, being dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate it. Brown.

INFIRMARY. n. f. [infirm, French.]

Lodgings for the sick.

These buildings to be for privy lodgings on both sides, and the end for privy galleries, whereof one should be for an infirm, if any special person should be sick. Bacon.

INFIRMITY. n. f. [infirm, French.]

1. Weakness of sex, age, or temper.

Infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something feiz'd

His with'd ability. Shakspeare. Winter's Tale.

Discover thine infirmity,
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege:

I am with child, ye bloody homicides. Shakspeare.
If he had done or said any thing amifs, he desired their worships to think it was his infirmities. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

Are the infirmities of the body, pains, and diseases his complaints? His faith reminds him of the day when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality. Rogers.

2. Failing; weakness; fault.

A friend should bear a friend's infirmities;
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are. Shakspeare.

Many infirmities made it appear more requisite, that a wiser man should have the application of his interest. Clarendon.

How difficult is it to preserve a great name, when he that has acquired it, is so obnoxious to such little weaknesses and infirmities, as are no small diminution to it. Addifon.

3. Disease; malady.

General laws are like general rules of physick, according whereunto, as now, no wise man will desire himself to be cured, if there be joined with his disease some special accident, in regard that thereby others in the same infirmity, but without the like accident, may. Hooker.

Sometimes the races of man may be depraved
by the infirmities of birth. Temple.

INFIRMNESS. n. f. [from infirm.] Weakness; feebleness.

Some experiments may discover the infirmness and insufficiency of the peripatetick doctrine. Boyle.

To INFIX. v. a. [infixus, Lat.] To drive in; to set; to fasten.

And at the point two stings *infix*ed are,
Both deadly sharp, that sharpest steel exceedeth far. Spenser.

I never lov'd myself,
'Till now, *infix*ed, I behold myself,
Drawn in the flatt'ring table of her eye. Shakspeare.
Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round. Milton.

That sting infix'd within her haughty mind,
And her proud heart with secret sorrow pin'd. Dryden.

The fatal dart a ready passage found,
And deep within her heart infix'd the wound. Dryden.

To INFLAME. v. a. [inflammo, Lat.]

1. To kindle; to set on fire; to make to burn.

Love more clear, dedicated to a love more cold, with the clearness lays a night of sorrow upon me, and with the coldness inflames a world of fire within me. Sidney.

Its waves of torrent fire inflam'd with rage. Milton.

2. To kindle any passion.

Their lust was inflamed towards her. Susannah.

3. To fire with passion.

More inflam'd with lust than rage. Milton.
Satan, with thoughts inflam'd of highest design, Puts on swift wings. Milton.

4. To exaggerate; to aggravate.

A friend exaggerates a man's virtues, an enemy inflames his crimes. Addifon's Spectator.

5. To heat the body morbidly with obstructed matter.

6. To provoke; to irritate.

A little vain curiosity weighs so much with us, or the church's peace so little, that we sacrifice the one to the whetting and inflaming of the other. Decay of Piety.

To INFLAME. v. n. To grow hot, angry, and painful by obstructed matter.

If the vesiculæ are oppress'd, they inflame. Wiseman.

INFLAMER. n. f. [from inflame.] The thing or person that inflames.

Interest is a great inflamer, and sets a man on persecution under the colour of zeal. Addifon.

Assemblies, who act upon publick principles, proceed upon influence from particular leaders and inflamers. Swift.

INFLAMMABILITY. n. f. [from inflammable.] The quality of catching fire.

This it will do, if the ambient air be impregnate with subtle inflammabilities. Brown.

Choler is the most inflammable part of the blood; whence, from its inflammability, it is called a sulphur. Harvey.

INFLAMMABLE. adj. [French.] Easy to be set on flame; having the quality of flaming.

The juices of olives, almonds, nuts, and pine-apples, are all inflammable. Bacon.

Licetus thinks it possible to extract an inflammable oil from the stone asbestus. Wilkins.

Out of water grow all vegetable and animal substances, which consist as well of sulphureous, fat, and inflammable parts, as of earthy and alcali-zate ones. Newton's Opticks.

Inflammable spirits are subtle volatile liquors, which come over in distillation, miscible with water, and wholly combustible. Arbuthnot.

INFLAMMABLENESS. n. f. [from inflammable.] The quality of easily catching fire.

We may treat of the inflammableness of bodies. Boyle.

INFLAMMA'TION. n. f. [inflammatio, Latin; inflammation, French.]

1. The act of setting on flame.

Inflammations of air from meteors, may have a powerful effect upon men. Temple.

2. The state of being in flame.

The flame extendeth not beyond the inflammable effluence, but closely adheres unto the original of its inflammation. Brown.

Some urns have had inscriptions on them, expressing that the lamps within them were burning when they were first buried: whereas the inflammation of fat and viscous vapours doth presently vanish. Wilkins' Dædalus.

3. [In chirurgery.] Inflammation is when the blood is obstructed so as to crowd in a greater quantity into any particular part, and gives it a greater colour and heat than usual. Quincy.

If that bright spot stay in his place, it is an inflammation of the burning. Leviticus.

4. The act of exciting fervour of mind.

Prayer kindleth our desire to behold God by speculation, and the mind, delighted with that contemplative sight of God, taketh every where new inflammations to pray the riches of the mysteries of heavenly wisdom, continually stirring up in us correspondent desires towards them. Hooker.

INFLA'MMATORY. adj. [from inflame.] Having the power of inflaming.

The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities: such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper. Arbuth.

An inflammatory fever hurried him out of this life in three days. Pope to Swift.

To INFLA'TE. v. a. [inflatus, Lat.]

1. To swell with wind.

That the muscles are inflated in time of rest, appears to the very eye in the faces of children. Ray.

Vapours are no other than inflated vesiculae of water. Derham.

2. To fill with the breath.

With might and main they chas'd the murderous fox,

With brazen trumpets and inflated box,
To kindle Mars with military sounds,
Nor wanted horns to inspire sagacious hounds. Dryden.

INFLA'TION. n. f. [inflatio, Latin; from inflate.] The state of being swelled with wind; flatulence.

Wind coming upwards, inflations and tumours of the belly, are signs of a phlegmatick constitution. Arbuthnot on Diet.

To INFLECT. v. a. [inflecto, Latin.]

1. To bend; to turn.

What makes them this one way their race direct,

While they a thousand other ways reject?
Why do they never once their course inflect? Blackmore.

Do not the rays of light which fall upon bodies, begin to bend before they arrive at the bodies? And are they not reflected, refracted, and inflected by one and the same principle, acting variously in various circumstances? Newton's Opticks.

2. To vary a noun or verb in its terminations.

INFLECTION. n. f. [inflectio, Latin.]

1. The act of bending or turning.

Neither the divine determinations, persuasions, or inflections of the understanding or will of rational creatures, doth deceive the understanding, pervert the will, or necessitate either to any moral evil. Hale.

2. Modulation of the voice.

His virtue, his gesture, his countenance, his zeal, the motion of his body, and the inflection of his voice, who first uttereth them as his own,

VOL. I.

is that which giveth the very essence of instruments available to eternal life. Hooker.

3. Variation of a noun or verb.

The same word in the original tongue, by divers inflections and variations, makes divers dialects. Brerewood.

INFLECTIVE. adj. [from inflect.] Having the power of bending.

This inflective quality of the air is a great incumbrance and confusion of astronomical observations. Derham.

2. Obstinacy; temper not to be bent; inexorable pertinacy.

INFLEXIBLE. adj. [Fr. inflexibilis, Lat.]

1. Not to be bent or incurvated.

Such errors as are but acorns in our younger brows, grow oaks in our older heads, and become inflexible to the powerful arm of reason. Brown.

Too great rigidity and elasticity of the fibres makes them inflexible to the causes, to which they ought to yield. Arbuthnot.

2. Not to be prevailed on; immoveable.

The man resolv'd and steady to his trust,
Inflexible to ill, and obstinately just. Addison.

A man of an upright and inflexible temper, in the execution of his country's laws, can overcome all private fear. Addison.

3. Not to be changed or altered.

The nature of things is inflexible, and their natural relations unalterable: we must bring our understandings to things, and not bend things to our fancies. Watts.

INFLEXIBLY. adv. [from inflexible.] Inexorably; invariably; without relaxation or remission.

It should be begun early, and inflexibly kept to, 'till there appears not the least reluctance. Lucke.

To INFLICT. v. a. [infligo, inflictus, Lat. infliger, Fr.] To put in act or impose as a punishment.

I know no pain, they can inflict upon him,
Will make him say I mov'd him to those arms. Shakspeare.

Sufficient is this punishment which was *inflict*ed. 2 Cor.

What the potent victor in his rage
Can else inflict. Milton.

What heart could wish, what hand inflict this dire disgrace? Dryden's Æneid.

By luxury we condemn ourselves to greater torments than have been yet invented by anger or revenge, or *inflict*ed by the greatest tyrants upon the worst of men. Temple.

INFLICTER. n. f. [from inflict.] He who punishes.

Revenge is commonly not bounded, but extended to the utmost power of the inflicter. Government of the Tongue.

INFLICTION. n. f. [from inflict.]

1. The act of using punishments.

So our decrees,
Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead;
And liberty plucks justice by the nose. Shaks.

Sin ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infliction. South.

2. The punishment imposed.

What, but thy malice, mov'd thee to misdeem
Of righteous Job, than cruelly to afflict him
With all inflictions? But his patience won. Milton.

How despicable are the threats of a creature as impotent as ourselves, when compared with the wrath of an Almighty Judge, whose power extends to eternal inflictions. Rogers.

His severest inflictions are in themselves acts of justice and righteousness. Rogers.

INFLECTIVE. adj. [inflective, French; from inflect.] That imposes a punishment.

INFLUENCE. n. f. [influence, French; influo, Latin.]

1. Power of the celestial aspects operating upon terrestrial bodies and affairs.

The sacred influence of light appears. Milton.

Comets no rule, no righteous order own;
Their influence dreaded, as their ways unknown. Prior.

2. Ascendant power; power of directing or modifying. It was anciently followed by into; now, less properly, by upon.

Incomparable lady, your commandment doth not only give me the will, but the power to obey you, such influence hath your excellency. Sidney.

God hath his influence into the very essence of all things, without which influence of Deity supporting them, their utter annihilation could not chuse but follow. Hooker.

A wise man shall over-rule his stars, and have a greater influence upon his own content than all the constellations and planets of the firmament. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault. Milton.

Religion hath so great an influence upon the felicity of men, that it ought to be upheld, not only out of a dread of the divine vengeance in another world, but out of regard to temporal prosperity. Tillotson.

Our inconsistency in the pursuit of schemes thoroughly digested, has a bad influence on our affairs. Addison.

So astonishing a scene would have present influence upon them, but not produce a lasting effect. Atterbury.

Where it ought to have greatest influence, this obvious indisputable truth is little regarded. Rogers.

To INFLUENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To act upon with directive or impulsive power; to modify to any purpose; to guide or lead to any end.

By thy kind pow'r and influencing care,
The various creatures move, and live, and are. Milton.

These experiments succeed after the same manner in vacuo as in the open air, and therefore are not influenced by the weight or pressure of the atmosphere. Newton's Opticks.

This standing revelation was attested in the most solemn and credible manner; and is sufficient to influence their faith and practice, if they attend. Atterbury.

All the restraint men are under is, by the violation of one law, broken through; and the principle which influenced their obedience has lost its efficacy on them. Rogers.

INFLUENT. adj. [influens, Latin.] Flowing in.

The chief intention of chirurgery, as well as medicine, is keeping a just equilibrium between the influent fluids and vascular solids. Arbuth.

INFLUENTIAL. adj. [from influence.] Exerting influence or power.

Our now overshadowed souls may be emblemized by those cruised globes, whose influential emissions are interrupted by the interposal of the benighted element. Glanville.

The inward springs and wheels of the corporal machine, on the most sublimed intellectuals, are dangerously influential. Glanville.

INFLUX. n. f. [influxus, Latin.]

1. Act of flowing into any thing.

We will enquire whether there be, in the footsteps of nature, any such transmission and influx of immaterial virtues, and what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon's Nat. Njt.

If once contracted in a systole, by the influx of the spirits, why, the spirits continually flowing in without let, doth it not always remain so?
Ray on the Creation.

An elastick fibre, like a bow, the more extended, it restores itself with the greater force: if the spring be destroyed, it is like a bag, only passive as to the influx of the liquid.
Arbuth.

2. Infusion; intromission.

There is another life after this; and the influx of the knowledge of God, in relation to this everlasting life, is infinitely of moment.
Hale.

3. Influence; power. In this sense it is now not used.

Adam, in innocence, might have held, by the continued influx of the divine will and power, a state of immortality.
Hale.

These two do not so much concern sea-fish, yet they have a great influx upon rivers, ponds, and lakes.
Hale.

INFLU'XIOUS. adj. [from influx.] Influential. Not used.

The moon hath an influxious power to make impressions upon their humours.
Howel.

To INFO'LD. v. a. [in and fold.] To involve; to inwrap; to enclose with involutions.

For all the creft a dragon did infold
With greedy paws, and over all did spread
His golden wings.
Fairy Queen.

Noble Banquo, let me infold thee,
And hold thee to my heart.
Shakspeare.

But does not nature for the child prepare
The parent's love, the tender nurse's care?
Who, for their own forgetful, seek his good,
Infold his limbs in bands, and fill his veins with food.
Blackmore.

Wings raise her arms, and wings her feet infold.
Pope.

To INFO'LIATE. v. a. [in and folium, Latin.] To cover with leaves. Not much used, but elegant.

Long may his fruitful vine infoliate and clasp about him with embracements.
Howel.

To INFO'RM. v. a. [inform, French; informo, Latin.]

1. To animate; to actuate by vital powers.

All alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing ir'n with fire.
Milton.

Let others better mold the running mass
Of metals, and inform the breathing brass;
And soften into flesh a marble face.
Dryden.

As from chaos, huddl'd and deform'd,
The god struck fire, and lighted up the lamps
That beautify the sky; so he inform'd
This ill-shap'd body with a daring soul.
Dryden and Lee.

Breath informs this fleeting frame.
This sovereign arbitrary soul
informs, and moves, and animates the whole.
Blackmore.

While life informs these limbs, the king re-ply'd,
Well to deserve be all my cares employ'd.
Pope's Odysey.

2. To instruct; to supply with new knowledge; to acquaint. Before the thing communicated was anciently put with; now generally of; sometimes in, I know not how properly.

The drift is to inform their minds with some method of reducing the laws into their original causes.
Hooker.

I have this present evening from my sister
Been well inform'd of them, and with cautions.
Shakspeare.

Our ruin, by thee inform'd, I learn.
The long speeches rather confounded than in- formed his understanding.
Clarendon.

The difficulty arises not from what sense in- forms us of, but from wrong applying our notions.
Digby.

Though I may not be able to inform men more than they know, yet I may give them the occasion to consider.
Temple.

The ancients examined in what consists the beauty of good postures, as their works sufficiently inform us.
Dryden.

He may be ignorant of these truths, who will never take the pains to employ his faculties to inform himself of them.
Locke.

To understand the commonwealth, and religion, is enough: few inform themselves in these to the bottom.
Locke.

A more proper opportunity tends to make the narration more informing or beautiful.
Broome.

I think it necessary, for the interest of virtue and religion, that the whole kingdom should be informed in some parts of your character.
Swift.

3. To offer an accusation to a magistrate.

Tertullus informed the governor against Paul.
Acts.

To INFO'RM. v. n. To give intelligence.

Thus to mine eyes.
Shakspeare's Macbeth.

INFO'RMAL. adj. [from inform.] Irregular; not competent. A word not used.

These poor informal women are no more
But instruments of some more mightier member,
That sets them on.
Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

INFO'RMANT. n. s. [French.]

1. One who gives information or instruction.

He believes the sentence is true, as it is made up of terms which his informant understands, though the ideas be unknown to him which his informant has under these words.
Watts.

2. One who exhibits an accusation.

INFO'RMATION. n. s. [informatio, Latin; from inform.]

1. Intelligence given; instruction.

But reason with the fellow,
Lest you should chance to whip your information,
And beat the messenger who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.
Shakspeare.

The active informations of the intellect filling the passive reception of the will, like form closing with matter, grew actuate into a third and distinct perfection of practice.
South's Sermons.

They gave those complex ideas names, that the things they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the easier and quicker understood.
Locke.

He should regard the propriety of his words, and get some information in the subject he intends to handle.
Swift.

These men have had longer opportunities of information, and are equally concerned with ourselves.
Rogers.

2. Charge or accusation exhibited.

3. The act of informing or accusing.

INFO'RMER. n. s. [from inform.]

1. One who gives instruction or intelligence.

This writer is either biased by an inclination to believe the worst, or a want of judgment to chuse his informers.
Swift.

2. One who discovers offenders to the magistrate.

There were spies and informers set to work to watch the company.
L'Estrange.

Let no court sycophant pervert my sense,
Nor fly inform watch these words to draw
Within the reach of treason.
Pope.

Informers are a detestable race of people, although sometimes necessary.
Swift.

INFO'RMIDABLE. adj. [in and formida- bilis, Latin.] Not to be feared; not to be dreaded.

Of strength, of courage haughty, and of limbs
Heroick built, though of terrestrial mold;
Foe not informidable, exempt from wound.
Milton.

INFO'RMITY. n. s. [from informis, Latin.] Shapelessness.

From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a smallness in the exclusion; but this inferreth no informity.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INFO'RMIOUS. adj. [informe, French; in- formis, Latin.] Shapeless; of no regular figure.

That a bear brings forth her young informous and unshapen, which she fashioneth after by licking them over, is an opinion delivered by ancient writers.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INFO'RTUNATE. adj. [infortuné, French; in- fortunatus, Latin.] Unhappy. See UNFORTUNATE, which is commonly used.

Perkin, destitute of all hopes, having found all either false, faint, or infortunate, did gladly accept of the condition.
Bacon's Henry VII.

To INFRA'CT. v. a. [infactus, Latin.] To break.

Falling fast, from gradual slope to slope,
With wild infacted course and lessen'd roar,
It gains a safer bed.
Thomson's Summer.

INFRA'CTION. n. s. [infraction, French; in- fractio, Latin.] The act of breaking;
breach; violation of treaty.

By the same gods, the justice of whose wrath
Punish'd the infraction of my former faith.
Waller.

The wolves, pretending an infraction in the abuse of their hostages, fell upon the sheep without their dogs.
L'Estrange.

INFRA'NGIBLE. adj. [in and frangible.] Not to be broken.

The primitive atoms are supposed infrangible, extremely compacted and hard, which compacted-ness and hardness is a demonstration that nothing could be produced by them, since they could never cohere.
Cheyne.

INFRE'QUENCY. n. s. [infrequentia, Latin.]

Uncommonness; rarity.

The absence of the gods, and the infrequency
of objects, made her yield.
Broome.

INFRE'QUENT. adj. [infrequens, Latin.] Rare; uncommon.

To INFRI'GIDATE. v. a. [in and frigidus, Latin.] To chill; to make cold.

The drops reached little further than the surface of the liquor, whose coldness did not in- frigidate those upper parts of the glass.
Boyle.

To INFRINGE. v. a. [infringo, Lat.]

1. To violate; to break laws or contracts.

Those many had not dar'd to do that evil,
If the first man that did th' edict infringe,
Had answer'd for his deed.
Having infring'd the law, I wave my right
As king, and thus submit myself to fight.
Waller.

2. To destroy; to hinder.

Homilies, being plain and popular instructions, do not infringe the efficacy, although but read.
Bright as the deathless gods and happy, the
From all that may infringe delight is free.
Waller.

INFRI'NGEMENT. n. s. [from infringe.] Breach; violation.

The punishing of this infringement is proper to that jurisdiction against which the contempt is.
Clarendon.

INFRI'NGER. n. s. [from infringe.] A breaker; a violator.

A clergyman's habit ought to be without any lace, under a severe penalty to be inflicted on the infringers of the provincial constitution.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

To INFUSE. v. a. [infuser, French; infusus, Latin.]

1. To pour in; to instil.

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men. Shakspeare.

My early mistress, now my ancient muse,
That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham.

Why should he desire to have qualities infused into his son, which himself never possessed? Swift.

2. To pour into the mind; to inspire.

For when God's hand had written in the hearts
Of our first parents all the rules of good,
So that their skill infus'd surpass'd all arts
That ever were before, or since the flood. Davies.

Sublime ideas, and apt words infuse;
The muse instruct my voice, and thou inspire
the muse. Roscom.

He infus'd
Bad influence into th' unwary breast. Milton.
Infuse into their young breasts such a noble ardour as will make them renowned. Milton.

Meat must be with money bought;
She therefore, upon second thought,
Infus'd, yet as it were by stealth,
Some small regard for state and wealth. Swift.

3. To steep in any liquor with a gentle heat; to macerate so as to extract the virtues of any thing without boiling.

Take violets, and infuse a good pupil of them in a quart of vinegar. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

4. To make an infusion with any ingredient; to supply, to tincture, to saturate with any thing infused. Not used.

Drink, infused with flesh, will nourish faster and easier than meat and drink together. Bacon.

5. To inspire with. Not used.

Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heav'n. Shakspeare.
Infuse his breast with magnanimity,
And make him, naked, foil a man at arms. Shakspeare.

INFUSIBLE. adj. [from infuse.]

1. Possible to be infused.

From whom the doctrines being infusible into all, it will be more necessary to forewarn all of the danger of them. Hammond.

2. Incapable of dissolution; not fusible; not to be melted.

Vitrification is the last work of fire, and a fusion of the salt and earth, wherein the fusible salt draws the earth and infusible part into one continuum. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INFUSION. n. f. [infusion, French; infusio, Latin.]

1. The act of pouring in; instillation.

Our language has received innumerable elegancies and improvements from that infusion of Hebraisms, which are derived to it out of the poetical passages in holy writ. Addison.

2. The act of pouring into the mind; inspiration.

We participate Christ partly by imputation, as when those things which he did and suffered for us are imputed to us for righteousness; partly by habitual and real infusion, as when grace is inwardly bestowed on earth, and afterwards more fully both our souls and bodies in glory. Hooker.

3. Suggestion; whisper.

They found it would be matter of great debate, and spend much time, during which they did not desire their company, nor to be troubled with their infusions. Clarendon.

Here his folly and his wisdom are of his own growth, not the echo or infusion of other men. Swift.

4. The act of keeping any thing in moisture without boiling.

Repeat the infusion of the body oftener. Bacon.

5. The liquor made by infusion.

To have the infusion strong, in those bodies which have finer spirits, repeat the infusion of the body oftener. Bacon.

INFUSIVE. adj. [from infuse.] Having the power of infusion, or being infused.
A word not authorized.

Still let my song a nobler note assume,
And sing th' infusive force of spring on man. Thomson.

INGATE. n. f. [in and gate.] Entrance;
passage in. An old word.

One noble person stoppeth the ingate of all that evil which is looked for, and holdeth in all those which are at his back. Spenser.

INGANNA'TION. n. f. [ingannare, Ital.] Cheat; fraud; deception; juggle; delusion; imposture; trick; slight. Neither used nor necessary.

Whoever shall resign their reasons, either from the root of deceit in themselves, or inability to resist such trivial ingannations from others, are within the line of vulgarity. Brown.

INGATHERING. n. f. [in and gathering.]
The act of getting in the harvest.

Thou shalt keep the feast of ingathering, when thou hast gathered in thy labours out of the field. Exodus.

INGE, in the names of places, signifies a meadow, from the Saxon ing, of the same import. Gibson's Camden.

To INGE'MINATE. v. a. [ingemino, Lat.]
To double; to repeat.

He would often ingeminate the word peace,
peace. Clarendon.

INGEMINA'TION. n. f. [in and geminatio, Latin.] Repetition; reduplication.

INGENERABLE. adj. [in and generate.]
Not to be produced or brought into being.

Divers naturalists esteem the air, as well as other elements, to be ingenerable and incorruptible. Boyle.

INGENERATE. } adj. [ingeneratus, Lat.]
INGENERATED. }

1. Inborn; innate; inbred.

Those virtues were rather feigned and affected things to serve his ambition, than true qualities
ingenerate in his judgment or nature. Bacon.

In divers children their ingenerate and seminal powers lie deep, and are of slow disclosure. Wotton.

Those noble habits are ingenerated in the soul,
as religion, gratitude, obedience, and tranquillity. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Unbegotten. Not commonly used.

Yet shall we demonstrate the same, from persons presumed as far from us in condition as time; that is, our first and ingenerated forefathers. Brown.

INGENIOUS. adj. [ingenieux, French; ingeniosus, Latin.]

1. Witty; inventive; possessed of genius.

'Tis a per'lous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable. Shakspeare.

Our ingenious friend Cowley not only has employed much eloquence to persuade that truth in his preface, but has in one of his poems given a notable example of it. Boyle.

The more ingenious men are, the more they are apt to trouble themselves. Temple.

2. Mental; intellectual. Not in use.

The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract. Shakspeare.

INGENIOUSLY. adv. [from ingenious.]
Wittily; subtilely.

I will not pretend to judge by common fears,
or the schemes of men too ingeniously politick. Temple.

INGENIOUSNESS. n. f. [from ingenious.]
Wittiness; subtilty; strength of genius.

The greater appearance of ingeniousness there is in the practice I am disapproving, the more dangerous it is. Boyle.

INGENITE. adj. [ingenitus, Lat.] Innate; inborn; native; ingenerate.

Aristotle affirms the mind to be at first a mere rasa tabula; and that notions are not ingenite, and imprinted by the finger of nature, but by the latter and more languid impressions of sense, being only the reports of observation, and the result of so many repeated experiments. South.

We give them this ingenite, moving force,
That makes them always downward take their course. Blackmore.

INGENUITY. n. f. [ingenuité, Fr. from ingenuous.]

1. Openness; fairness; candour; freedom from dissimulation.

Such of high quality, or rather of particular note, as shall fall under my pen, I shall not let pass without their due character, being part of my professed ingenuity. Wotton.

My constancy I to the planets give;
My truth, to them who at the court do live;
Mine ingenuity and openness

To jests; to buffoons my pensiveness. Donne.

I know not whether it be more shame or wonder, that men can so put off ingenuity, and the native greatness of their kind, as to descend to so base, so ignoble a vice. Gov. of Tongue.

If a child, when questioned for any thing, directly confesses, you must commend his ingenuity,
and pardon the fault, be it what it will. Locke.

2. [from ingenious.] Wit; invention;
genius; subtilty; acuteness.

These are but the frigidities of wit, and become not the genius of many ingenities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ancient atomical hypothesis might have slept for ever, had not the ingenuity of the present age recalled it from its urn and silence. Glanville.

Such sots have neither parts nor wit, ingenuity of discourse, nor fineness of conversation, to entertain or delight any one. South.

A pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity, and how much an honest simplicity is preferable to fine parts and subtile speculations. Woodward.

INGENUOUS. adj. [ingenuus, Latin.]

1. Open; fair; candid; generous; noble.

Many speeches there are of Job's, whereby his wisdom and other virtues may appear; but the glory of an ingenuous mind he hath purchased by these words only, Behold I will lay mine hand upon my mouth; I have spoken once, yet will I not therefore maintain argument; yea twice, howbeit for that cause further I will not proceed. Hooker.

Infuse into their young breasts such an ingenuous and noble ardour, as would not fail to make many of them renowned. Milton.

If an ingenuous detestation of falsehood be but carefully and early instilled, that is the true and genuine method to obviate dishonesty. Locke.

2. Freeborn; not of servile extraction.

Subjection, as it preserves property, peace, and safety, so it will never diminish rights nor ingenuous liberties. K. Charles.

INGENUOUSLY. adv. [from ingenuous.]

Openly; fairly; candidly; generously.

Ingenuously I speak,
No blame belongs to thee. Shaksp. Timon.

It was a notable observation of a wise father, and no less ingenuously confessed, that those which held and perverted pressure of consciences were commonly interested. Bacon.

I will ingenuously confess, that the helps were taken from divines of the church of England. Dryden.

INGENUOUSNESS. n. f. [from ingenuous.]

Openness; fairness; candour.

INGENY. n. f. [ingenium, Lat.] Genius; wit. Not in use.

Whatever of the production of his ingeny comes into foreign parts, is highly valued. Boyle.

To INGEST. v. a. [ingestus, Latin.]

To throw into the stomach.

Nor will we affirm that iron, ingested, receiveth in the belly of the osteridge no alteration Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingested meats with ease descend. Blackmore

INGESTION. n. f. [from ingest.] The act of throwing into the stomach.

It has got room enough to grow into its full dimension, which is performed by the daily ingestion of milk and other food, that's in a short time after digested into blood. Harvey.

INGLORIOUS. adj. [inglorius, Lat.]

Void of honour; mean; without glory.

Left fear return them back to Egypt, chusing inglorious life with servitude. Milton.

It was never held inglorious or derogatory for a king to be guided by his great council, nor dishonourable for subjects to yield and bow to their king. Howel.

Yet though our army brought not conquest home,

I did not from the fight inglorious come. Dryd.

INGLORIOUSLY. adv. [from inglorious.]

With ignominy; with want of glory.

This was the chief o'ercome, Replenish'd not ingloriously at home. Pope.

INGOT. n. f. [lingot, French; or from ingegoten, melted, Dutch.] A mass of metal.

Some others were new driven, and distant
Into great ingots, and to wedges square. Spenser.

If thou art rich, thou'rt poor;
For like an ass, whose back's with ingots bound,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloadeth thee. Shakspere.

Within the circle arms and tripods lie,
Ingots of gold and silver heap'd on high. Dryden.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsically and solidly valuable. Prior.

To INGRAFF. v. a. [in and graff.]

1. To propagate trees by infusion.

Nor are the ways alike in all
How to ingraft, how to inoculate. May's Virgil.

2. To plant the sprig of one tree in the stock of another: as, he ingrafted an apple upon a crab.

3. To plant or introduce any thing not native.

All his works on me,
Good or not good, ingraft, my merits those Shall perfect, and for those alone. Milton.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock. Dryden.

4. To fix deep; to settle.

For a spur of diligence, we have a natural thirst after knowledge ingrafted in us. Hooker.

'Tis great pity that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second,
With one of an ingraft infirmity. Shakspere.

Ingrafted love he bears to Cæsar. Shaksp.

INGRAFTMENT. n. f. [from ingraft.]

1. The act of ingrafting.

2. The sprig ingrafted.

INGRA'TE. } adj. [ingratus, Latin;

INGRA'TEFUL. } ingrat, French.] Ingrate is proper, but ingrateful less proper than ungrateful.

1. Ungrateful; unthankful.

That we have been familiar,
Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

And you degen'rate, you ingrate revolts. Shak.

So will fall
He and his faithless progeny: whose fault?
Whose but his own? Ingrate; he had of me
All he could have: I made him just and right, Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall. Milt.

Perfidious and ingrate!

His stores ye ravage, and usurp his state. Pope.

2. Unpleasing to the sense.

The causes of that which is unpleasing or ingrate to the hearing, may receive light by that which is pleasing and grateful to the sight.

He gives no ingrateful food. Milton.

To INGRA'TIATE. v. a. [in and gratia, Latin.] To put in favour; to recommend to kindness. It has with before the person whose favour is sought.

Those have been far from receiving the rewards of such ingratiating's with the people. King Charles.

Their managers make them see armies in the air, and give them their word, the more to ingratiate themselves with them, that they signify nothing less than future slaughter and desolation. Addison.

Politicians, who would rather ingratiate themselves with their sovereign than promote his real service, accommodate his counsels to his inclinations. Spektor.

INGRA'TITUDE. n. f. [ingratitude, French; in and gratitude.] Retribution of evil for good; unthankfulness.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child,
Than the sea monster. Shakspere's King Lear.

Ingratitude is abhorred both by God and man, and vengeance attends those that repay evil for good. L'Estrange.

Nor was it with ingratitude return'd,
In equal fires the blissful couple burn'd;
One joy possess'd 'em both, and in one grief
they mourn'd. Dryden.

INGRE'DIENT. n. f. [ingredient, French; ingrediens, Latin.]

1. Component part of a body, consisting of different materials. It is commonly used of the simples of a medicine.

The ointment is made of divers ingredients, whereof the hardest to come by is the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburied. Bacon.

So deep the pow'r of these ingredients pierc'd,
Ev'n to the inmost seat of mental sight,
That Adam, now enforc'd to shut his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd. Milton.

By this way of analysis we may proceed from compounds to ingredients, and from motions to the forces producing them; and in general, from effects to their causes, and from particular causes to more general ones, till the argument end in the more general. Newton.

I have often wondered, that learning is not thought a proper ingredient in the education of a woman of quality or fortune. Addison.

Parts, knowledge, and experience, are excellent ingredients in a public character. Rogers.

Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. It is used by Temple with into, properly, but not according to custom.

Spleen is a bad ingredient into any other distemper. Temple.

INGRESS. n. f. [ingressus, Latin.] Entrance; power of entrance; introduction.

All putrefactions come from the ambient body; either by ingress of the substance of the ambient body into the body putrefied; or else by excitation of the body putrefied by the body ambient. Bacon's Natural History.

Those air-bladders, by a sudden subsidence, meet again by the ingress and egress of the air. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INGRE'SSION. n. f. [ingression, French; ingressio, Latin.] The act of entering; entrance.

The fire would strain the pores of the glass too suddenly, and break it all in pieces to get ingression. Digby on Bodies.

INGUINAL. adj. [inguinal, French; inguen, Latin.] Belonging to the groin.

The plague seems to be a particular disease, characterised with eruptions in buboes, by the inflammation and suppuration of the axillary, inguinal, and other glands. Arbuthnot.

To INGU'LF. v. a. [in and gulf.]

1. To swallow up in a vast profundity.

A river large Pass'd underneath ingulph'd. Milton.

Cast out from God, he falls Into utter darkness deep ingulph'd. Milton.

The river flows redundant;
Then rowling back, in his capacious lap
Ingulfs their whole militia, quick immerst. Phil.

2. To cast into a gulf.

If we adjoin to the lords, whether they prevail or not, we ingulf ourselves into assured danger. Hayward.

To INGU'RGITATE. v. a. [ingurgito, Latin.] To swallow down. Diä.

INGURGITA'TION. n. f. [from ingurgitate.] The act of swallowing.

INGU'STABLE. adj. [in and gusto, Lat.] Not perceptible by the taste.

As for their taste, if the camelion's nutriment be air, neither can the tongue be an instrument thereof; for the body of the element is ingustable, void of all sapidity, and without any action of the tongue, is, by the rough artery, or wizen, conducted into the lungs. Brown.

INHA'BILE. adj. [inhabile, French; inhabilis, Latin.] Unskilful; unready; unfit; unqualified.

To INHA'BIT. v. a. [habito, Latin.] To dwell in; to hold as a dweller.

Christ inhabited whom he saveth. Hooker.

They shall build houses and inhabit them. Isaiah.

She shall be inhabited of devils. Baruch.

To INHA'BIT. v. n. To dwell; to live.

Learn what creatures there inhabit. Milton.

They say, wild beasts inhabit here;

But grief and wrong secure my fear. Waller.

INHA'BITABLE. adj. [from inhabit.]

1. Capable of affording habitation.

The fixed stars are all of them suns, with systems of inhabitable planets moving about them. Locke.

2. [inhabitable, French.] Incapable of inhabitants; not habitable; uninhabitable. Not in use.

The frozen ridges of the Alps,
Or any other ground inhabitable. Shakspere.

INHABITANCE. n. f. [from inhabit.] Residence of dwellers.

So the ruins yet resting in the wild moors, testify a former inhabitanee. Carew.

INHABITANT. n. f. [from inhabit.] Dweller; one that lives or resides in a place.

In this place they report that they saw inhabitants, which were very fair and fat people. Abbot.

If the fervour of the sun were the sole cause of blackness in any land of negroes, it were also reasonable that inhabitants of the same latitude, subjected unto the same vicinity of the sun, should also partake of the same hue. Brown.

For his supposed love a third Lays greedy hold upon a bird,
And stands amaz'd to find his dear
A wild inhabitant of th' air. Waller.

What happier natures shrink at with affright,
The hard inhabitant contends is right. Pope.

INHABITATION. n. f. [from inhabit.]

1. Abode; place of dwelling.

Universal groan,
As if the whole inhabitation perish'd. Milton.

2. The act of inhabiting or planting with dwellings; state of being inhabited.

By knowing this place we shall the better judge of the beginning of nations, and of the world's inhabitation. Raleigh.

3. Quantity of inhabitants.

We shall rather admire how the earth contained its inhabitation than doubt it. Brown.

INHABITER. n. f. [from inhabit.] One that inhabits; a dweller.

The same name is given unto the inlanders, or midland inhabiters, of this island. Brown.

Woe to the inhabiters of the earth. Revelation.
They ought to understand, that there is not only some inhabiter in this divine house, but also some ruler. Derham.

TO INHALE. v. a. [inhale, Latin.] To draw in with air; to inspire: opposed to exhale or expire.

Martin was walking forth to inhale the fresh breeze of the evening. Arbutnot and Pope.

But from the breezy deep the blest inhale
The fragrant murmurs of the western gale. Pope.

There sits the shepherd on the grassy turf,
Inhaling healthful the descending sun. Thomson.

INHARMONIOUS. adj. [in and harmounious.] Unmusical; not sweet of sound.

Catullus, though his lines be rough, and his numbers inharmonious, I could recommend for the softness and delicacy, but must decline for the looseness, of his thoughts. Felton.

The identity of sound may appear a little inharmonious, and shock the ear. Broome.

TO INHERE. v. n. [inhereo, Latin.] To exist in something else.

For, nor in nothing, nor in things Extreme and scattering bright, can love inhere. Donne.

They do but inhere in their subject which supports them; their being is a dependance on a subject. Digby on Bodies.

INHERENT. adj. [inherent, French; inherens, Latin.]

1. Existing in something else, so as to be inseparable from it.

I will not do't,
Left I surcease to honour mine own truth;
And, my body's action, teach my mind
A most inherent baseness. Shakspeare.

2. Naturally conjoined; innate; inborn.

I mean not the authority which is annexed to your office: I speak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your person. Dryden's Juvenal.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone; and a power to be so drawn is a part of the complex one of iron; which powers pass for inherent qualities. Locke.

Animal oil is various according to principles inherent in it. Arbutnot on Aliments.

They will be sure to decide in favour of themselves, and talk much, of their inherent right. Swift.

The ideas of such modes can no more be sufficient, than the idea of redness was just now found to be inherent in the blood, or that of whiteness in the brain. Bentley.

The obligations we are under of distinguishing ourselves as much by an inherent and habitual, as we are already distinguished by an external and relative holiness. Bentley.

TO INHERIT. v. a. [enheriter, French.]

1. To receive or possess by inheritance.

Treason is not inherited, my lord. Shakspeare.

Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd doth inherit pain. Shakspeare.

Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father he hath, like lean, sterile land, manured with excellent good store of fertile sherris. Shakspeare.

Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Matthew.

The son can receive from his father good things, without empire, that was vested in him for the good of others; and therefore the son cannot claim or inherit it by a title, which is founded wholly on his own private good. Locke.

We must know how the first ruler, from whom any one claims, came by his authority, before we can know who has a right to succeed him in it; and inherit it from him. Locke.

Unwilling to sell an estate he had some prospect of inheriting, he formed delays. Addison.

2. To possess; to obtain possession of: in Shakspeare. Not used.

He, that had wit, would think that I had none,
To buy so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it. Titus Andronicus.

INHERITABLE. adj. [from inherit.] Transmissible by inheritance; obtainable by succession.

A kind of inheritable estate accrued unto them. Garew.

By the ancient laws of the realm, they were not inheritable to him by descent. Hayward.

Was the power the same, and from the same original in Moses as it was in David? And was it inheritable in one and not in the other? Locke.

INHERITANCE. n. f. [from inherit.]

1. Patrimony; hereditary possession.

When the son dies, let the inheritance descend unto the daughter. Shakspeare Henry v.

Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house? Genesis.

Claim our just inheritance of old. Milton.

O dear, unhappy babe! must I bequeath thee
Only a sad inheritance of woe?
Gods! cruel gods! can't all my pains atone,
Unless they reach my infant's guiltless head. Smith.

2. The reception of possession by hereditary right.

Men are not proprietors of what they have merely for themselves, their children have a title to part of it, which comes to be wholly theirs, when death has put an end to their parents use of it; and this we call inheritance. Locke.

3. In Shakspeare, possession.

You will rather show our general lowts
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them,
For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin. Coriolanus.

INHERITOR. n. f. [from inherit.] An heir; one who receives any thing by succession.

You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins,
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shak.

The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more? Shakspeare.

Marriage without consent of parents they do not make void, but they mulct it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents inheritance. Bacon's New Atlantis.

INHERITRESS. n. f. [from inheritor.] An heiress; a woman that inherits.

He hath given artificially some hopes to Mary Anne, inheritress to the duchy of Bretagne. Bacon's Henry VII.

INHERITRIX. n. f. [from inheritor.] An heiress. This is now more commonly used, though inheritress be a word more analogically English.

No feme
Should be inheritrix in Salike land. Shakspeare.

TO INHIBIT. v. a. [inhibeo, Latin; inhiber, French.]

1. To restrain; to hinder; to repress; to check.

Holding of the breath doth help somewhat to cease the hiccough; and vinegar put to the nostrils, or gargarised, doth it also, for that it is astringent, and inhibiteth the motion of the spirit. Bacon.

The stars and planets being whirled about with great velocity, would suddenly, did nothing inhibit it, be shattered in pieces. Ray.

Their motions also are excited and inhibited, are moderated and managed, by the objects without them. Bentley.

2. To prohibit; to forbid.

All men were inhibited by proclamation, at the dissolution, so much as to mention a parliament. Clarendon.

Burial may not be inhibited or denied to any one. Ayliffe.

INHIBITION. n. f. [inhibition, French; inhibitio, Latin.]

1. Prohibition; embargo.

He might be judged to have imposed an envious inhibition on it, because himself has not stock enough to maintain the trade. Government of the Tongue.

2. In law.

Inhibition is a writ to inhibit or forbid a judge from farther proceeding in the cause depending before him. Inhibition is most commonly a writ issuing out of a higher court christian to a lower and inferior, upon an appeal; and prohibition out of the king's court to a court christian, or to an inferior temporal court. Cowell.

TO INHOLD. v. a. [in and hold.] To have inherent; to contain in itself.

It is disputed, whether this light first created be the same which the sun inholdeth and casteth forth, or whether it had continuance any longer than till the sun's creation. Raleigh.

INHOSPITABLE. adj. [in and hospitable.] Affording no kindness or entertainment to strangers.

All places else
Inhospitable appear, and desolate;
Nor knowing us, nor known. Milton.

Since toils'd from shores to shores, from lands to lands,
Inhospitable rocks, and barren sands. Dryden.

INHOSPITABLY. adv. [from inhospitable.] Unkindly to strangers.

Of guests he makes them slaves
Inhospitality; and kills their infant males. Milt.
INHOSPITABLENESS. } n. f. [in and hos-INHOSPITALITY. } pitality; inhosp-pitalité, French.] Want of hospitality;
want of courtesy to strangers.
INHUMAN. adj. [inhumain, French; inhumanus, Latin.] Barbarous; savage;
cruel; uncompassionate.

A just war may be prosecuted after a very unjust manner; by perfidious breaches of our word, by inhuman cruelties, and by assassinations.
Atterbury.

The more these praises were enlarged, the more inhuman was the punishment, and the sufferer more innocent. Swift.

Princes and peers attend! while we impart
To you the thoughts of no inhuman heart. Pope.

INHUMANITY. n. f. [inhumanité, French;
from inhuman.] Cruelty; savageness;
barbarity.

Love which lover hurts is inhumanity. Sidney.
The rudeness of those who must make up their want of justice with inhumanity and impudence. King Charles.

Each social feeling fell,
And joyless inhumanity pervades,
And petrifies the heart. Thomson's Spring.

INHUMANLY. adv. [from inhuman.] Savage; cruelly; barbarously.

O what are these Death's ministers, not men: who thus deal death

Inhumanly to men; and multiply
Ten thousand fold the sin of him who slew
His brother! Milton.

I, who have established the whole system of all true politeness and refinement in conversation, think myself most inhumanly treated by my countrymen. Swift.

TO INHUMATE. } v. a. [inhumer, Fr.
TO INHUME. } humo, Latin.] To bury; to inter.

Weeping they bear the mangled heaps of slain,

TO INJECT. v. a. [injectus, Latin.]

1. To throw in; to dart in.
Angels inject thoughts into our minds, and know our cogitations. Glanville.

2. To throw up; to cast up.
Though bold in open field, they yet surround
The town with walls, and mound inject on mound. Pope.

INJECTION. n. f. [injection, French; in-jectio, Latin.]

1. The act of casting in.
This salt powdered was, by the repeated injection of well-kindled charcoal, made to flash like melted nitre. Boyle.

2. Any medicine made to be injected by a syringe, or any other instrument, into any part of the body. Quincy.

3. The act of filling the vessels with wax, or any other proper matter, to show their shapes and ramifications, often done by anatomists. Quincy.

INIMICAL. adj. [inimicus, Latin.] Unfriendly; unkind; hurtful; hostile; adverse.

INIMITABILITY. n. f. [from inimitable.]
Incapacity to be imitated.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously representative, according to the various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

INIMITABLE. adj. [inimitabilis, Latin; inimitable, French.] Above imitation;
not to be copied.

The portal shone, inimitable on earth
By model, or by shading pencil drawn. Milton.
What is most excellent is most inimitable.
Denham.

And imitate the inimitable force. Dryden.
Virgil copied the ancient sculptors, in that inimitable description of military fury in the temple of Janus. Addison.

INIMITABLY. adv. [from inimitable.]
In a manner not to be imitated; to a degree of excellence above imitation.

A man could not have been always blind who thus inimitably copies nature. Pope.

Thus terribly adorn'd the figures shine,
Inimitably wrought with skill divine. Pope.

Charms such as thine, inimitably great. Broome.

TO INJOIN. v. a. [enjoindre, French;
injungo, Latin.]

1. To command; to enforce by authority.
See ENJOIN.

Laws do not only teach what is good, but they injoin it; they have in them a certain constraining force. Hooker.

This garden tend, our pleasant task injoin'd.
Milton.

2. To join. Not used.

The Ottomites
Steering with due course towards the isle of Rhodes,

Have there injoin'd them with a fleet. Shaksp.

INIQUITOUS. adj. [inique, French; from iniquity.] Unjust; wicked.

INIQUITY. n. f. [iniquitas, Latin;
iniquité, French.]

1. Injustice; unrighteousness.

There is greater or less probability of an happy issue to a tedious war, according to the righteousness or iniquity of the cause for which it was commenced. Smalridge.

2. Wickedness; crime.

Want of the knowledge of God is the cause of all iniquity amongst men. Hooker.

Till God at last,
Wearied with their iniquities, withdraw
His presence from among them. Milton.

INITIAL. adj. [initial, French; initialis, from initium, Latin.]

1. Placed at the beginning.

In the editions, which had no more than the initial letters of names, he was made by keys to hurt the inoffensive. Pope.

2. Incipient; not complete.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and cures many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

The schools have used a middle term to express this affection, and have called it the initial fear of God. Rogers.

TO INITIATE. v. a. [initier, French; initio, Latin.] To enter; to instruct in the rudiments of an art; to place in a new state; to put into a new society.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry. More.

To initiate his pupil in any part of learning,
an ordinary skill in the government is enough.
Locke on Education.

He was initiated into half a dozen clubs before he was one and twenty. Spectator.

No sooner was a convert initiated, but, by an easy figure, he became a new man. Addison.

TO INITIATE. v. n. To do the first part; to perform the first rite.

The king himself initiates to the pow'r,
Scatters with quiv'ring hand the sacred flour,
And the stream sprinkles. Pope's Odyssey.

INITIATE. adj. [initié, French; initiatus, Latin.] Unpractised.

My strange and self-abuse
Is the initiate fear; that wants hard use:
We're yet but young. Shakspere's Macbeth.
INITIATION. n. f. [initiatio, Lat. from initiate.] The reception, admission, or entrance of a new comer into any art or state.

The ground of initiating or entering men into christian life, is more summarily comprised in the form of baptism, the ceremony of this initiation instituted by Christ. Hammond.

Silence is the first thing that is taught us at our initiation into sacred mysteries. Broome.

INJUCUNDITY. n. f. [in and jucundity.]
Unpleasantness.

INJUDICABLE. adj. [in and judico, Lat.]
Not cognizable by a judge.

INJUDICIAL. adj. [in and judicial.] Not according to form of law. Di&

INJUDICIOUS. adj. [in and judicious.]
Void of judgment; wanting judgment.
Used both of persons and things.

A philosopher would either think me in jest, or very injudicious, if I took the earth for a body regular in itself, if compared with the rest of the universe. Burnet.

A sharp wit may find something in the wisest man, whereby to expose him to the contempt of injurious people. Tillotson.

INJUDICIOUSLY. adv. [from injudicious.]
With ill judgment; not wisely.

Scaliger injudiciously condemns this description. Broome.

INJUNCTION. n. f. [from injoin; injunctus, injunctio, Latin.]

1. Command; order; precept.

The institution of God's law is described as being established by solemn injunction. Hooker.

My duty cannot suffer
T' obey in all your daughter's hard commands;
Though the injunction be to bar my doors,
And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you. Shakspere.

For, still they knew; and ought t' have still remember'd

The high injunction, not to taste that fruit, Whoever tempted. Milton.

The ceremonies of the church are necessary as the injunctions of lawful authority, the practice of the primitive church, and the general rules of decency. South.

2. In law.

Injunction is an interlocutory decree out of the chancery, sometimes to give possession unto the plaintiff for want of appearance in the defendants, sometimes to the king's ordinary court, and sometimes to the court-christian, to stay proceeding. Cowell.

TO INJURE. v. a. [injurier, French; injuria, Latin.]

1. To hurt unjustly; to mischief unde-servedly; to wrong.

They injure by chance in a crowd, and without a design; then hate always whom they have once injured. Temple.

Forgiveness to the injur'd doth belong;
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

2. To annoy; to affect with any inconvenience.

Left heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath unbefought provided. Milton.

INJURER. n. f. [from injure.] He that hurts another unjustly; one who wrongs
another.

Ill deeds are well turn'd back upon their authors;
And 'gainst an injurer, the revenge is just. Ben Jonson.

The upright judge will countenance right, and discountenance wrong, whoever be the in-jurer or the sufferer. Atterbury.

INK

INJURIOUS. adj. [from injury; injurius, Latin; injurieux, French.]

1. Unjust; invasive of another's rights.

Till the injurious Roman did extort
This tribute from us, we were free. Shakspeare.

Injurious strength would rapine still excuse,
By off'ring terms the weaker must refuse. Dryd.

2. Guilty of wrong or injury.

Yet beauty, though injurious, hath strange power,

After offence returning, to regain Love once possesst. Milton's Agonistes.

3. Mischievous; unjustly hurtful.

Our repentance is not real, because we have not done what we can to undo our fault, or at least to hinder the injurious consequences of it from proceeding. Tillotson.

4. Detractory; contumelious; reproachful; wrongful.

A prison, indeed injurious, because a prison, but else well testifying affection, because in all respects as commodious as a prison can be. Sidney.

It is natural for a man, by directing his prayers to an image, to suppose the being he prays to represented by that image: which how injurious, how contumelious must it be to the glorious nature of God! South.

If injurious appellations were of any advantage to a cause, what appellations would those deserve who endeavour to sow the seeds of sedition? Swift.

INJURIOUSLY. adv. [from injurious.]

Wrongfully; hurtfully with injustice, with contumely.

Nor ought he to neglect the vindication of his character, when it is injuriously attacked. Pope and Gay.

INJURIOUSNESS. n. f. [from injurious.]

Quality of being injurious.

Some miscarriages might escape, rather through sudden necessities of state, than any propensity either to injuriousness or oppression.
King Charles.

INJURY. n. f. [injuria, Latin; injure, French.]

1. Hurt without justice.

The places were acquired by just title of victory; and therefore in keeping of them no in- jury was offered. Hayward.

Riot ascends above their loftiest tow'rs,
And injury and outrage. Milton.

2. Mischief; detriment.

Many times we do injury to a cause by dwelling upon trifling arguments. Watts' Logick.

3. Annoyance.

Great injuries mice and rats do in the fields.
Mortimer.

4. Contumelious language; reproachful appellation. A French mode of speech, not now in use.

Casting off the respects fit to be continued between great kings, he fell to bitter invectives against the French king; and spake all the in- juries he could devise of Charles. Bacon.

INJUSTICE. n. f. [injustice, Fr. injustitia, Lat.] Iniquity; wrong.

Cunning men can be guilty of a thousand in- justices without being discovered, or at least without being punished. Swift.

INK. n. f. [encre, Fr. inchiostro, Italian.]

1. The black liquor with which men write.

Mourn boldly, my ink; for while she looks upon you, your blackness will shine. Sidney.

O! she's fallen
Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea
Hath drops too few to wash her clean again.
Shakspeare.

Like madmen they hurl'd stones and ink.
Ben Jonson.

Intending to have try'd
The silver favour which you gave,

INK

In ink the shining point I dy'd,
And drench'd it in the fable wave. Waller.

Vitriol is the active or chief ingredient in ink, and no other salt will strike the colour with galls. Brown.

I have found pens blacked almost all over when I had a while carried them about me in a silver ink case. Boyle.

The secretary poured the ink box all over the writings, and so defaced them. Howel.

He that would live clear of envy must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink pot. L'Estrange.

I could hardly restrain them from throwing the ink bottle at one another's heads. Arbuth.

2. Ink is used for any liquor with which they write: as, red ink; green ink.

To INK. v. a. [from the noun.] To black or daub with ink: as, his face is all over inked.

INKHORN. n. f. [ink and born.] A portable case for the instruments of writing, commonly made of horn.

Bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the jail; we are now to examine those men. Shaksp.

Ere that we will suffer such a prince
To be disgac'd by an inkhorn mate,
We, and our wives and children, all will fight.
Shakspeare.

What is more frequent than to say, a silver
inkhorn? Greav.

INKLE. n. f. A kind of narrow fillet;
a tape.

Inkles, caddises, cambricks, lawns: why he sings them over as they were gods and goddesses.
Shakspeare.

I twitch'd his dangling garter from his knee:
He wist not when the hempen string I drew,
Now mine I quickly doft of inkle blue. Gay.

INKLING. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from inklincken, to sound within. This sense is still retained in Scotland: as, I heard not an inkling.]
Hint; whisper; intimation.

Our business is not unknown to the senate:
they have had inkling what we intend to do,
which now we'll shew them in deeds. Shaksp.

We in Europe, notwithstanding all the remote discoveries and navigations of this last age, never heard of any of the least inkling or glimpse of this island. Bacon's New Atlantis.

They had some inkling of secret messages between the marquis of Newcastle and young Hotham. Clarendon.

Aboard a Corinthian vessel he got an inkling
among the ship's crew of a conspiracy. L'Estr.

INKMAKER. n. f. [ink and maker.] He who makes ink.

INKY. adj. [from ink.]

1. Consisting of ink.

England bound in with the triumphant sea,
Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege
Of wat'ry Neptune, is bound in with shame,
With inky blots and rotten parchment bonds.
Shakspeare.

2. Resembling ink.

The liquor presently began to grow pretty clear and transparent, losing its inky blackness.
Boyle on Colours.

3. Black as ink.

'Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother,
Nor customary suits of solemn black,
That can denote me truly. Shakspeare.

INLAND. adj. [in and land.] Interior;
lying remote from the sea.

In this wide inland sea, that hight by name,
The idle lake, my wand'ring ship I row. Spenser.

Goodly laws, like little inland seas, will carry even ships upon their waters. Spenser.

An old religious uncle of mine was, in his youth, an inland man. Shakspeare.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state

INK

Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakspeare.

This person did publish a pamphlet printed in England for a general excise, or inland duty.
Swift.

INLAND. n. f. Interior or midland parts.

Out of these small beginnings, gotten near to the mountains, did they spread themselves into the inland. Spenser.

They of those marches shall defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers. Shak.

The rest were all
Far to th' inland retir'd, about the walls Of Pandæmonium. Milton.

INLANDER. n. f. [from inland.] Dweller remote from the sea.

The same name is given unto the inlanders, or midland inhabitants of this island. Brown.

TO INLA'PIDATE. v. a. [in and lapido, Latin.] To make stoney; to turn to stone.

Some natural spring waters will inlapidate
wood; so that you shall see one piece of wood, whereof the part above the water shall continue wood, and the part under the water shall be turned into a kind of gravelly stone. Bacon.

TO INLA'Y. v. a. [in and lay.]

1. To diversify with different bodies inserted into the ground or substratum.

inlaid; matter cut to be inlaid.

Under foot the violet,
Crocus, and hyacinth, with rich inlay,
Broider'd the ground. Milton.

TO INLA'W. v. a. [in and law.] To clear of outlawry or attainder.

It should be a great incongruity to have them to make laws, who themselves were not inlawed.
Bacon.

INLET. n. f. [in and let.] Passage;
place of ingress; entrance.

Doors and windows, inlets of men and of light,
I couple together; I find their dimensions brought under one. Wotton.

She through the porch and inlet of each sense Dropt in ambrosial oils till she reviv'd. Milton.

I desire any one to assign any simple idea, which is not received from one of these inlets.
Locke.

A fine bargain indeed, to part with all our commodious ports, which the greater the inlet is are so much the better, for the imaginary pleasure of a streight shore. Bentley.

Inlets amongst broken lands and islands. Ellis.

INLY. adj. [from in.] Interior; internal; secret.

Did'st thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou would'st as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words.
Shakspeare.

INLY. adv. Internally; within; secretly; in the heart.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld.
Spenser.

I've inly wept,
Or should have spok'd ere this. Shakspeare.
Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a stone,
That beat out life. Milton.
These growing thoughts, my mother soon perceiving
By words at times cast forth, inly rejoic'd. Milt.
The soldiers shout around with gen'rous rage;
He prais'd their ardor: inly pleas'd to see His host. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

INNATE. n. f. [in and mate.] Inmates are those that be admitted to dwell for their money jointly with another man, though in several rooms of his mansion-house, passing in and out by one door. Corwell.

So spake the enemy of mankind, inclos'd
In serpent, innate bad! and toward Eve Address'd his way. Milton.

There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown, Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth, as innate guests Too numerous. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife:
If thence we fly, the cause admits no doubt,
None but an innate foe could force us out. Dryd.

INMOST. adj. [from in.] Deepest within; remotest from the surface.

Tis you must dig with mattock and with spade,

And pierce the inmost centre of the earth. Shakf.
Rising sighs and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my inmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away. Addison.

Comparing the quantity of light reflected from the several rings, I found that it was most copious from the first or inmost, and in the exterior rings became less and less. Newton.

He sends a dreadful groan: the rocks around Through all their inmost hollow caves resound. Pope.

I got into the inmost court. Gulliver.

INN. n. f. [inn, Saxon, a chamber.]

1. A house of entertainment for travellers.

How all this is but a fair inn,
Of fairer guests which dwell within. Sidney.
Palmer, quoth he, death is an equal doom
To good and bad, the common inn of rest;
But, after death, the trial is to come,
When best shall be to them that lived best. Fairy Queen.

Now day is spent,
Therefore with me ye may take up your inn. Fairy Queen.

The west, that glimmers with some streaks of day,

Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Like pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end. Dryden.

One may learn more here in one day, than in a year's rambling from one inn to another. Locke.

2. A house where students were boarded and taught: whence we still call the colleges of common law inns of court.

Go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of courts: down with them all. Shaksp.

3. It was anciently used for the town houses in which great men resided when they attended the court.

In thyself dwell;

Inn any where: continuance maketh hell. Donne.
To INN. v. a. To house; to put under cover.

He that ears my land, spares my team, and gives me leave to inn the crop. Shakspeare.

Howsoever the laws made in that parliament did bear good fruit, yet the subsidy bare a fruit that proved harsh and bitter: all was inn'd at last into the king's barn. Bacon's Henry VII.

Mow clover or rye-grass, and make it fit to inn. Mortimer.

INNATE. } adj. [inné, French; innatus, Latin.]

1. Inborn; ingenerate; natural; not superadded; not adscititious. Innate is not proper.

The Druidian hath been cried up for an innate integrity, and accounted the uprightest dealer on earth. Howel.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the people charm'd. Dryden.

2. Innate is used in the following passage for inherent. Innate in persons, inherent in things.

Mutual gravitation, or spontaneous attraction, cannot possibly be innate and essential to matter. Bentley.

INNA'TENESS. n. f. [from innate.] The quality of being innate.

INNAVIGABLE. adj. [innavigabilis, Lat.] Not to be passed by sailing.

If you so hard a toil will undertake,
As twice to pass th' innavigable lake. Dryden.

INNER. adj. [from in.] Interior; not outward.

But th' elfin knight with wonder all the way
Did feed his eyes, and fill'd his inner thought. Spenser.

This attracts the soul,
Governs the inner man, the nobler part;
That other o'er the body only reigns. Milton.

Many families are established in the West Indies, and some discovered in the inner parts of America. Addison's Spectator.

The kidney is a conglomerated gland, which is to be understood only of the outer-part; for the inner part, whereof the papillæ are composed, is muscular. Grew.

Thus, seiz'd with sacred fear, the monarch pray'd;
Then to his inner court the guests convey'd. Pope.

INNERMOST. adj. [from inner. It seems less proper than inmost.] Remotest from the outward part.

The reflected beam of light would be so broad at the distance of six feet from the speculum, where the rings appeared, as to obscure one or two of the innermost rings. Newton.

INNHO'LDER. n. f. [inn and hold.] A man who keeps an inn; an innkeeper.

INNINGS. n. f. Lands recovered from the sea. Ainsworth.

INNKE'PER. n. f. [inn and keeper.] One who keeps lodgings and provisions for the entertainment of travellers.

Clergymen must not keep a tavern, nor a judge be an innkeeper. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

A factious innkeeper was hanged, drawn, and quartered. Addison's Freeholder.

We were not so inquisitive about the inn as the innkeeper; and provided our landlord's principles were sound, did not take any notice of the falseness of his provisions. Addison.

INNOCENCE. } n. f. [innocence, French; innocentia, Latin.]

1. Purity from injurious action; untainted integrity.

Simplicity and spotless innocence. Milton.
What comfort does overflow the devout soul,
From a consciousness of its own innocence and integrity! Tillotson.

2. Freedom from guilt imputed.

It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whit'it part black. Shaksp.

If truth and upright innocency fail me,
I'll to the king my master. Shakspeare.

3. Harmlessness; innoxiousness.

The air was calm and serene; none of those tumultuary motions and conflicts of vapours, which the mountains and the winds cause in ours: 'twas suited to a golden age, and to the first innocency of nature. Burnet's Theory.

4. Simplicity of heart, perhaps with some degree of weakness.

I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence. Shaksp.

We laugh at the malice of apes, as well as at the innocence of children. Temple.

INNOCENT. adj. [innocent, French; innocens, Latin.]

1. Pure from mischief.

Something
You may deserve of him through me and wisdom,
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
T' appease an angry god. Shakspeare.

Wreck on innocent frail man his loss. Milton.

2. Free from any particular guilt.

Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;
The man is innocent. Shakspeare.

The peasant, innocent of all these ills,
With crooked ploughs the fertile fallows tills,
And the round year with daily labour fills. Dryden.

The most dangerous poisons, skilfully managed, may be made not only innocuous, but of all other medicines the most effectual. Grew.

INNO'CUOUSLY. adv. [from innocuous.]

Without mischievous effects.

Whether quails, from any peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medically use the same. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INNO'CUOUSNESS. n. f. [from innocuous.]

Harmlessness.

The blow which shakes a wall, or beats it down, and kills men, hath a greater effect on the mind than that which penetrates into a mud wall, and doth little harm; for that innocuousness of the effect makes, that, although in itself it be as great as the other, yet 'tis little observed. Digby.

To INNOVATE. v. a. [innover, Fr. innovo, Latin.]

1. To bring in something not known before.

Men pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon, and care not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniences. Bacon.

Former things
Are set aside like abdicated kings;
And every moment alters what is done,
And innovates some act 'till then unknown.

Dryden.

Every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry; every man therefore is not fit to innovate.

Dryden.

2. To change by introducing novelties.

From his attempts upon the civil power, he proceeds to innovate God's worship.

South.

INNOVATION. n. f. [innovation, French, from innovate.] Change by the introduction of novelty.

The love of things ancient doth argue staydness; but levity and want of experience maketh apt unto innovations.

Hooker.

It were good that men in innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees.

Bacon's Essays.

Great changes may be made in a government, yet the form continue; but large intervals of time must pass between every such innovation, enough to make it of a piece with the constitution.

Swift.

INNOVATOR. n. f. [innovateur, French; from innovate.]

1. An introducer of novelties.

I attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to th' publick weal.

Shakspeare.

He that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator: and if time of course alter things to the worse, and wisdom and council shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end?

Bacon's Essays.

2. One that makes changes by introducing novelties.

He counsels them to detest and persecute all innovators of divine worship.

South.

INNOXIOUS. adj. [innoxius, Latin.]

1. Free from mischievous effects.

Innoxious flames are often seen on the hair of men's heads and horses' manes.

Digby.

Brown.

Sent by the better genius of the night,
Innoxious gleaming on the horse's mane

The meteor sits.

Thomson's Autumn.

2. Pure from crimes.

Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innoxious through his age.

Pope.

INNOXIOUSLY. adv. [from innoxious.]

1. Harmlessly; without harm done.

2. Without harm suffered.

Animals, that can innoxiously digest these poisons, become antidotal to the poison digested.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INNOXIOUSNESS. n. f. [from innoxious.]
Harmlessness.

INNUENDO. n. f. [innuendo, from innuo, Latin.] An oblique hint.

As if the commandments, that require obedience and forbid murder, were to be indicted for a libellous innuendo upon all the great men that come to be concerned.

L'Estrange

Mercury, though employed on a quite contrary errand, owns it a marriage by an innuendo.

Dryd.

Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints that Stella is no chicken;

Your innuendoes, when you tell us,
That Stella loves to talk with fellows.

Swift.

INNUMERABLE. adj. [innumerable, Fr. innumerabilis, Lat.] Not to be counted for multitude.

You have sent innumerable substance
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities.

Shakspeare.

VOL. I.

Cover me, ye pines,
Ye cedars! with innumerable boughs
Hide me where I may never see them more.

Milton.

In lines, which appear of an equal length, one may be longer than the other by innumerable parts

Locke.

INNUMERABLY. adv. [from innumerable.] Without number.

INNUMEROUS. adj. [innumerus, Latin.]
Too many to be counted.

'Twould be some solace yet, some little cheering,

In this close dungeon of innumeros boughs.

Milton.

I take the wood,
And in thick shelter of innum'rous boughs,
Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows.

Pope.

TO INOCULATE. v. n. [inoculo, in and oculus, Lat.] To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Not are the ways alike in all
How to ingraft, how to inoculate.

May's Virgil.

Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month.

Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the state,
To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate.

Dryden.

TO INOCULATE. v. a. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Thy stock is too much out of date,
For tender plants t' inoculate.

Cleaveland.

Where lilies, in a lovely brown,
Inoculate carnation.

Cleaveland.

INOCULATION. n. f. [inoculatio, Latin; from inoculate.]

1. The act of inserting the eye of a bud into another stock.

Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone fruit, and upon oranges and jasmines. Chuse a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make an horizontal cut cross the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the footstalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing: then raising the bark of the stock, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud.

Miller.

In the stem of Elaiana they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation.

Howel.

2. The practice of transplanting the smallpox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection.

Quincy.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease.

Arbutnot.

INOCULATOR. n. f. [from inoculate.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the smallpox by inoculation.

Had John a Gaddefsden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators.

Freind's History of Physick.

1. Judicial inquiry or examination.

What confusion of face shall we be under, when that grand inquest begins; when an account of our opportunities of doing good, and a particular of our use or misuse of them, is given in? Atterb.

2. In law.

The inquest of jurors, or by jury, is the most usual trial of all causes, both civil and criminal; for in civil causes, after proof is made on either side, so much as each part thinks good for himself, if the doubt be in the fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, impanelled by the sheriff; and as they bring in their verdict so judgment passes: for the judge saith, The jury finds the fact thus; then is the law thus, and so we judge. Cowell.

3. Inquiry; search; study.

This is the laborious and vexatious inquest that the soul must make after science. South.

INQUIETUDE. n. f. [inquietude, Fr. inquietudo, inquietus, Lat.] Disturbed state; want of quiet; attack on the quiet.

Having had such experience of his fidelity and observance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him at home from any farther inquietude. Wotton.

Iron, that has stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude and discontentment 'till it attain the former position. Wotton.

The youthful hero, with returning light, Rose anxious from th' inquietudes of night. Pope.

TO INQUINATE. v. a. [inquinare, Lat.]

To pollute; to corrupt.

An old opinion it was, that the ibis feeding upon serpents, that venomous food so inquinated their oval conceptions, that they sometimes came forth in serpentine shapes. Brown.

INQUINATION. n. f. [inquinatio, Latin; from inquinate.] Corruption; pollution.

Their causes and axioms are so full of imagination, and so infected with the old received theories, as they are mere inquinations of experience, and concoct it not. Bacon.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called by some of the ancients inquinatio, or incoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.

INQUIRABLE. adj. [from inquire.] That of which inquisition or inquest may be made.

TO INQUIRE. v. n. [enquirer, French; inquirere, Latin.]

1. To ask questions; to make search; to exert curiosity on any occasion: with of before the person asked.

INQUIRER. n. f. [from inquire.]

1. Searcher; examiner; one curious and inquisitive.

What satisfaction may be obtained from those violent disputers, and eager inquirers into what day of the month the world began? Brown.

What's good, doth open to th' inquirers, stand,
And itself offers to th' accepting hand. Denham.
Superficial inquirers may satisfy themselves that the parts of matter are united by ligaments. Glanville's Scepis.

This is a question only of inquirers, not disputers, who neither affirm nor deny, but examine. Locke.

Late inquirers by their glasses find,
That ev'ry insect of each different kind,
In its own egg, chear'd by the solar rays, Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackm.

2. One who interrogates; one who questions.

INQUIRY. n. f. [from inquire.]

1. Interrogation; search by question.

The men which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate. Acts.

2. Examination; search.

This exactness is absolutely necessary in inquiries after philosophical knowledge, and in controversies about truth. Locke.

As to the inquiry about liberty, I think the question is not proper, whether the will be free, but whether a man be free? Locke.

I have been engaged in physical inquiries. Locke.

It is a real inquiry, concerning the nature of a bird, or a bat, to make their yet imperfect ideas of it more complete. Locke.

Judgment or opinion, in a remoter sense, may be called invention: as when a judge or a physician makes an exact inquiry into any cause. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

INQUISITION. n. f. [inquisition, Fr. inquisition, Latin.]

1. Judicial inquiry.

When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them; he forgetteth not the cry of the humble. Psalms.

When inquisition was made of the matter, it was found out. Esther.

With much severity, and strict inquisition, were punished the adherents and aiders of the late rebels. Bacon's Henry VII.

Though it may be impossible to recollect every failing, yet you are so far to exercise an inquisition upon yourself, as, by observing lesser particulars, you may the better discover what the corruption of your nature sways you to. Taylor.

By your good leave,
These men will be your judges: we must stand.
The inquisition of their rallery
On our condition. Southern.

INSIGHT. n. f. [insicht, Dutch.] This word had formerly the accent on the last syllable.] Introspection; deep view; knowledge of the interior parts; thorough skill in any thing.

Hardy shepherd, such as thy merits, such may be her insight justly to grant thee reward. Sidney.

Straightway sent with careful diligence
To fetch a leech, the which had great insight
In that disease of griev'd conscience,
And well could cure the same; his name was Patience. Spenser.

Now will be the right season of forming them to be able writers, when they shall be thus fraught with an universal insight into things. Milton.

The use of a little insight in those parts of knowledge, which are not a man's proper business, is to accustom our minds to all sorts of ideas. Locke.

A garden gives us a great insight into the contrivance and wisdom of providence, and suggests innumerable subjects of meditation. Spectator.

Due consideration, and a deeper insight into things, would soon have made them sensible of their error. Woodward.

INSIGNIFICANCE. } n. f. [insignificance, INSIGNIFICANCY. } French; from insignificant.]

1. Want of meaning; unmeaning terms.

To give an account of all the insignificancies and verbal nothings of this philosophy, would be to transcribe it. Glanville.

2. Unimportance.

As I was ruminating on that I had seen, I could not forbear reflecting on the insignificance of human art, when set in comparison with the designs of providence. Addison.

My annals are in mouldy mildews wrought,
With easy insignificance of thought. Garth.

INSIGNIFICANT. adj. [in and significant.]

1. Wanting meaning; void of signification.

'Till you can weight and gravity explain,
Those words are insignificant and vain. Blackm.

2. Unimportant; wanting weight; ineffectual. This sense, though supported by authority, is not very proper.

That I might not be vapoured down by insignificant testimonies, I presumed to use the great name of your society to annihilate all such arguments. Glanv. Sceptis, Preface.

Calumny robs the publick of all that benefit that it may justly claim from the worth and virtue of particular persons, by rendering their virtue utterly insignificant. South.

All the arguments to a good life will be very insignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon cheap terms. Tillotson.

Nothing can be more contemptible and insignificant than the scum of a people, intigated against a king. Addison.

In a hemorrhage from the lungs, no remedy so proper as bleeding, often repeated: stypticks are often insignificant. Arbutnot.

INSIGNIFICANTLY. adv. [from insignificant.]

1. Without meaning.

Birds are taught to use articulate words, yet they understand not their import, but use them insignificantly, as the organ or pipe renders the tune, which it understands not. Hale.

2. Without importance or effect.

INSINCERE. adj. [insincerus, Lat. in and sincere.]

1. Not what he appears; not hearty; dissembling; unfaithful: of persons.

2. Not sound; corrupted: of things.

Ah why, Penelope, this causeless fear
To render sleep's soft blessings insincere?
Alike devote to sorrow's dire extreme,
The day reflection, and the midnight dream. Pope.

INSINCERITY. n. f. [from insincere.]

Disimulation; want of truth or fidelity.

If men should always act under a mask, and in disguise, that indeed betrays design and insincerity. Broome on the Odyssey.

To INSINCERE. v. a. [in and sincere.] To strengthen; to confirm. Not used.

All members of our cause,
That are insincere to this action. Shakspeare.

INSINUANT. adj. [French.] Having the power to gain favour.

Men not so quick perhaps of conceit as flow to passions, and commonly less inventive than judicious, howsoever prove very plausible, insinuant, and fortunate men. Wotton.

To INSINUATE. v. a. [insinuo, Fr. insinuo, Latin.]

1. To introduce any thing gently.

The water easily insinuates itself into and placidly distends the vessels of vegetables. Woodw.

2. To push gently into favour or regard: commonly with the reciprocal pronoun.

There is no particular evil which hath not some appearance of goodness, whereby to insinuate itself. Hooker.

At the isle of Rhee he insinuated himself into the very good grace of the duke of Buckingham. Clarendon.

3. To hint; to impart indirectly.

And all the fictions hard pursue
Do but insinuate what's true. Swift.

4. To instil; to infuse gently.

All the art of rhetoric, besides order and clearness, are for nothing else but to insinuate wrong ideas, move the passions, and thereby mislead the judgment. Locke.

To INSINUATE. v. n.

1. To wheedle; to gain on the affections by gentle degrees.

I love no colours; and without all colour
Of base insinuating flattery,
I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet. Shaks.

2. To steal into imperceptibly; to be conveyed insensibly.

Pestilential miasms insinuate into the humors and consistent parts of the body. Harvey.

3. I know not whether Milton does not use this word, according to its etymology, for, to enfold; to wreath; to wind.

Close the serpent fly
Insinuating, of his fatal guile Gave proof unheeded. Milton.

INSINUATION. n. f. [insinuatio, Latin; insinuation, French; from insinuate.] The power of pleasing or stealing upon the affections.

When the industry of one man hath settled the work, a new man, by insinuation or misinformation, may not supplant him without a just cause. Bacon.

He had a natural insinuation and address, which made him acceptable in the best company. Clarendon.

INSINUATIVE. adj. [from insinuate.]

Stealing on the affections.

It is a strange insinulative power which example and custom have upon us. Government of the Tongue.

INSINUATOR. n. f. [insinator, Latin.]

He that insinuates. Ainsworth.

INSIPID. adj. [insipide, French; insipidus, Latin.]

1. Wanting taste; wanting power of affecting the organs of gust.

Some earths yield, by distillation, a liquor very far from being inodorous or insipid. Boyle.

Our fathers much admir'd their sauces sweet,
And often call'd for sugar with their meat;
Insipid taste, old friend, to them that Paris knew,
Where recambole, thallot, and the rank garlick grew. King.

This chyle is the natural and alimentary puita, which the ancients described as insipid. Floyer on the Humours.

She lays some useful bile aside,
To tinge the chyle's insipid tide. Prior.

2. Wanting spirit; wanting pathos; flat; dull; heavy.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for Ptolemy;
A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of ashes that o'erlays your fire. Dryden.

Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryden.

INSIPIDITY. n. f. [insipidité, French; INSIPIDNESS. n. f. [from insipid.]

1. Want of taste.

Dryden's lines shine strongly through the insipidity of Tate's. Pope.

INSIPIDLY. adv. [from insipid.]

1. Without taste.

2. Dully; without spirit.

One great reason why many children abandon themselves wholly to silly sports, and trifle away all their time insipidly, is because they have found their curiosity balked. Locke.

INSIPIENCE. n. f. [insipientia, Latin.]

Folly; want of understanding.

To INSIST. v. n. [insister, French; insisto, Latin.]

1. To stand or rest upon.

The combs being double, the cells on each side the partition are so ordered, that the angles on one side insist upon the centers of the bottom of the cells on the other side. Ray.

2. Not to recede from terms or assertions; to persist in.

Upon such large terms, and so absolute,
As our conditions shall insist upon,
Our peace shall stand firm as rocky mountains. Shakspeare.

3. To dwell upon in discourse.

Were there no other act of hostility but that which we have hitherto insisted on, the intercepting of her supplies were irreparably injurious to her, Decay of Piety.

INSISTENT. adj. [insistens, Latin.] Resting upon any thing.

The breadth of the substruction must be at least double to the insistent wall. Wotton.

INSISTURE. n. f. [from insist.] This word seems in Shakspeare to signify constancy or regularity, but is now not used.

The heav'ns themselves, the planets, and the center,

Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
Office and custom, in all line of order. Shakspeare.

INSITIENCY. n. f. [in and sitio, Latin.]

Exemption from thirst.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for the use we make of him? The docility of an elephant, and the insitency of a camel for travelling in deserts. Grew.

INSITION. n. f. [insitio, Latin.] The insertion or ingraftment of one branch into another.

Without the use of these we could have nothing of culture or civility: no tillage, grafting, or insition. Ray.

To INSNARE. v. a. [in and snare.]

1. To intrap; to catch in a trap, gin, or snare; to inveigle.

Why strew'st thou sugar on that bottled spider,
Whose deadly web insnares thee about? Shakspeare.
She insnar'd

Mankind with her fair looks. Milton.

By long experience Dursley may no doubt

Insnares a gudgeon, or perhaps a trout;

Though Dryden once exclaim'd in partial spite;
He fish!—because the man attempts to write. Fenton.

2. To entangle in difficulties or perplexities.

That which in a great part, in the weightiest causes belonging to this present controversy, hath insnares the judgments both of sundry good and of some well learned men, is the manifest truth of certain general principles, whereupon the ordinances that serve for usual practice in the church of God are grounded. Hooker.

That the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be insnares. Job.

3. Ensnare is more frequent.

INSNARE. n. f. [from insnare.] He that insnares.

INSOCIABLE. adj. [insociable, French; insociabilis, Latin.]

1. Averse from conversation.

If this austere insociable life
Change not your offer made in heat of blood. Shakspeare.

2. Incapable of connexion or union.

The lowest ledge or row must be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar, which is a general caution for all parts in building that are contiguous to board or timber, because lime and wood are insociable. Wotton's Architecture.

INSOBRIETY. n. f. [in and sobriety.]

Drunkenness; want of sobriety.

He whose conscience upbraids him with profaneness towards God, and insobriety towards himself, if he is just to his neighbour, he thinks he has quit scores. Decay of Piety.

To INSOLATE. v. a. [insolo, Latin.]

To dry in the sun; to expose to the action of the sun.

INSOLATION. n. f. [insolation, French; from insolate.] Exposition to the sun.

We use these towers for insolation, refrigeration, conservation, and for the view of divers meteors. Bacon.

If it have not a sufficient insolation it looketh pale, and attains not its laudable colour; if it be sunned too long, it suffereth a torrefaction. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INSOLENCE. } n. f. [insolence, French; insolentia, Lat.] Pride exerted in contemptuous and overbearing treatment of others; petulant contempt.

They could not restrain the insolency of O'Neal, who, finding none now to withstand him, made himself lord of those people that remained. Spenser on Ireland.

Such a nature
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon; but I do wonder
His insolence can brook to be commanded Under Corninius. Shakspeare.

Blown with insolence and wine. Milton.
Publick judgments are the banks and shores upon which God breaks the insolency of sinners, and stays their proud waves. Tillotson.

The steady tyrant man,
Who with the thoughtless insolence of power,
For sport alone, pursues the cruel chase. Thomf.
The fear of any violence, either against her own person or against her son, might deter Penelope from using any endeavours to remove men of such insolence and power. Broome.

TO INSOLENCY. v. a. [from the noun.] To insult; to treat with contempt. A very bad word.

The bishops, who were first faulty, insolenced and assaulted. King Charles.

INSOLENT. adj. [insolent, French; insolens, Latin.] Contemptuous of others; haughty; overbearing.

We have not pillaged those rich provinces which we rescued: victory itself hath not made us insolent masters. Atterbury.

INSOLENTLY. adv. [insolenter, Latin.] With contempt of others; haughtily; rudely.

What I must disprove,
He insolently talk'd to me of love. Dryden.

Not faction, when it shook thy regal seat,
Not senates, insolently loud,
Those echoes of a thoughtless crowd,
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree. Dryd.

Briant, naturally of an haughty temper, treated him very insolently, more like a criminal than a prisoner of war. Addison.

INSOLVABLE. adj. [insolvable, French; in and solve.]

1. Not to be solved; not to be cleared; inextricable; such as admits of no solution, or explication.

Spend a few thoughts on the puzzling enquiries concerning vacuums, the doctrine of infinites, indivisibles, and incommensurables, wherein there appear some insolvable difficulties. Watts on the Mind.

2. That cannot be paid.
INSOLUBLE. adj. [insoluble, French; insolubilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be cleared; not to be resolved. Admit this, and what shall the scripture be but a snare and a torment to weak consciences, filling them with infinite scrupulosities, doubts insoluble, and extreme despair. Hooker.

2. Not to be dissolved or separated. Stony matter may grow in any part of a human body; for when any thing insoluble sticks in any part of the body, it gathers a crust about it. Arbuthnot on Diet.

INSOLVENT. adj. [in and solvo, Latin.] Unable to pay.

By public declaration he proclaimed himself insolvent of those vast sums he had taken upon credit. Howel.

A farmer accused his guards for robbing him of oxen, and the emperor shot the offenders; but demanding reparation of the accuser for so many brave fellows, and finding him insolvent, compounded the matter by taking his life. Addison.

An insolvent is a man that cannot pay his debts. Watts.

Insolvent tenant of incumber'd space. Smart.
INSOLVENCY. n. f. [from insolvent.] Inability to pay debts. An act of insolvency is a law by which imprisoned debtors are released without payment.

INSOMUCH. conj. [in so much.] So that; to such a degree that. This word is growing obsolete.

It hath ever been the use of the conqueror to despise the language of the conquered, and to force him to learn his: so did the Romans always use, insomuch that there is no nation but is sprinkled with their language. Spenser.

To make ground fertile, ashes excel; insomuch as the countries about Aetna have amended made them, for the mischiefs the eruptions do. Bacon's Natural History.

Simonides was an excellent poet, insomuch that he made his fortune by it. L'Estrange.

They made the ground uneven about their nest, insomuch that the slate did not lie flat upon it, but left a free passage underneath. Addison.

TO INSPECT. v. a. [inspicio, inspectum, Latin.] To look into by way of examination.

INSPECTION. n. f. [inspection, Fr. inspectio, Latin.]

1. Prying examination; narrow and close survey.

With narrow search, and with inspection deep,
Consider every creature. Milton.

Our religion is a religion that dares to be understood; that offers itself to the search of the inquisitive, to the inspection of the severest and the most awakened reason; for, being secure of her substantial truth and purity, she knows that for her to be seen and looked into, is to be embraced and admired, as there needs no greater argument for men to love the light than to see it. South.

2. Superintendence; presiding care. In the first sense it should have into before the object, and in the second sense may admit over; but authors confound them.

We may safely conceal our good deeds, when they run no hazard of being diverted to improper ends, for want of our own inspection. Atterbury.

We should apply ourselves to study the perfections of God, and to procure lively and vigorous impressions of his perpetual presence with us, and inspection over us. Atterbury.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world, doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence. Bentley.

INSPECTOR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A prying examiner. With their new light our bold inspectors press, Like Cham, to shew their father's nakedness. Denham.

2. A superintendent. Young men may travel under a wise inspector or tutor to different parts, that they may bring home useful knowledge. Watts.

INSPECTION. n. f. [inspersio, Latin.] A sprinkling upon.

TO INSPIRE. v. a. [in and sphere.] To place in an orb or sphere.

Where those immortal shapes
Of bright aerial spirits live inspher'd,
In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton.

INSPIRABLE. adj. [from inspire.] Which may be drawn in with the breath; which may be infused.

To these inspirable hurts, we may enumerate those they sustain from their expiration of fuliginous streams. Harvey.

INSPIRATION. n. f. [from inspire.]

1. The act of drawing in the breath.

In any inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a plury, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot.

2. The act of breathing into any thing.
3. Infusion of ideas into the mind by a superiour power.

I never spoke with her in all my life.
—How can she then call us by our names,
Unless it be by inspiration? Shakspeare.

Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations. Shakspeare.

We to his high inspiration owe,
That what was done before the flood we know. Denham.

What the tragedian wrote, the late success
Declares was inspiration, and not guess. Denham.

Inspiration is when an overpowering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it: so were the prophets and the apostles inspired. Watts.

TO INSPIRE. v. n. [inspiro, Lat. inspirer, French.] To draw in the breath: opposed to expire.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stoppt, it suddenly yields to nature and dies. Walton.

TO INSPIRE. v. a.
1. To breathe into.

Ye nine, descend and sing,
The breathing instruments inspire. Pope.

2. To infuse by breathing. He knew not his Maker, and he that inspired into him an active soul, and breathed in a living spirit. Wisdom.

3. To infuse into the mind; to impress upon the fancy.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shakspeare.

Then to the heart inspir'd
Vernal delight. Milton.

4. To animate by supernatural infusion. Nor th' inspir'd Castalian spring. Milton.

Erato, thy poet's mind inspire,
And fill his soul with thy celestial fire. Dryden.

The letters are often read to the young religious, to inspire them with sentiments of virtue. Addison.

5. To draw in with the breath.

By means of sulphurous coal smoaks the lungs are stifled and oppressed, whereby they are forced to inspire and expire the air with difficulty, in comparison of the facility of inspiring and expiring the air in the country. Harvey.

His baleful breath inspiring as he glides;
Now like a chain around her neck he rides. Dryd.

INSPIRER. n. f. [from inspire.] He that inspires.

To the infinite God, the omnipotent creator and preserver of the world, the most gracious redeemer, sanctifier, and inspicer of mankind, be all honour. Denham.

TO INSPIRIT. v. a. [in and spirit.] To animate; to actuate; to fill with life and vigour; to enliven; to invigorate; to encourage.

It has pleased God to inspirit and actuate all his evangelical methods by a concurrence of supernatural strength, which makes it not only eligible but possible; easy and pleasant to do whatever he commands us. Decay of Piety.

A discreet use of becoming ceremonies renders the service of the church solemn and affecting, inspirits the sluggish, and inflames even the devout worshipper. Atterbury.

The courage of Agamemnon is inspired by love of empire and ambition. Pope.

Let joy or ease, let affluence or content,
And the gay conscience of a life well spent,

*Calm ev'ry thought, inspirit ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.*

TO INSPISSATE. v. a. [in and spissus, Lat.] To thicken; to make thick.

Sugar doth inspissate the spirits of the wine, and maketh them not so easy to resolve into vapour. Bacon.

This oil farther inspissated by evaporation turns into balm. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INSPISSATION. n. f. [from inspissate.]

The act of making any liquid thick.

The effect is wrought by the inspissation of the air. Bacon.

Recent urine will crystalize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbuthnot.

INSTABILITY. n. f. [instabilité, Fr. instabilitas, from instabilis, Lat.] Inconstancy; fickleness; mutability of opinion or conduct.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another; such a fickleness cannot but be fatal to our country. Addison.

INSTABLE. adj. [instabilis, Lat.] Inconstant; changing. See UNSTABLE.

TO INSTALL. v. a. [installer, Fr. in and stall.] To advance to any rank or office, by placing in the seat or stall proper to that condition.

She reigns a goddess now among the saints, That whilom was the saint of shepherds light, And is installed now in heaven's high. Spenser.

Cranmer is return'd with welcome, Install'd archbishop of Canterbury. Shakespeare.

The king chose him master of the horse, after this he was installed of the most noble order. Wotton.

INSTALLATION. n. f. [installation, French; from install.] The act of giving visible possession of a rank or office, by placing in the proper seat.

Upon the election the bishop gives a mandate for his installation. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INSTALLMENT. n. f. [from install.]

1. The act of installing.

Is it not easy

To make lord William Hastings of our mind, For the installment of this noble duke In the seat royal? Shakespeare.

2. The seat in which one is installed.

Search Windsor-castle, elves,

The several chairs of order look you scour; Each fair installment, coat and several crest With loyal blazon evermore be blest! Shaksp.

INSTANCE. } n. f. [instance, Fr.]

INSTANCY. } n. f. [instance, Fr.]

1. Importunity; urgency; solicitation.

Christian men should much better frame themselves to those heavenly precepts which our Lord and Saviour with so great instancy gave us concerning peace and unity, if we did concur to have the ancient councils renewed. Hooker.

2. Motive; influence; pressing argument. Not in use.

She dwells so securely upon her honour, that folly dares not present itself. Now, could I come to her with any direction in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The instances that second marriage move, Are base respects of thrift, but none of love. Shakespeare.

3. Prosecution or process of a suit.

The instance of a cause is said to be that judicial process which is made from the contestation of a suit, even to the time of pronouncing sentence in the cause, or till the end of three years. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. Example; document.

Yet doth this accident So far exceed all instance, all discourse, That I am ready to distrust mine eyes. Shaksp.

In furnaces of copper and brass, where vitriol is often cast in, there riseth suddenly a fly, which sometimes moveth on the walls of the furnace; sometimes in the fire below; and dieth presently as soon as it is out of the furnace: which is a noble instance, and worthy to be weighed. Bacon.

We find in history instances of persons, who, after their prisons have been flung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons, than stake their miserable lives and fortunes upon the success of a revolution. Addison.

The greatest saints are sometimes made the most remarkable instances of suffering. Atterbury.

Suppose the earth should be removed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orbit of Mercury, the whole ocean would boil with heat. Bentley.

The use of instances is to illustrate and explain a difficulty; and this end is best answered by such instances as are familiar and common. Baker.

5. State of any thing.

He could no more live without his first coat than without his skin: it is not indeed so perly his coat, as what the anatomists call one of the integuments of the body. Addison.

INTELLECT. n. f. [intellect, French; intellectus, Latin.] The intelligent mind; the power of understanding.

All heart they live, all head, all eye, all ear,
All intellect, all sense. Milton.

All those arts, rarities, and inventions, which vulgar minds gaze at, and the ingenious pursue, are but the reliques of an intellect defaced with sin and time. South.

INTELLECTION. n. f. [intellection, Fr. intellectio, Latin.] The act of understanding.

Simple apprehension denotes the soul's naked intellection of an object, without either composition or deduction. Glanville's Sceptis.

They will say 'tis not the bulk or substance of the animal spirit, but its motion and agility, that produces intellection and sense. Bentley.

INTELLECTIVE. adj. [intellectif, French; from intellect.] Having power to understand.

If a man as intellective be created, then either he means the whole man, or only that by which he is intellective. Glanville.

INTELLECTUAL. adj. [intellectuel, Fr. intellectualis, low Latin.]

1. Relating to the understanding; belonging to the mind; transacted by the understanding.

Religion teaches us to present to God our bodies as well as our souls: if the body serves the soul in actions natural and civil, and intellectual, it must not be eased in the only offices of religion. Taylor.

2. Mental; comprising the faculty of understanding; belonging to the mind. Logick is to teach us the right use of our reason, or intellectual powers. Watts.

3. Ideal; perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

In a dark vision's intellectual scene,
Beneath a bow'r for sorrow made,
The melancholy Cowley lay.
A train of phantoms in wild order rose,
And, join'd, this intellectual scene compose. Pope.

4. Having the power of understanding. Anaxagoras and Plato term the Maker of the world an intellectual worker. Hooker.

Who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
To perish rather, swallow'd up and lost,
In the wide womb of uncreated night,
Devoid of sense and motion? Milton.

5. Proposed as the object not of the senses but intellect: as, Cudworth names his book the intellectual system of the universe.

INTELLECTUAL. n. f. Intellect; understanding; mental powers or faculties. Little in use.

Her husband not nigh,
Whose higher intellectual more I shun. Milton.
The fancies of most, like the index of a clock, are moved but by the inward springs of the corporeal machine; which, even on the most sublimed intellectual, is dangerously influential. Glanville's Sceptis.

I have not consulted the repute of my intellectuals, in bringing their weaknesses into such discerning preferences. Glanville.

INTELLIGENCE. } n. f. [intelligence, Fr. intelligence, Latin.]

1. Commerce of information; notice; mutual communication; account of things distant or secret.

true intelligence might pass between them of what was done. Hooker.

A mankind witch! hence with her, out of door!

A most intelligence bawd! Shakspeare.

He furnished his employed men liberally with money, to draw on and reward intelligences; giving them also in charge to advertise continually what they found. Bacon's Henry VII.

The advertisements of neighbour princes are always to be regarded, for that they receive intelligence from better authors than persons of inferior note. Hayward.

Let all the passages
Be well secur'd, that no intelligence
May pass between the prince and them. Denham.

Those tales had been sung to lull children asleep, before ever Berosus set up his intelligence office at Coos. Bentley.

2. Commerce of acquaintance; terms on which men live one with another.

Factionous followers are worse to be liked, which follow not upon affection to him with whom they range themselves; whereupon commonly ensueth that ill intelligence that we see between great personages. Bacon.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence, than any friendship with the favourites. Clarendon.

3. Spirit; unbodied mind.

How fully hast thou satisfied me, pure
Intelligence of heav'n, angel! Milton.

There are divers ranks of created beings intermediate between the glorious God and man, as the glorious angels and created intelligences. Hale.

They hoped to get the favour of the houses, and by the favour of the houses they hoped for that of the intelligences, and by their favours, for that of the supreme God. Stillingfleet.

The regularity of motion, visible in the great variety and curiosity of bodies, is a demonstration that the whole mass of matter is under the conduct of a mighty intelligence. Collier.

Satan, appearing like a cherub to Uriel, the intelligence of the sun, circumvented him even in his own province. Dryden.

4. Understanding; skill.

Heaps of huge words, up hoarded hideously,
They think to be chief praise of poetry:
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poeie. Spenser.

INTELLIGENCER. n. f. [from intelligence.]

One who sends or conveys news; one who gives notice of private or distant transactions; one who carries messages between parties.

His eyes, being his diligent intelligencers, could carry unto him no other news but discomfortable. Sidney.

How deep you were within the books of heav'n?

To us, th' imagin'd voice of heav'n itself;
The very opener and intelligencer

Between the grace and sanctities of heav'n,
And our dull workings. Shakspeare.

If they had instructions to that purpose, they might be the best intelligencers to the king of the true state of his whole kingdom. Bacon.

They are the best sort of intelligencers; for they have a way into the inmost closets of princes. Howel.

They have news-gatherers and intelligencers, who make them acquainted with the conversation of the whole kingdom. Spektator.

INTELLIGENT. adj. [intelligent, French; intelligens, Latin.]

1. Knowing; instructed; skilful.

It is not only in order of nature for him to govern that is the more intelligent, as Aristotle would have it; but there is no less required for government, courage to protect, and above all honesty. Bacon.

He of times,
Intelligent, th' harsh hyperborean ice

Shuns for our equal winters; when our suns Cleave the chill'd foil, he backwards wings his way. Phillips.

Trace out the numerous footsteps of the presence and interposition of a most wise and intelligent architect throughout all this stupendous fabrick. Woodward.

2. It has of before the thing.

Some, as thou saw'st, by violent stroke shall die;

By fire, flood, famine, by intemperance more

In meats and drinks, which on the earth shall bring

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear; that thou may'st know
What misery th' inabstinence of Eve Shall bring on men. Milton.

The Lacedemonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness and intemperance, by bringing a drunken man into their company. Watts.

2. Excessive addition to any appetite or affection.

INTEMPERATE. adj. [intemperant, French; intemperatus, Latin.]

1. Immoderate in appetite; excessive in meat or drink; drunken; gluttonous.

More women should die than men, if the number of burials answered in proportion to that of sicknesses; but men, being more intemperate than women, die as much by reason of their vices, as women do by the infirmity of their sex. Graunt.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unanswerable doubts, which, over their cups or their coffee, they pretend to have against christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the intemperate man to abandon his revels, and I dare undertake that all their giant-like objections shall vanish. South.

2. Passionate; ungovernable; without rule.

You are more intemperate in your blood
Than those pamper'd animals
That rage in savage sensuality. Shakspeare.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

None
Can say here nature ends, and art begins,
But mixt like th' elements, and born like twins,
So interweav'd, so like, so much the same;
None, this mere nature, that mere art can name. Denham.

The proud theatres disclose the scene,
Which interwoven Britons seem to raise,
And show the triumph which their shame displays. Dryden.

He so interweaves truth with probable fiction, that he puts a pleasing fallacy upon us. Dryden.
It appeared a vast ocean planted with islands, that were covered with fruits and flowers, and interwoven with a thousand little flaming seas that ran among them. Addison.

Orchard and flower-garden lie so mixt and interwoven with one another, as to look like a natural wilderness. Spectator.

The Supreme Infinite could not make intelligent creatures, without implanting in their natures a most ancient desire, interwoven in the substance of their spiritual natures, of being reunited with himself. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.

I do not altogether disapprove the interweaving texts of scripture through the style of your sermon. Swift.

To INTERWISH. v. a. [inter and wish.]

To wish mutually to each other.

The venom of all stepdames, gamester's gall,
What tyrants and their subjects interwish,
All ill fall on that man. Donne.

INTESTABLE. adj. [intestabilis, Latin.]

Disqualified to make a will.

A person excommunicated is rendered infamous and intestable both actively and passively. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INTESTATE. adj. [intestat, Fr. intestatus, Lat.] Wanting a will; dying without a will.

Why should calamity be full of words?
—Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Airy succeders to intestate joys,
Poor breathing orators of miseries. Shakspeare.
Present punishment pursues his maw,
When forfeited and swell'd the peacock raw,
He bears into the bath; whence want of breath,
Repletions, apoplex, intestate death. Dryden.

INTESTINAL. adj. [intestinal, Fr. from intestine.] Belonging to the guts.

The mouths of the lacteals are opened by the intestinal tube, affecting a straight instead of a spiral cylinder. Arbuthnot.

INTESTINE. adj. [intestin, Fr. intestinus, Latin.]

1. Internal; inward; not external.

Of these inward and intestine enemies to prayer, there are our past sins to wound us, our present cares to distract us, our disordered passions to disorder us, and a whole swarm of loose and floating imaginations to molest us. Duppa.

Intestine war no more our passions wage,
Ev'n giddy factions bear away their rage. Pope.

2. Contained in the body.

Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
And moon-struck madness. Milton's Par. Lost.
A wooden jack, which had almost Lost, by disuse, the art to roast,
A sudden alteration feels,
Increas'd by new intestine wheels. Swift.

3. Domestick, not foreign. I know not whether the word be properly used in the following example of Shakspeare: perhaps for mortal and intestine should be read mortal internecine.

Since the mortal and intestine jars
'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
'T admit no traffick to our adverse towns. Shak.
But God, or Nature, while they thus contend,
To these intestine discords put an end. Dryden.
She saw her sons with purple death expire,
And dreadful series of intestine wars,
Inglorious triumphs and dishonest scars. Pope.

INTESTINE. n. s. [intestinum, Lat. intestines, Fr.] The gut; the bowel: most commonly without a singular.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by an acrid substance taken inwardly. Arbuthnot.

TO INTHRA'LL. v. a. [in and thrall.]

To enslave; to shackle; to reduce to servitude. A word now seldom used, at least in prose.

What though I be inthrall'd, he seems a knight,

And will not any way dishonour me. Shaksp.

The Turk has fought to extinguish the ancient memory of those people which he has subjected and inthrall'd. Raleigh.

Authors to themselves in all Both what they judge, and what they chuse;
for so

I form'd them free, and free they must remain Till they inthrall themselves. Milton's Par. Lost.

She soothes, but never can inthrall my mind:
Why may not peace and love for once be join'd?
Prior.

INTHRA'LEMENT. n. s. [from inthrall.]
Servitude; slavery.

Moses and Aaron sent from God to claim
His people from inthrallment, they return
With glory and spoil back to their promis'd land. Milton.

TO INTHRO'NE. v. a. [in and throne.]

To raise to royalty; to seat on a throne: commonly enthroone.

One, chief, in gracious dignity inthrone'd, Shines o'er the rest. Thomson's Summer.

INTIMACY. n. s. [from intimate.] Close familiarity.

It is in our power to confine our friendships and intimacies to men of virtue. Rogers.

INTIMATE. adj. [intimado, Spanish; intimus, Latin.]

1. Inmost; inward; intestine.

They knew not
That what I mention'd was of God, I knew From intimate impulse. Milton's Agonistes.

Fear being so intimate to our natures, it is the strongest bond of laws. Tillotson.

2. Near; not kept at distance.

Moses was with him in the retirements of the mount, received there his private instructions; and when the multitude were thundered away from any approach, he was honoured with an intimate and immediate admission. South.

3. Familiar; closely acquainted.

United by this sympathetick bond,
You grow familiar, intimate, and fond. Roscom.

INTIMATE. n. s. [intimado, Spanish; intime, French; intimus, Latin.] A familiar friend; one who is trusted with our thoughts.

The design was to entertain his reason with a more equal converse, assign him an intimate whose intellect as much corresponded with his as did the outward form. Gov. of the Tongue.

TO INTIMATE. v. a. [intimer, French; intimare, low Latin.] To hint; to point out indirectly, or not very plainly.

Alexander Van Suchten tells us, that by a way he intimates, may be made a mercury of copper, not of the silver colour of other mercuries, but green. Boyle.

The names of simple ideas and substances, with the abstract ideas in the mind, intimate some real existence, from which was derived their original pattern. Locke.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;

'Tis Heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison's Cato.

INTIMATELY. adv. [from intimate.]

1. Closely; with intermixture of parts.

The same œconomy is observed in the circulation of the chyle with the blood, by mixing it intimately with the parts of the fluid to which it is to be assimilated. Arbuthnot.

2. Nearly; inseparably.

Quality, as it regards the mind, has its rise from knowledge and virtue, and is that which is more essential to us, and more intimately united with us. Addison's Spectator.

3. Familiarly; with close friendship.

INTIMATION. n. s. [intimation, Fr. from intimate.] Hint; obscure or indirect declaration or direction.

Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations; the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in his heart. South.

Of those that are only probable we have some reasonable intimations, but not a demonstrative certainty. Woodward.

Besides the more solid parts of learning, there are several little intimations to be met with on medals. Addison.

INTIME. adj. Inward; being within the mafs; not being external, or on the surface; internal. Not used.

As to the composition or dissolution of mixed bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intime application of the agents, water hath the principality and excess over earth. Digby on Bodies.

TO INTIMIDATE. v. a. [intimider, Fr. in and timidus, Lat.] To make fearful; to daunt; to make cowardly.

At that tribunal stands the writing tribe,
Which nothing can intimidate or bribe;
Time is the judge. Young.

Now guilt once harbour'd in the conscious breast,
Intimidates the brave, degrades the great. Irene.

INTIRE. n. s. [integer, Lat. entier, Fr. better written entire, which see, and all its derivatives.] Whole; undiminished; unbroken.

The lawful power of making laws, to command whole politick societies of men, belongeth so properly unto the same intire societies, that for any prince to exercise the same of himself, and not either by express commission immediately and personally received from God, or else by authority derived at the first from their consent upon whose persons he imposes laws, it is no better than mere tyranny. Hooker.

INTIRENESS. n. s. [from intire: better entireness.] Wholeness; integrity.

So shall all times find me the same;
You this intireness better may fulfil,
Who have the pattern with you still. Donne.

INTO. prep. [in and to.]

1. Noting entrance with regard to place: opposed to out of.

Water introduces into vegetables the matter it bears along with it. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

Acrid substances, which pass into the capillary tubes, must irritate them into greater contraction. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Noting entrance of one thing into another.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance an habitual inclination to the site it held, how much more may education, being a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature? Wotton.

To give life to that which has yet no being, is to frame a living creature, fashion the parts, and having fitted them together, to put into them a living soul. Locke.

3. Noting penetration beyond the outside, or some action which reaches beyond the superficies or open part.

To look into letters already opened or dropt is held an ungenerous act. Pope.

4. Noting inclusion real or figurative.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Bacon.

5. Noting a new state to which any thing is brought by the agency of a cause.

Compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than such as they are divided into by the fire. Boyle.

A man must sin himself into a love of other mens sins; for a bare notion of this black art will not carry him so far. South.

Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate,
When the mad people rise against the state,
To look them into duty; and command
An awful silence with thy lifted hand. Dryden.

It concerns every man that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters. Tillotson.

He is not a frail being, that he should be tired into compliance by the force of assiduous application. Smalridge.

In hollow bottoms, if any fountains chance to rise, they naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can find any issue. Addison.

It would have been all irretrievably lost, was it not by this means collected and brought into one mass. Woodward.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author; and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterbury.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be always frightening men into an acknowledgment of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence. Atterbury.

A man may whore and drink himself into atheism; but it is impossible he should think himself into it. Bentley.

INTOLERABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Latin; intolerable, French.]

1. Insufferable; not to be endured; not to be born; having any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured.

If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it is unreasonable. Taylor.

His awful presence did the crowd surprise,
Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;
Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,
So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day. Dryden.

Some men are quickly weary of one thing;
the same study long continued in is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes is to a court lady. Locke.

From Param's top th' Almighty rode,
Intolerable day proclaim'd the God. Broome.

2. Bad beyond sufferance.

INTOLERABLENESS. n. f. [from intolerable.] Quality of a thing not to be endured.

INTOLERABLY. adv. [from intolerable.] To a degree beyond endurance.

INTOLERANT. adj. [intolerant, French.] Not enduring; not able to endure.

Too great moisture affects human bodies with one class of diseases, and too great dryness with another; the powers of human bodies being limited and intolerant of excesses. Arbuthnot.

To INTO'MB. v. a. [in and tomb.] To enclose in a funeral monument; to bury.

What commandment had the Jews for the ceremony of odours used about the bodies of their dead, after which custom notwithstanding our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intomb'd? Hooker.

Is't night's predominance or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb? Shakspeare.

Mighty heroes more majestic shades,
And youths intomb'd before their father's eyes. Dryden.

To INTONATE. v. a. [intono, Latin.] To thunder. Diſt.

INTONATION. n. f. [intonation, Fr. from intonate.] The act of thundering. Diſt.

To INTO'NE. v. n. [from intono, or rather from tone; intonner, French.] To make a slow protracted noise.

So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to as Harmonick twang. Pope's Dunciad.

To INTO'RT. v. a. [intortuo, Lat.] To twist; to wreath; to wring.

The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the blood, called animal spirits; and a gland is nothing but a canal variously intorted and wound up together. Arbuthnot.

With rev'rent hand the king presents the gold,
Which round th' intorted horns the gilder roll'd. Pope.

To INTOXICATE. v. a. [in and toxicum, Lat.] To inebriate; to make drunk.

The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicateth; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding, than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton.

My early mistress, now my ancient muse,
That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham.

What part of wild fury was there in the bac-chanals which we have not seen equal'd, if not exceeded by some intoxicated zealots?

Decay of Piety.

Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having different qualities from the plant; for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbuthnot.

INTOXICATION. n. f. [from intoxicate.]

Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.

That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Bacon.

Whence can this proceed, but from that besetting intoxication which verbal magick brings upon the mind. South.

INTRAC'TABLE. adj. [intraſtabilis, Lat. intraitable, French.]

1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obstinate.

To love them who love us is so natural a passion, that even the most intraſtable tempers obey its force. Rogers.

2. Unmanageable; furious.

By what means serpents, and other noxious and more intraſtable kinds, as well as the more innocent and useful, got together. Woodward.

INTRAC'TABLENESS. n. f. [from intraſtable.] Obstinacy; perverseness.

INTRAC'TABLY. adv. [from intraſtable.] Unmanageably; stubbornly.

INTRANQUILLITY. n. f. [in and tranquillity.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jactations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquillity which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.

INTRANSITIVE. adj. [intransitivus, Lat.]

[In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object: as, curro, I run. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

INTRANSMUTABLE. adj. [in and transmutabile.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutable, and therefore call it liquor æternus. Ray on the Creation.

To INTREASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.]

To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings he intreasur'd. Shakspeare.

To INTRENCH. v. n. [in and trencher, Fr.]

To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another: with on.

Little I desire my scepter should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. King Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.

To INTRENCH. v. a.

1. To break with hollows.

His face
Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
Sat on his faded cheek. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.

INTRENCHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakspeare, is thus explained: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by anybody which had passed through it. Hanmer. I believe Shakspeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakspeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakspeare.

INTRENCHMENT. n. f. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTREPID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Lat.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave. Argyle.

Calm and intrepid in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Tenier's dreadful field. Thomson.

INTREPIDITY. n. f. [intrepidité, French.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Gulliver's Travels.

INTREPIDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

INTRICACY. n. f. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Addison.

INTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Latin.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

His stile was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.

To INTRICATE. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use.

Alterations of surnames have so intricated, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.

INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

That variety of factions into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.

INTRICATENESS. n. f. [from intricate.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRIGUE. n. f. [intrigue, French.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man, These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Flatman.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Aldison.

The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue, And marriage grown a money league. Swift.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.

Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope.

To INTRIGUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs, commonly of love.

INTRIGUER. n. f. [intriguer, Fr. from intrigue.] One who buies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

I desire that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another. Addison.

INTRIGUINGLY. adv. [from intrigue.]

With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRINSECAL. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinseque, French.] This word is now generally written intrinsic, contrary to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctancy and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tillotson.

The near and intrinsecal, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Bentley.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.

He falls into intrinsecal society with sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage. Wotton.

Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsecal with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours. Wotton.

INTRINSECALLY. adv. [from intrinsecal.]

1. Internally; naturally; really.

A lye is a thing absolutely and intrinsecally evil. South.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsecally and solidly valuable. Prior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsecally. Wotton.

If once bereaved of motion, matter cannot of itself acquire it again: nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or intrinsecally moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. Bentley.

INTRINSECAT. adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsecal.] Perplexed; entangled. Not in use.

Such smiling rogues as these, Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain, Too intrinsecate to unloose. Shaksp. King Lear.

Come, mortal wretch, With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate Of life at once untye. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

INTRINSECK. adj. [intrinsecus, Latin.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsecal goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hammond.

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing.

The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken: that is, a man's intrinsecal; this, his current value. Grew.

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis try'd The more shall its intrinsecal worth proclaim. Prior.

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsecal value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. Rogers.

To INTRODUCE. v. a. [introduco, Lat.] introduire, French.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person.

Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. Locke.

2. To bring something into notice or practice.

This vulgar error whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preserving by theory as well as practice. Brown.

An author who should introduce a sort of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. Broome.

3. To produce; to give occasion to.

Whatsoever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors. Locke on Education.

4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives.

If he will introduce himself by prefaces, we cannot help it. Layser's Trial.

INTRODUCER. n. f. [introducitur, Fr. from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person.

2. Any one who brings any thing into practice or notice.

The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Wotton.

It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess hath been lately, from their example, restored among us; but whoever the introducers were, they have succeeded to a miracle. Swift.

INTRODUCTION. n. f. [introduction, Fr. introducio, Latin.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering to any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.

2. The act of bringing any new thing into notice or practice.

The archbishop of Canterbury had pursued the introduction of the liturgy and the canons into Scotland with great vehemence. Clarendon.

3. The preface or part of a book containing previous matter.

INTRODUCTIVE. adj. [introducitur, Fr. from introduce.] Serving as the means to something else.

The truths of Christ crucified, is the christian's philosophy, and a good life is the christian's logic; that great instrumental introductive art, that must guide the mind into the former. South.

INTRODUCTORY. adj. [from introducitur, Latin.] Previous; serving as a means to something further.

This introductory discourse itself is to be but an essay not a look. Boyle.

INTROGRESSION. n. f. [introgressio, Latin.] Entrance; the act of entering.

INTROIT. n. f. [introit, French.] The beginning of the mass; the beginning of publick devotions.

INTROMISSION. n. f. [intromissio, Lat.]

1. The act of sending in.

If fight be caused by intromission, or receiving in the form of that which is seen, contrary species or forms should be received confusedly together, which Aristotle shews to be absurd. Peacock.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sects and persuasions into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules of our church, and that therefore they should be taken away. South.

2. [In the Scottish law.] The act of intermeddling with another's effects: as, he shall be brought to an account for his intromissions with such an estate.

To INTROMIT. v. a. [intromitto, Lat.]

1. To send in; to let in; to admit.

2. To allow to enter; to be the medium by which any thing enters.

Glass in the window intromits light without cold to those in the room. Holder.

Tinged bodies and liquors reflect some sorts of rays, and intromit or transmit other sorts. Newton.

To INTROSPECT. v. a. [introspectus, Lat.] To take a view of the inside.

INTROSPECTION. n. f. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.

The actings of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discernible by man. Hale.

I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination. Dryden.

INTROVENIENT. adj. [intro and venio, Latin.] Entering; coming in.

Scarce any condition which is not exhausted and obscured, from the commixture of introvenient nations, either by commerce or conquest. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To INTRUDE. v. n. [intrudo, Latin.]

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.

Thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd. Shakspere.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore that this might so enter, as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence. South.

2. It is followed by on before persons, or personal possessions.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship Intrudes on your repose, and comes thus late To greet you with the tidings of success. Rowe.

Some thoughts rise and intrude upon us, while we shun them; others fly from us, when we would hold them. Watts.

3. To encroach; to force in uncalled or unpermitted: sometimes with into.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen by his fleshly mind. Colemans.

To INTRUDE. v. a. To force without right or welcome: commonly with the reciprocal pronoun.

Not to intrude one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keeps secret, is represented by the winds shut up in a bull hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into. Pope.

INTRUDER. n. f. [from intrude.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.

Unmannerly intruder as thou art! Shakspeare.
Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shakspeare.

They were but intruders upon the possession, during the minority of the heir: they knew those lands were the rightful inheritance of that young lady. Davies on Ireland.

Will you a bold intruder never learn
To know your basket, and your bread discern? Dryden.

She had seen a great variety of faces: they were all strangers and intruders, such as she had no acquaintance with. Locke.

The whole fraternity of writers rise up in arms against every new intruder into the world of fame. Addison's Freeholder.

INTRUSION. n. f. [intrusion, Fr. intrusio, Latin.]

1. The act of thrusting or forcing any thing or person into any place or state.

Many excellent strains have been jostled off by the intrusions of poetical fictions. Brown.

The separation of the parts of one body, upon the intrusion of another, and the change from rest to motion upon impulse, and the like, seem to have some connection. Locke.

2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakspeare.

Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill With loath'd intrusion. Par. Lost.

How's this, my son? Why this intrusion?
Were not my orders that I should be private? Addison's Gato.

I may close, after so long an intrusion upon your meditations. Wake's Prep. for Death.

3. Voluntary and uncalled undertaking of any thing.

It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency. Wotton.

To INTRUST. v. a. [in and trust.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value: as, we intrust another with something; or we intrust something to another.

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it. Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move;
Intrust thy fortune to the powers above. Dryden.

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword
In Rome's defence, intrusted to our care? Addis.

He composed his billet-doux, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his confidant. Arbuthnot.

INTUITION. n. f. [intuidus, intueor, Lat.]

1. Sight of any thing: used commonly of mental view. Immediate knowledge.

At our rate of judging, St. Paul had passed for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him. Government of the Tongue.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident. Locke.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the casualty itself is insensible. Glanville.

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition. South.

He their single virtues did survey,
By intuition in his own large breast. Dryden.

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Latin; intuitif, French.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of argument or testimony.

Immediate perception of the agreement and disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge. Locke.

Lofty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstruse notions, or exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one person. Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come. Hooker.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth set them on work. Hooker.

The soul receives Discursive of intuitive. Milton.

INTUITIVELY. adv. [intuitivement, Fr.]

Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is sound and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the searcher of all men's hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his? Hooker.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. Baker on Learning.

INTUMESCENCE. } n. f. [intumescence,
INTUMESCENCY. } Fr. intumescio, Lat.]

Swell; tumour; the act or state of swelling.

According to the temper of the tereous parts at the bottom, as they are more hardly or easily moved, they variously begin, continue, or end their intumescencies. Brown.

This subterranean heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and occasions an earthquake. Woodward.

INTURGESCENCE. n. f. [in and turgesco, Lat.] Swelling; the act or state of swelling.

Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but inturgescencies caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it before them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INTU'SE. n. f. [intusus, Latin.] Bruise.

She did search the swelling bruise,
And having search'd the intuse deep,
She bound it with her scarf. Spenser.

To INTWINE. v. a. [in and twine.]

1. To twist, or wreath together.

This opinion, though false, yet intwined with a true, that the souls of men do never perish, abated the fear of death in them. Hooker.

2. To be inferted by being wreathed or twisted.

The vest and veil divine,
Which wand'ring foliage and rich flow'rs in-twine. Dryden.

To INVADE. v. a. [invado, Latin.]

1. To attack a country; to make a hostile entrance.

He will invade them with troops. Habb.

Should he invade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms. Knolles.

With dang'rous expedition they invade Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault. Milton.

Thy race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden.

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy. Dryden.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main. Dryden.

2. To attack; to assail; to assault.

There shall be sedition among men, and invading one another; they shall not regard their kings. 2 Esdras.

Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin; so 'tis to thee:
But where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt. Shaksp. King Lear.

3. To violate by the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend.

Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made;

And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryd.

INVA'DER. n. f. [from invado, Latin.]

1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another.

The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland. Bacon.

Their piety
In sharp contest of battle found no aid Against invaders. Milton's Paradise Lost.

That knowledge, like the coal from the altar,
Serves only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Piety.

Were he lost, the naked empire
Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders. Denham.

The country about Attica was the most barren of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of invaders. Swift.

Secure, by William's care, let Britain stand;
Nor dread the bold invader's hand. Prior.

Esteem and judgment with strong fancy join,
To call the fair invader in;
My darling favourite inclination, too,
All, all conspiring with the foe. Granville.

2. An assailant.

3. Encroacher; intruder.

The substance was formerly comprised in that un-compounded style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders. Hammond.

INVALESCENCE. n. f. [invalesco, Lat.]

Strength; health; force. DiA.

INVA'LID. adj. [invalid, French; invalidus, Latin.] Weak; of no weight or cogency.

But this I urge,
Admitting motion in the heav'ns, to shew
Invalid, that which thee to doubt it mov'd. Milton.

To INVA'LIDATE. v. a. [from invalid.]

To weaken; to deprive of force or efficacy.

To invalidate such a consequence, some things might be speciously enough alleged. Boyle.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted, bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of her's shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

INVALIDE. n. f. [French.] One disabled by sickness or hurts.

What beggar in the invalides,
With lameness broke, with blindness smitten, With'd ever decently to die? Prior.

INVALIDITY. n. f. [in and validity; invalidité, French.]

1. Weakness; want of cogency.
2. Want of bodily strength. This is no English meaning.

He ordered, that none who could work should be idle; and that none who could not work, by age, sickness, or invalidity, should want. Temple.

INVALUABLE. adj. [in and valuable.]

Precious above estimation; inestimable.

The faith produced by terror would not be so free an act as it ought, to which are annexed all the glorious and invaluable privileges of believing. Atterbury.

INVARIABLE. adj. [in and varius, Lat. invariable, Fr.] Unchangeable; constant.

Being not able to design times by days, months, or years, they thought best to determine these alterations by some known and invariable signs, and such did they conceive the rising and setting of the fixed stars. Brown.

The rule of good and evil would not appear uniform and invariable, but different, according to men's different complexions and inclinations. Atterbury.

INVARIABleness. n. f. [from invariable.] Immutability; constancy.

INVARIABLY. adv. [from invariable.] Unchangeably; constantly.

He, who steers his course invariably by this rule, takes the surest way to make all men praise him. Atterbury.

INVASION. n. f. [invasion, French; invasio, Latin.]

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment.

We made an invasion upon the Cherethites. 1 Sam.

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the first entrance and admission of sin uneasy. South.

The nations of th' Ausonian shore
Shall hear the dreadful rumour, from afar,
Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war. Dryden.

William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1060, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time 'till now, for one entire length of time, it shews at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes. Locke.

2. Attack of a disease.

What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. Arbuthnot.

INVASIVE. adj. [from invade.] Entering hostilely upon other men's possessions; not defensive.

I must come closer to my purpose, and not make more invasive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country. Dryden.

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands,
Lessen their people, and extend their lands;
By gasping nations hated and obey'd,
Lords of the desarts that their swords had made. Arbuthnot.

INVECTIVE. n. f. [invektive, French; invektiva, low Latin.]

1. A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.

Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of glosing speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invektives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoveful for the exercise of christian duty. Hooker.

If we take satyr, in the general signification of the word, for an invektive, 'tis almost as old as verse. Dryd. Juv.

2. It is used with against.

So desp'rate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,
Breathe out invektives 'gainst the officers. Shaksp.

Casting off respect, he fell to bitter invektives against the French king. Bacon's Hen. VII.

3. Less properly with at.

Whilst we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invektives we make at their supposed errors fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Decay of Piety.

INVECTIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.

Let him rail on; let his invektive muse
Have four and twenty letters to abuse. Dryden.

INVECTIVELY. adv. Satirically; abusively.

Thus most invektively he pierceth through
The body of the country, city, court, Yea, and of this our life; swearing that we Are mere usurpers, tyrants. Shaksp.

TO INVEIGH. v. a. [inveho, Lat.] To utter censure or reproach: with against.

I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

He inveighs severely against the folly of parties, in retaining scoundrels to retail their lies. Arbuthnot.

INVEIGHER. n. f. [from inveigh.] Vehement railer.

One of these inveighers against mercury, in seven weeks, could not cure one small herpes in the face. Wise man.

TO INVEIGLE. v. a. [invoigliare, Ital. Minshew; aveugler, or enaveugler, Fr. Skinner and Junius.] To persuade to something bad or hurtful; to wheedle; to allure; to seduce.

Most false Dueffa, royal richly dight,
That easy was to inveigle weaker sight,
Was, by her wicked arts and wily skill,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might. Fairy Queen.

Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him. Shaksp.

Yet have they many baits and guileful spells,
To inveigle and invite th' unwary sense
Of them that pass unweeting by the way. Milton.

Both right able
T' inveigle and draw in the rabble. Hudibras.
Those drops of prettiness, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to exalt our conceptions, not inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.

I leave the use of garlick to such as are inveigled into the gout by the use of too much drinking. Temple.

The inveigling a woman, before she is come to years of discretion, should be as criminal as the seducing of her before she is ten years old. Spektor.

INVEIGLER. n. f. [from inveigle.] Seducer; deceiver; allurer to ill.

Being presented to the emperor for his admirable beauty, the prince clapt him up as his inveigler. Sandys.

TO INVENT. v. a. [inventer, Fr. inventio, Lat.]

1. To discover; to find out; to excogitate; to produce something not made before.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, but must be received from God himself. Hooker.

By their count, which lovers books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains. Spens.
Matter of mirth enough, though there were none

She could devise, and thousand ways invent
To feed her foolish humour and vain jolliment. Fairy Queen.

Woe to them that invent to themselves instruments of musick. Amos.

We may invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our enemies. Milton.

In the motion of the bones in their articulations, a twofold liquor is prepared for the union of their heads; both which make up the most apt mixture, for this use, that can be invented or thought upon. Ray.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's mazy intricacies trace,
By manag'd fire and late invented eyes. Blackmore.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refine'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,

And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Creech.
The ship, by help of a screw, invented by Archimedes, was launched into the water. Arb.

2. To forge; to contrive falsely; to fabricate.

I never did such things as those men have maliciously invented against me. Susannah.

Here is a strange figure invented, against the plain sense of the words. Stillingfleet.

3. To feign; to make by the imagination.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in her loathsome cave. Shaksp.

Hercules's meeting with Pleasure and Virtue was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates, and in the first dawning of philosophy. Addison's Spectator.

4. To light on; to meet with. Not used.

Far off he wonders what them makes so glad:
Or Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad. Spenser.

INVENTER. n. f. [from inventeur, Fr.]

1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.

As a translator, he was just; as an inventer, he was rich. Garth.

2. A forger.

INVENTION. n. f. [invention, French; inventio, Latin.]

1. Excogitation; the act or power of producing something new.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention! Shaksp.

By improving what was writ before,
Invention labours less, but judgment more. Roscommon.

Invention is a kind of muse, which, being possessed of the other advantages common to her sisters, and being warmed by the fire of Apollo, is raised higher than the rest. Dryden.

Mine is th' invention of the charming lyre:
Sweet notes and heav'nly numbers I inspire. Dryden.

The chief excellence of Virgil is judgment, of Homer is invention. Pope.

2. Discovery.

Nature hath provided several glands to separate spittle from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are of a late invention, and called duetus salivales. Ray on the Creation.

3. Forgery; fiction.

We hear our bloody cousins, not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention. Shaksp.

If thou can't accuse,
Do it without invention suddenly. Shaksp.

4. The thing invented.

The garden, a place not fairer in natural ornaments than artificial inventions. Sidney.

Th' invention all admir'd; and each how he
To be th' inventor miss'd, so easy it seem'd Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought

Impossible. Milton's Paradise Lost.

INVENTIVE. adj. [inventif, French; from invent.]

1. Quick at contrivance; ready at expedients.

Those have the inventive heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

That inventive head

Her fatal image from the temple drew,
The sleeping guardians of the castle flew. Dryd.

The inventive god, who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart. Dryden.

2. Having the power of excogitation or fiction.

As he had an inventive brain, so there never lived any man that believed better thereof, and of himself. Raleigh.

Reason, remembrance, wit, inventive art,
No nature, but immortal, can impart. Denham.

INVENTOR. n. f. [inventor, Latin.]

1. A finder out of something new. It is written likewise inventer.

We have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies, also the inventor of ships: your Monk, that was the inventor of ordnance, and of gunpowder. Bacon.

Studious they appear

Of arts that polish life; inventors rare,
Unmindful of their maker. Milton.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author and inventor, and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterbury.

2. A contriver; a framer. In an ill sense.

In this upshot, purposes mistook, Fall'n on th' inventors heads. Shakspeare.

INVENTORIAL. adv. [from inventory, whence perhaps inventorial.] In manner of an inventory.

To divide inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetic of memory. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

INVENTORY. n. f. [inventoire, Fr. inventarium, Latin.] An account or catalogue of moveables.

I found,

Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,
The several parcels of his plate. Shakspeare.

The leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance: our sufferings is a gain to them. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Whoe'er looks,

For themselves dare not go, o'er Cheapside books,

Shall find their wardrobe's inventory. Donne.

It were of much consequence to have such an inventory of nature, wherein, as, on the one hand, nothing should be wanting, so nothing repeated on the other. Grew's Museum.

In Persia the daughters of Eve are reckoned in the inventory of their goods and chattels; and it is usual, when a man sells a bale of silk, to toss half a dozen women into the bargain. Addison.

TO INVENTORY. v. a. [inventorier, Fr.]

To register; to place in a catalogue.

I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labell'd. Shakspeare.

A man looks on the love of his friend as one of the richest possessions: the philosopher thought friends were to be inventoried as well as goods. Government of the Tongue.

INVENTRESS. n. f. [inventrice, French; from inventor.] A female that invents.

VOL. I.

The arts, with all their retinue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were deified. Burnet.

Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds. Dryden.

INVERSE. adj. [inverse, French; inversus, Latin.] Inverted; reciprocal: opposed to direct. It is so called in proportion, when the fourth term is so much greater than the third as the second is less than the first; or so much less than the third as the second is greater than the first.

Every part of matter tends to every part of matter with a force, which is always in a direct proportion of the quantity of matter, and an inverse duplicate proportion of the distance. Garth.

INVERSION. n. f. [inversion, French; inversio, Latin.]

1. Change of order or time, so as that the last is first, and first last.

If he speaks truth, it is upon a subtle inversion of the precept of God, to do good that evil may come of it. Brown.

'Tis just the inversion of an act of parliament: your lordship first signed it, and then it was passed among the lords and commons. Dryden.

2. Change of place, so that each takes the room of the other.

TO INVERT. v. a. [invert, Latin.]

1. To turn upside down; to place in contrary method or order to that which was before.

With fate inverted, shall I humbly woo?
And some proud prince, in wild Numidia born,
Pray to accept me, and forget my scorn! Waller.

Ask not the cause why fullen spring
So long delays her flow'rs to bear,
And winter storms invert the year. Dryden.

Poesy and oratory omit things essential, and invert times and actions, to place every thing in the most affecting light. Watts.

2. To place the last first.

Yes, every poet is a fool;
By demonstration Ned can show it:
Happy, could Ned's inverted rule Prove every fool to be a poet. Prior.

3. To divert; to turn into another channel; to embezzle. Instead of this convert or invert is now commonly used.

Solyman charged him bitterly with inverting his treasures to his own private use, and having secret intelligence with his enemies. Knolles.

INVERTEDLY. adv. [from inverted.] In contrary or reversed order.

Placing the forepart of the eye to the hole of the window of a darkened room, we have a pretty landskip of the objects abroad, invertedly painted on the paper, on the back of the eye. Derham.

TO INVEST. v. a. [investir, French; investio, Latin.]

1. To dress; to clothe; to array. It has in or with before the thing superinduced or conferred.

Their gesture sad,
Invest in lank lean cheeks and war-worn coats,
Presented them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. Shakspeare.

Thou with a mantle didst invest
The rising world of waters. Milton.

Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre;
Invest them with thy loveliest smiles, put on Thy choicest looks. Denham's Sophy.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make places of publick resort, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.

After the death of the other archbishop, he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth. Clarendon.

The practice of all ages, and all countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with publick authority. Atterbury.

3. To adorn; to grace: as clothes or ornaments.

Honour must,

Not accompanied, invest him only;
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deservers. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

The foolish, over-careful fathers for this engross'd

The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shak.

Some great potentate,
Or of the thrones above; such majesty
Invests him coming. Milton.

4. To confer; to give.

If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it investeth a right of government. Bacon.

5. To enclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions: as, the enemy invested the town.

INVESTIENT. adj. [investiens, Latin.]

Covering; clothing.

The shells served as plasms or moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated and freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

INVESTIGABLE. adj. [from investigate.]

To be searched out; discoverable by rational disquisition.

Finally, in such sort they are investigable, that the knowledge of them is general; the world hath always been acquainted with them. Hooker.

In doing evil, we prefer a less good before a greater, the greatness whereof is by reason investigable, and may be known. Hooker.

TO INVESTIGATE. v. a. [investigo, Latin.] To search out; to find out by rational disquisition.

Investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs for articulation. Holder.

From the present appearances investigate the powers and forces of nature, and from these account for future observations. Cheyne.

INVESTIGATION. n. f. [investigation, Fr. investigatio, Latin.]

1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.

Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synthetick or analytick. Watts.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought
Investigation calm, whose silent powers Command the world. Thomson's Summer.

2. Examination.

Your travels I hear much of: my own shall never more be in a strange land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories. Pope.

INVESTITURE. n. f. [French.]

1. The right of giving possession of any manor, office, or benefice.

He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishops, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Raleigh.

2. The act of giving possession.

INVESTMENT. n. f. [in and vestment.]

Dress; clothes; garment; habit.

Ophelia, do not believe his vows ; for they are brokers,
Not of that die which their investments shew.
Shakspeare.

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintained, Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace ;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war ?
Shakspeare.

INVE'TERACY. n. f. [inveteratio, Latin.]

1. Long continuance of any thing bad ; obstinacy confirmed by time.

The inveteracy of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them. Addison.

2. [In physick.] Long continuance of a disease.

INVE'TERATE. adj. [inveteratus, Lat.]

1. Old ; long established.

The custom of christians was then, and had been a long time, not to wear garlands, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing ; the very inveterate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bind all men to observe it, unless they could shew some higher law, some law of scripture, to the contrary.
Hooker.

It is an inveterate and received opinion, that cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder, and exulcerate it. Bacon.

2. Obstinate by long continuance.

It is not every sinful violation of conscience that can quench the spirit ; but it must be a long inveterate course and custom of sinning, that at length produces and ends in such a cursed effect. South.

He who writes satire honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease. Dryden.

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let abuses grow inveterate, or multiply so far that it will be hard to find remedies.
Swift.

To INVE'TERATE. v. a. [inveterer, Fr.
invetero, Latin.] To fix and settle by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophecies, and to an ancient tacit expectation, which had by tradition been infused and invete-rated into men's minds. Bacon.

Let not atheists lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and inveterated habit. Bentley.

INVE'TERATENESS. n. f. [from inveterate.] Long continuance of any thing bad ; obstinacy confirmed by time.

As time hath rendered him more perfect in the art, so hath the inveterateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution. Brown.

Neither the inveterateness of the mischief, nor the prevalence of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words. Locke.

INVETERA'TION. n. f. [inveteratio, Lat.]
The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVIDIOUS. adj. [invidiosus, Latin.]

1. Envious ; malignant.

I shall open to them the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve. Evelyn.

2. Likely to incur or to bring hatred.
This is the more usual sense.

Agamemnon found it an invidious affair to give the preference to any one of the Grecian heroes. Broom.

Not to be further tedious, or rather invidious, these are a few causes which have contributed to the ruin of our morals. Swift.

INVIDIOUSLY. adv. [from invidious.]

1. Malignantly ; enviously.
2. In a manner likely to provoke hatred.
The clergy murmur against the privileges of the laity ; the laity invidiously aggravate the immunities of the clergy. Sprat.

INVIDIOUSNESS. n. f. [from invidious.]
Quality of provoking envy or hatred.

To INVIGORATE. v. a. [in and vigour.]
To endue with vigour ; to strengthen ;
to animate ; to enforce.

The spleen is introduced to invigorate the fi-nister side, which, dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate. Brown.

Gentle warmth
Discloses well the earth's all-teeming womb,
Invigorating tender seeds. Philips.

I have lived when the prince, instead of invigorating the laws, assumed a power of dispensing with them. Addison.

No one can enjoy health, without he feel a lighthearted and invigorating principle, which spurs him to action. Spectator.

Christian graces and virtues they cannot be, unless fed, invigorated, and animated by universal charity. Atterbury.

INVIGORATION. n. f. [from invigorate.]

1. The act of invigorating.
2. The state of being invigorated.

I find in myself an appetitive faculty, which is always in the very height of activity and invi-goration. Norris.

INVINCIBLE. adj. [invincible, French ;
invinsibilis, Latin.] Insuperable ; unconquerable ; not to be subdued.

I would have thought her spirits had been invincible against all assaults of affection. Shakspeare.

Should he invade their country, he would soon see that invincible nation with their united forces up in arms. Knolles.

The spirit remains invincible. Milton.

That mistake, which is the consequence of invincible error, scarce deserves the name of wrong judgment. Locke.

If an atheist had had the making of himself, he would have framed a constitution that could have kept pace with his insatiable lust, been invincible by intemperance, and have held out a thousand years in a perpetual debauch. Bentley.

INVINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from invincible.] Unconquerableness ; insuperableness.

INVINCIBLY. adv. [from invincible.]
Insuperably ; unconquerably.

Ye have been fearless in his righteous cause ;
And as ye have receiv'd, so have ye done
Invincibly. Milton.

Neither invitations nor threats avail with those who are invincibly impeded, to apply them to their benefit. Decay of Piety.

INVIOABLE. adj. [invioable, Fr.
inviolabilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be profaned ; not to be injured.

Thou, be sure, shalt give account
To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep
This place invioable, and these from harm. Milt.

In vain did nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' invioable main ;
Th' eternal fences overleap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Ye lamps of heav'n, he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free ; thou venerable sky !

Invioable pow'rs ! ador'd with dread,
Be all of you adjur'd. Dryden.

This birthright, when our author pleases, must and must not be sacred and invioable. Locke.

2. Not to be broken.

The prophet David thinks, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of invioable amity. Hooker.

See, see, they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league invioable. Shakspeare.

3. Insusceptible of hurt or wound.

Th' invioable saints
In cubick phalanx firm advanc'd intire. Milton.

INVIOABLY. adv. [from invioable.]

Without breach ; without failure.
Mere acquaintance you have none : you have drawn them all into a nearer line ; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after invioably yours. Dryden.

The true profession of christianity invioably engages all its followers to do good to all men.
Sprat.

INVIOATE. adj. [invioate, French ; inviolatus, Latin.] Unhurt ; uninjured ; un-profaned ; unpolluted ; unbroken.

His fortune of arms was still invioate. Bacon.
But let invioate truth be always dear
To thee, even before friendship, truth prefer.
Denham.

If the past
Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds
Nature has seal'd between us, which, though I
Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd invioate :
I beg thy pardon. Denham's Sophy.

My love your claim invioate secures ;
'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours. Dryden.

In all the changes of his doubtful state,
His truth, like heav'n's, was kept invioate.
Dryden.

INVIOUS. adj. [invius, Latin.] Impassable ; untrodden.

If nothing can oppugn his love,
And virtue invious ways can prove,
What may not be confide to do,
That brings both love and virtue too ? Hudibras.

To INVISCATE. v. a. [in and viscus, Lat.]
To lime ; to entangle in glutinous matter.

The camelion's food being flies, it hath in the tongue a mucous and slimy extremity, whereby, upon a sudden emission, it inviscates and intangleth those insects. Brown.

INVISIBILITY. n. f. [invisibilit  , French ; from invisible.] The state of being invisible ; imperceptibleness to sight.

They may be demonstrated to be innumerable, substituting their smallness for the reason of their invisibility. Ray.

INVISIBLE. adj. [invisible, Fr. invisibilis, Lat.] Not perceptible by the sight ; not to be seen.

He was invisible that hurt me so ;
And none invisible, but spirits, can go. Sidney.

The threaten sails,
Borne with th' invisible and creeping wind,
Drew the huge bottoms to the furrow'd sea.
Shakspeare.

'Tis wonderful,
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To loyalty unlearn'd, honour untaught. Shakspeare.
To us invisible, or dimly seen,
In these thy lowest works. Milton.

He that believes a God, believes such a being as hath all perfections ; among which this is one, that he is a spirit, and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen. Tillotson.

It seems easier to make one's self invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts visible to me, which are not visible to himself. Locke.

INVISIBLY. adv. [from invisible.] Imperceptibly to the sight.

Age by degrees invifibly doth creep,
Nor do we feem to die, but fall afleep. Denh.

INVITATION. n. f. [invitation, Fr. invitatio, Lat.] The act of inviting, bidding, or calling to any thing with ceremony and civility.
That other answer'd with a lowly look,
And foon the gracious invitation took. Dryd.

INVITATORY. adj. [from invito, Lat.]
Ufing invitation; containing invitation.

To INVITE. v. a. [invito, Latin; inviter, French.]

1. To bid; to ask to any place, particularly to one's own houfe, with intreaty and complaifance.
If thou be invited of a mighty man, withdraw thyfelf. Eccus.
He comes invited by a younger fon. Milton.
When much company is invited, then be as fparing as poffible of your coals. Swift.
2. To allure; to perfuade; to induce by hope or pleafure.
A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other gentiles, though facility and hope of fuccels might invite fome other choice. Bacon.
Nor art thou fuch
Created, or fuch place haft here to dwell,
As may not oft invite, though fpirits of heav'n,
To vifit thee. Milton's Paradise Loft.
The liberal contributions fuch teachers met with, ferved ftill to invite more labourers into that work. Decay of Piety.
Shady groves, that eafy fleep invite,
And after toilfome days a foft repofe at night. Dryden's Virgil.

To INVITE. v. n. [invito, Latin.] To ask or call to any thing pleafing.
All things invite
To peaceful counfels. Milton.

INVITER. n. f. [from invite.] He who invites.
They forcibly cut out abortive votes, fuch as their inviters and encouragers moft fancied. King Charles.
Honour was the aim of the guefts, and intereft was the fcope of the inviter. Spaulridge.
Wines and eates the tables grace,
But moft the kind inviter's cheerful face. Pope.

INVITINGLY. adv. [from inviting.] In fuch a manner as invites or allures.
If he can but drefs up a temptation to look invitingly, the bufinefs is done. Decay of Piety.

To INUMBRATE. v. a. [inumbro, Lat.]
To fhade; to cover with fhades. Diſ.

INUCTION. n. f. [inungo, inunctus, Lat.]
The act of fmearing or anointing.
The wife author of nature hath placed on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily liniment, fit for the inunction of the feathers, and caufing their filaments to cohere. Ray.

INUNDATION. n. f. [inundation, French; inundatio, Latin.]

1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge. Inundation, fays Cowley, implies lefs than deluge.
Her father counts it dangerous,
That ſhe would give her forrow ſo much ſway;
And in his wiſdom haſtes our marriage,
To ſtop the inundation of her tears. Shakſpeare.
The ſame inundation was not paſt forty foot in moſt places: ſo that ſome few wild inhabitants of the woods eſcaped. Bacon.
All fountains of the deep,
Broke up, ſhall heave the ocean to uſurp
Beyond all bounds, 'till inundation riſe Above the higheſt hills. Milton's Par. Loſt.
This inundation unto the Egyptians happeneth when it is winter unto the Ethiopians. Brown.

Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threatening floods, and inundations near. Dryden.

No ſwelling inundation hides the grounds,
But cryſtal currents glide within their bounds. Gay.

2. A confluence of any kind.
Many good towns, through that inundation of the Irilh, were utterly waſted. Spencer.

To INVOCATE. v. a. [invoco, Latin.]
To invoke; to implore; to call upon; to pray to.
Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Be't lawful, that I invoke thy gholt,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shakſ.
If Dagon be thy god,
Go to his temple, invoke his aid
With ſolemnelt devotion. Milton's Agoniſtes.
Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
'Till vermin or the draff of ſervile food
Conſume me, and oft invoked death
Haſten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton's Agoniſtes.

INVOCATION. n. f. [invocation, French; invocatio, Latin.]

1. The act of calling upon in prayer.
Is not the name of prayer uſual to ſignify even all the ſervice that ever we do unto God? And that for no other cauſe, as I ſuppoſe, but to ſhew that there is in religion no acceptable duty, which devout invocation of the name of God doth not either preſuppoſe or infer. Hooker.
2. The form of calling for the aſſiſtance or preſence of any being.
My invocation is Honeſt and fair, and in his miſtreſs' name. Shakſpeare.
The propoſition of Gratius is contained in a line, and that of invocation in half a line. Waſe.
I will ſtrain myſelf to breathe out this one invocation. Howel.
The whole poem is a prayer to fortune, and the invocation is divided between the two deities. Addiſon on Italy.

INVOICE. n. f. [This word is perhaps corrupted from the French word envoyez, ſend.] A catalogue of the freight of a ſhip, or of the articles and price of goods ſent by a factor.

To INVOLVE. v. a. [invoco, Latin; involvere, French.] To call upon; to implore; to pray to; to invoke.
The power I will involve dwells in her eyes. Sidney.
One peculiar nation to ſelect
From all the reſt of whom to be invok'd. Milton.
The ſkilful bard,
Striking the Thracian harp, invokes Apollo,
To make his hero and himſelf immortal. Prior.

To INVOLVE. v. a. [involvere, Latin.]

1. To inwrap; to cover with any thing circumfluent.
Leave a ſinged bottom all involved
With ſtench and ſmoke. Milton.
No man could miſs his way to heaven for want of light; and yet ſo vain are they as to think they oblige the world by involving it in darkneſs. Decay of Piety.
In a cloud involved; he takes his flight,
Where Greeks and Trojans mix'd in mortal fight. Dryden.
2. To imply; to comprife.
We cannot demonſtrate theſe things ſo as to ſhew that the contrary neceſſarily involves a contradiction. Tillotſon.
3. To intwiſt; to join.
He knows his end with mine involved. Milton.
4. To take in; to catch; to conjoin.
The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vaſt involuntary throng. Pope.
Sin we ſhould hate altogether; but our hatred of it may involve the perſon which we ſhould not hate at all. Spriat.

One death involves Tyrants and ſlaves. Thomſon's Summer.

5. To entangle.
This reference of the name to a thing whereof we have no idea, is ſo far from helping at all, that it only ſerves the more to involve us in difficulties. Locke.
As obſcure and imperfect ideas often involve our reaſon, ſo do dubious words puzzle men's reaſon. Locke.
6. To complicate; to make intricate.
Some involved their ſnaky folds. Milton.
Syllogiſm is of neceſſary uſe, even to the lovers of truth, to ſhew them the fallacies that are often concealed in florid, witty, or involved diſcourſes. Locke.
7. To blend; to mingle together confuſedly.
Earth with hell mingle and involve. Milton.

INVOLUNTARILY. adv. [from involuntary.] Not by choice; not ſpontaneouſly.

INVOLUNTARY. adj. [in and voluntarius, Latin; involuntaire, French.]

1. Not having the power of choice.
The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vaſt involuntary throng,
Who gently draw, and ſtruggling leſs and leſs,
Roll in her vortex, and her pow'r confeſs. Pope.
2. Not choſen; not done willingly.
The forbearance of that action, conſequent to ſuch command of the mind, is called voluntary; and whatſoever action is performed without ſuch a thought of the mind, is called involuntary. Locke.
But why, ah tell me, ah too dear!
Steals down my cheek th' involuntary tear? Pope.

INVOLUTION. n. f. [involutio, Latin.]

1. The act of involving or inwrapping.
2. The ſtate of being entangled; complication.
All things are mixed, and cauſes blended by mutual involutions. Glanville.
3. That which is wrapped round any thing.
Great conceits are raiſed of the involution or membranous covering called the ſilly-how, ſometimes found about the heads of children. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To INVURE. v. a. [in and ure.] To habituate; to make ready or willing by practice and cuſtom; to accuſtom. It had anciently with before the thing practiſed, now to.
Beauſe they ſo proudly inſult, we muſt a little inure their ears with hearing how others, whom they more regard, are accuſtomed to uſe the ſelfſame language with us. Hooker.
If there might be added true art and learning, there would be as much difference, in maturity of judgment, between men therewith inured, and that which now men are, as between men that are now and innocents. Hooker.
That it may no painful work endure,
It to ſtrong labour can itſelf inure. Hub. Tale.
England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately inured to the mild and goodly government of the Confeſſor. Spencer.
The forward hand, inured to wounds, makes way
Upon the ſharpeſt fronts of the moſt fierce. Daniel.
Then cruel, by their ſports to blood inured
Of fighting beaſts, and men to beaſts expoſ'd. Milton.

To INURE.
Our prompt obedience. Milton's Par. Loſt.
They, who had been moſt inured to buſineſs, had not in their lives ever undergone ſo great fatigue for twenty days together. Clarendon.
We may inure ourſelves by cuſtom to bear the extremities of weather without injury. Addiſon's Guardian.

INU'REMENT. n. f. [from inure.] Practice; habit; use; custom; frequency.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance a secret appetite, and habitual inclination to the site it held, then how much more may education, being nothing else but a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature. Wotton.

To INURN. v. a. [in and urn.] To intomb; to bury.

The sepulchre
Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,
Hath op'd its ponderous and marble jaws
To cast thee up again. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Amidst the tears of Trojan dames inurn'd,
And by his loyal daughters truly mourn'd. Dryd.

INU'STION. n. f. [inustio, Latin.] The act of burning.

INU'TILE. adj. [inutile, Fr. inutilus, Lat.] Useless; unprofitable.

To refer to heat and cold is a compendious and inutile speculation. Bacon's Nat. History.

INU'TILITY. n. f. [inutilité, Fr. inutilitas, Latin.] Uselessness; unprofitableness.

INVULNERABLE. adj. [invulnerable, Fr. invulnerabilis, Lat.] Not to be wounded; secure from wound.

Our cannon's malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shaks.
Nor vainly hope
To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
That mortal dint none can resist. Milton.
Vanessa, though by Pallas taught,
By love invulnerable thought,
Searching in books for wisdom's aid,
Was in the very search betray'd. Swift.

To INWALL. v. a. [in and wall.] To enclose or fortify with a wall.

Three such towns in those places with the garrisons, would be so augmented as they would be able with little to inwall themselves strongly.
Spenser on Ireland.

INWARD. } adv. [inpeard, Saxon.]

INWARDS. }

1. Toward the internal parts; within.
The parts of living creatures that be more inwards, nourish more than the outward flesh. Bacon's Natural History.

The medicines which go to these magical ointments are so strong, that if they were used inwards they would kill; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.

2. With inflection or incurvity; concavely.

He stretches out his arm in sign of peace, with his breast bending inward. Dryden.

3. Into the mind or thoughts.

Looking inward we are stricken dumb;
looking upward we speak and prevail. Hooker.
Celestial light
Shine inwards, and the soul through all her powers Irradiate. Milton.

INWARD. adj.

1. Internal; placed not on the outside but within.

He could not rest, but did his stout heart eat,
And waste his inward gall with deep despoight.
Fairy Queen.

To each inward part
It shoots invisible. Milton.

Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure more plainly.
Pope.

2. Reflecting; deeply thinking.

With outward smiles their flattery I receiv'd!
But bent and inward to myself again
Perplex'd, these matters I revolv'd, in vain.
Prior.

3. Intimate; domestick; familiar.

Though the lord of the liberty do pain himself all he may to yield equal justice unto all, yet can there not but great abuses lurk in so inward and absolute a privilege. Spenser.
All my inward friends abhorred me. Job.

4. Seated in the mind.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shaks.

INWARD. n. f.

1. Any thing within, generally the bowels. Seldom has this sense a singular.

Then sacrificing, laid
The inwards, and their fat, with incense strew'd
On the cleft wood, and all due rites perform'd.
Milton.

They esteem them most profitable, because of the great quantity of fat upon their inwards.
Mortimer.

2. Intimate; near acquaintance. Little used.

Sir, I was an inward of his; a sly fellow was the duke; and I know the cause of his withdrawing. Shakspeare.

INWARDLY. adv. [from inward.]

Covering discovers your quick soul; that we May in your through-shine front our hearts thoughts see. Donne.

2. To perplex; to puzzle with difficulty or obscurity.

The case is no sooner made than resolved: if it be made not inwrapped, but plainly and perspicuously. Bacon.

3. It is doubtful whether the following examples should not be enrap, or inrap, from in and rap, rapio, Latin, to ravish or transport.

This pearl she gave me I do feel 't and see 't;
And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus,
Yet 'tis not madness. Shakspeare.

For if such holy song
Enwrap our fancy long,
Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold.
Milton.

INWROUGHT. adj. [in and wrought.] Adorned with work.

Camus, reverend sir, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy and his bonnet fedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscrib'd with woe.
Milton.

Yonder well favour'd youth. Donne.

This said, he jogg'd his good steed nigher,
 And steer'd him gently toward the squire. Hudib.

I was pretty well pleased while I expected, till friction jogged me out of my pleasing slumber, and I knew it was but a dream. Norris.

Sudden I jogg'd Ulysses, who was laid Fast by my side. Pope's Odyssey.

TO JOG. v. n.

1. To move by succussion; to move with small shocks like those of a low trot.

The door is open, fir, there lies good way,
 You may be jogging while your boots are greer. Shakspeare.

Here lieth one, who did most truly prove
 That he could never die while he could move;
 So hung his destiny, never to rot
 While he might still jog on and keep his trot. Milton.

2. To travel idly and heavily.

Jog on, jog on the foot-path way,
 And merrily beat the stile-a,
 A merry heart goes all the day,
 Your sad tires in a mile-a, Shakspeare.

Away they trotted together: but as they were jogging on, the wolf spy'd a bare place about the dog's neck. L'Estrange.

Thus they jog on, still tricking, never thriving,
 And murthering plays, which they misceal reviving. Dryden.

JOG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A push; a slight shake; a sudden interruption by a push or shake; a hint given by a push.

JOY. n. f. [joye, Fr. gioia, Italian.]

1. The passion produced by any happy accident; gladness; exultation.

Joy is a delight of the mind, from the consideration of the present, or assured approaching possession of a good. Locke.

There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakspeare.

There should not be such heaviness in their destruction, as shall be joy over them that are persuaded to salvation. 2 Esdras.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

2. Gayety; merriment; festivity.

The roofs with joy resound; And hymen, iö hymen, rung around. Dryden.

3. Happiness; felicity.

My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady, I wish you all the joy that you can wish. Shaksp. Come love and health to all; Then I'll sit down: give me some wine: I drink to the general joy of the whole table. Shakspeare.

Almeyda smiling came, Attended with a train of all her race, Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd; But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy Of my new conquest. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

The bride, Lovely herself, and lovely by her side, A bevy of bright nymphs, with sober grace, Came glitt'ring like a star, and took her place: Her heav'nly form beheld, all wish'd her joy; And little wanted, but in vain, their wishes all employ. Dryden.

4. A term of fondness.

Now our joy, Although our last, yet not our least young love, What say you? Shakspeare's King Lear.

To JOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

1 Kings.

My soul shall be joyful in my God.

Isaiah.

2. Sometimes it has of before the cause of joy.

Six brave companions from each ship we lost: With sails outspread we fly th' unequal strife, Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life.

Pope.

JOYFULLY. adv. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.

If we no more meet till we meet in heav'n, Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford, And my kind kinsmen, warriors all, adieu.

Shakspere.

Never did men more joyfully obey, Or sooner understood the sign to flee:

With such alacrity they bore away, As if to praise them all the states stood by.

Dryd.

The good christian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it.

Wake.

JOYFULNESS. n. f. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.

Thou servedst not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things.

Deut.

JOYLESS. adj. [from joy.]

1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.

A little joy enjoys the queen thereof; For I am she, and altogether joyless.

Shakspere.

With downcast eyes the joyless victor sat, Revolving in his alter'd soul

The various turns of chance below: And now and then a sigh he stole, And tears began to flow.

Dryden's Alex. Feast.

2. It has sometimes of before the object.

With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast; He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest; Forsakes his food, and, pining for the lass, Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing grass.

Dryden.

3. Giving no pleasure.

A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue: Here is a babe, as loathsome as a toad.

Here love his golden shafts employs; here lights

His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings; Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smiles Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd, Casual fruition.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade this their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyless possession.

Decay of Piety.

He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food, That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him.

Addison.

JO'VOUS. adj. [joyeux, French.]

They all as glad as birds of joyous prime, Thence led her forth, about her dancing round.

Fairy Queen.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.

Round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run, And joyous of our conquest early won; While the malicious world with envious tears Should grudge our happy end, and wish it theirs.

Dryden.

IPECACUA'NHA. n. f. An Indian plant.

Ipecacuanha is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, brought from Peru: the other sort is a smaller root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brasils. The grey ought to be preferred, because the brown is apt to operate more roughly.

Hill's Mat. Med.

IRA'SCIBLE. adj. [irascibilis, low Latin; irascible, Fr.] Partaking of the nature of anger.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the concupiscible distractions on the crasis of the liver.

Brown.

I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet.

Arbutnot.

We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties.

Digby to Pope.

IRE. n. f. [Fr. ira, Lat.] Anger; rage; passionate hatred.

IRKSOMENESS. n. f. [from irksome.] Tediousness; wearisomeness.

IRON. n. f. [haiarn, Welsh; irenn, iren, Saxon; iorn, Erse.]

1. A metal common to all parts of the world. Though the lightest of all metals, except tin, it is considerably the hardest; and, when pure, naturally malleable: when wrought into steel, or when in the impure state from its first fusion, it is scarce malleable. Most of the other metals are brittle while they are hot; but this is most malleable as it approaches nearest to fusion. The specifick gravity of iron is to water as 7532 is to 1000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals. Hill.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron, Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shaksp.

If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer. Numbers.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone, and to be so drawn is a part of that of iron. Locke.

In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates placed parallel to each other. Woodward.

There are incredible quantities of iron slag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Woodward.

Iron stone lies in strata. Woodward.

I treated of making iron work, and steel work. Moxon.

2. Any instrument or utensil made of iron : as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron. In this sense it has a plural.

Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,

Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shaksp.

O Thou ! whose captain I account myself,

Look on my forces with a gracious eye :

Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,

That they may crush down with a heavy fall

Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries. Shak.

Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fishspears? Job.

For this your locks in paper-durance bound?

For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain ; shackle ; manacle : as, he was put in irons.

The iron entered into his soul. Psalms.

His feet they hurt with fetters : he was laid in irons. Psalms.

IRON. adj.

1. Made of iron.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure. Shak.

Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight

Unto my cell. Shaksp.

Some are of an iron red, shining and polite ;

others not polite, but as if powdered with iron dust. Woodward.

Poll-cats and weefels do a great deal of injury to warrens ; the way of taking them is in hut-ches, and iron traps. Mortimer.

2. Resembling iron in colour.

A piece of stone of a dark iron grey colour, but in some parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodw.

Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright. Woodward.

3. Harsh ; severe ; rigid ; miserable ; calamitous : as, the iron age for an age of hardship and wickedness. These ideas may be found more or less in all the following examples.

Three vigorous virgins, waiting still behind

Assist the throne of th' iron scepter'd king. Crashaw.

O sad virgin, that thy power

Might bid the soul of Orpheus sing

Such notes as warbled to the string,

Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,

And made hell grant what love did seek. Milt.

In all my iron years of wars and dangers,

From blooming youth down to decaying age,

My fame ne'er knew a stain of dishonour. Rowe.

Jove crush the nations with an iron rod,

And ev'ry monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.

4. Indissoluble ; unbroken.

Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,

Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought

T' exhale his furfeit by irriguous sleep ;

Imprudent ! him death's iron sleep oppress. Philips.

5. Hard ; impenetrable.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys : none are for me,
That look into me with considerate eyes. Shaksp.

To IRON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smooth with an iron.

2. To shackle with irons.

IRONICAL. adj. [ironique, French ; from irony.] Expressing one thing and meaning another ; speaking by contraries.

In this fallacy may be comprised all ironical mistakes, or expressions receiving inverted significations. Brown.

I take all your ironical civilities in a literal sense, and shall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.

IRONICALLY. adv. [from ironical.] By the use of irony.

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wisest man of Greece, which he would turn from himself ironically, saying, There could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wise, and knew it ; and others were not wise, and knew it not. Bacon.

The dean, ironically grave,
Still shunn'd the fool, and lash'd the knave. Swift.

IRONMONGER. n. s. [iron and monger.]

A dealer in iron.

IRONWOOD. n. s. A kind of wood extremely hard, and so ponderous as to sink in water. It grows in America. Robinson Crusoe.

IRONWORT. n. s. [sideritis, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

IRONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron ; partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary : it is not strange if the irony chains have more solidity than the contemplative. Hammond.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of one metal, suppose iron, put into the spring ; and deposit, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, coppery particles. Woodward.

IRONY. n. s. [ironie, Fr. ironie.] A mode of speech in which the meaning is contrary to the words : as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.

So grave a body, upon so solemn an occasion, should not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.

IRRADIANCE. } n. s. [irradiance, Fr.
IRRADIANCY. } irradio, Latin.]

1. Emission of rays or beams of light upon any object.

The principal affection is its translucency : the irradiancy and sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this. Brown.

2. Beams of light emitted.

Love not the heav'nly spirits ? Or do they mix Irradiance virtual, or immediate touch ? Milton.

To IRRADIANTE. v. a. [irradio, Latin.]

1. To adorn with light emitted upon it ; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffusion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light. Digby.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace ; such an one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South.

2. To enlighten intellectually ; to illumine ; to illuminate.

Celestial light

Shine inward, and the mind through all her

pow'rs

Irradiate ; there plant eyes ; all mist from thence Purge and disperse. Milton.

3. To animate by heat or light.

Ethereal or solar heat must digest, influence, irradiate, and put those more simple parts of matter into motion. Hale.

4. To decorate with shining ornaments.

No weeping orphan saw his father's store
Our shrines irradiate, or imblaze the floor. Pope.

IRRADIATION. n. s. [irradiation, Fr. from irradiate.]

1. The act of emitting beams of light.

If light were a body, it should drive away the air, which is likewise a body wherever it is admitted ; for within the whole sphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found. Digby on Bodies.

The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or answerably unto the propagation of light ; but herein a transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Illumination ; intellectual light.

The means of immediate union of these intelligible objects to the understanding, are sometimes divine and supernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation. Hale.

IRRATIONAL. adj. [irrationalis, Lat.]

1. Void of reason ; void of understanding ; wanting the discursive faculty.

Thus began
Outrage from lifeless things ; but discord first Daughter of sin, among th' irrational Death introduc'd. Milton.

He hath eat'n and lives,
And knows, and speaks, and reasons and discerns :

Irrational till then. Milton.

2. Absurd ; contrary to reason.

Since the brain is only a part transmittent, and that humours oft are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive to the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from so irrational an application. Harvey on Consumptions.

I shall quietly submit, not wishing so irrational a thing as that every body should be deceived. Pope.

IRRATIONALITY. n. s. [from irrational.]

Want of reason.

IRRATIONALLY. adv. [from irrational.]

Without reason ; absurdly.

IRRECLAIMABLE. adj. [in and reclaimable.] Not to be reclaimed ; not to be changed to the better.

As for obstinate, irreclaimable, professed enemies, we must expect their calumnies will continue. Addison.

IRRECONCILABLE. adj. [irreconcilable, Fr. in and reconcilable.]

1. Not to be recalled to kindness ; not to be appeased.

Wage eternal war,
Irreconcilable to our grand foe. Milton.

A weak unequal faction may animate a government ; but when it grows equal in strength, and irreconcilable by animosity, it cannot end without some crisis. Temple.

2. Not to be made consistent : it has with or to.

There are no factions, though irreconcilable to one another, that are not united in their affection to you. Dryden.

As she was strictly virtuous herself, so she always put the best construction upon the words and actions of her neighbours, except where they were irreconcilable to the rules of honesty and decency. Arbuthnot.

Since the sense I oppose is attended with such gross irreconcilable absurdities, I presume I need not offer any thing farther in support of the one, or in disproof of the other. Rogers.

This essential power of gravitation or attraction is irreconcilable with the atheists own doctrine of a chaos. Bentley.

All that can be transmitted from the stars is wholly unaccountable, and irreconcilable to any system of science. Bentley.

It is found in Muscovy, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. Hill.

ISLAND. n. f. [insula, Latin; isola, Italian; ealand, Erse. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakspeare.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,
An island shades it from the rolling sea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Island of bliss! amid' the subject seas. Thomson.

ISLANDER. n. f. [from island. Pronounced ilander.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Camden.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence. Shakspeare.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and inhospitable: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Addison.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
Unpolish'd men, and boist'rous as their seas;
The native islanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope.

ISLE. n. f. [isle, French; insula, Latin. Pronounced ile.]

1. An island; a country furrounded by water.

The instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of this famous isle. Shakspeare.
The dreadful fight
Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:
Seas stain'd with gore I sing, advent'rous toil,
And how these monsters did disarm an isle. Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aile, from aile, Fr. from ale, Latin, the aile being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from allée, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or publick building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long sounding isses and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy sits. Pope.

ISSUE. n. f. [issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.
2. Exit; egress; passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death. Psalms.

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been, if that issue of wealth had been stopped? Swift.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine issues. Shakspeare.

If I were ever fearful
To do a thing, were I the issue doubted, Whereof the execution did cry out Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wisest. Shakspeare.

But let the issue correspondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterprise. Fairfax.

If things were cast upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin 'till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever. South.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South.

Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the atheist desires. Bentley.

4. Termination; conclusion.

He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publickly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

What issue of my love remains for me!
How wild a passion works within my breast!
With what prodigious flames am I possest! Dryden.

Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Brown.

5. Sequel deduced from premises.

I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakspeare's Othello.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.

This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wiseman.

8. Progeny; offspring.

O nation miserable!

Since that the truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurst. Shaksp.
Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd
True Paradise, under the Æthiop line
By Nilus' head. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This old peaceful prince, as Heav'n decreed,
Was blest'd with no male issue to succeed. Dryd.
The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to consist with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. In law.

Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expences of suit; sometimes for profits of lands or tenements; sometimes for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury.
Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be questio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be questio facti. Cowell.

To ISSUE. v. n. [from the noun; isser,
French; uscire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.

Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Ezek.

From the utmost end of the head branches there
issueth out a gummy juice. Raleigh's History.

Waters issu'd from a cave. Milton.

Ere Pallas issu'd from the thunderer's head,

2. To make an eruption; to break out.

Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shaksp.

See that none hence issue forth a spy. Milton.

Haste, arm your Ardeans, issue to the plain;
With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.

At length there issu'd, from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.

A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Strait issue through the sides assembling swarms. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithacensians stand,
And furl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope.

3. To proceed as an offspring.

Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings.

4. To be produced by any fund.

These altarges issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To run out in lines.

Pipes made with a belly towards the lower end,
and then issuing into a strait concave again. Bacon.

To ISSUE. v. a.

1. To send out; to send forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon.

The commissioners should issue money out to no other use. Temple.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense.
It is commonly followed by a particle,
out or forth.

If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some noblemen published a protestation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mourning god:
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deities. Dryden.

In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryd.
They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ISSUELESS. adj. [from issue.] Having no offspring; wanting descendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew.

I have done sin;
For which the Heav'ns, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

ISTHMUS. n. f. [isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.

There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnablely fortified. Sandys' Travels.

The Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas. Brerewood on Languages.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that dost proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet can'st not wave nor wind sustain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it.
Stillingfleet.

Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Creech.

Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.

IT. pronoun. [hit, Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things. For it, our ancestors used he, as the neutral pronoun; and for its they used his. Thus in the Accidence, a noun adjective is that which cannot stand by himself, but requireth another word to be joined with him to show his signification.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Will our great anger learn to stoop so low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who master art of it. Cowley.

His son, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Flatman.

The time will come, it will, when you shall know
The rage of love. Dryden.

How can I speak? or how, sir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dryden.

A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions? Locke.

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabrick began to melt.
Addison's Freholder.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley.

The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.

How is it with our general?
—Even so
As with a man by his own alms impositon'd,
And with his charity slain. Shaksp.

3. It is used for the thing; the matter;
the affair.

It's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,
He lifted with such might and strength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length. Hudibras.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.

The Lacedemonians, at the straits of Ther-mopylæ, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Locke.

The mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Spect.

Whether the charmer sinner it, or faint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludi-crously, or rudely to persons.

Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peevish kinsman. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shaksp. King John.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the il y a of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was 't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word Macduff is fled to England. Shaksp. Macbeth.

City,
'Tis I, that made thy widows. Shaksp. Coriol.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul.
Pope.

ITCH. n. f. [gicha, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised, as microscopes have discovered, by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrows of our youths,
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains. Shaksp. Timon.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou can'st not be healed. Deut.

As if divinity had catch'd
The itch on purpose to be scratch'd. Hudibras.

2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teasing desire.

A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Estrange.

He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch
of being thought a divine king. Dryden.

From servants company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.

At half mankind when gen'rous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue, for he thinks them knaves;
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.

To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.

A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wifeman.

My right eye itches; some good luck is near; Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear. Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.

Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.—Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shakspeare.

Cassius, you yourself Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm, To sell and mart your offices for gold. Shaksp.
The itching ears, being an epidemick disease, gave fair opportunity to every mountebank. Decay of Piety.

All such have still an itching to deride, And fain would be upon the laughing side. Pope.
I'TCHY. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.

I'TEM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

I'TEM. n. s.

1. A new article.

I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items. Shakspeare.

2. A hint; an innuendo.

If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Glanville.

To I'TERATE. v. a. [itero, Latin.]

1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all; this is the very cause why we iterate the psalms oftener than any other part of scripture besides; the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone, to read them, as other parts of scripture he doth. Hooker.

In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest. Hooker.

The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility. Bacon's Henry VII.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly; the other in concurrence, when the sound returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterateth it not, but amplifieth it. Bacon.

2. To do over again.

Ashes burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions. Brown.

Adam took no thought, Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate Her former trespass fear'd, the more to sooth Him with her lov'd society. Milton's Par. Lost.

I'TERANT. adj. [iterans, Lat.] Repeating.

Waters being near, make a current echo; but being farther off, they make an iterant echo. Bacon's Natural History.

ITERA'TION. n. s. [iteration, Fr. iteratio, Lat.] Repetition; recital over again.

Truth tir'd with iteration
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shaksp.

My husband!

—Ay, 'twas he that told me first.

—My husband!

—What needs this iteration, woman?

I say, thy husband. Shakspeare's Othello.

Iterations are commonly loss of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chafeth away many a frivolous speech. Bacon's Essays.

In all these respects, it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is farther improved by the frequent iteration and repetition. Hammond.

IT'NERANT. adj. [itinerant, Fr.] Wandering; not settled.

It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of itinerant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares. Addison's Spectator.

IT'NERARY. n. s. [itinaire, Fr. itinerarium, Lat.] A book of travels.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom. Addison on Italy.

IT'NERARY. adj. [itinaire, Fr. itinerarius, Lat.] Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it was rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress. Bacon.

ITSELF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.

Who then shall blame

His peester'd senses, to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there? Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor. Locke.

JU'BILANT. adj. [jubilans, Lat.] Uttering songs of triumph.

The planets list'ning stood,
While the bright pomp ascended jubilant. Milt.

JUBILA'TION. n. s. [jubilatio, Fr. jubilatio, Lat.] The act of declaring triumph.

JU'BILEE. n. s. [jubilé, Fr. jubilum, from jubilo, low Lat.] A publick festivity; a time of rejoicing; a season of joy.

Angels utt'ring joy, heav'n rung
With jubilee, and loud hosannas filled
Th' eternal regions. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing, the recreation of the judgment, or rejoicing the jubilee of reason. South.

The town was all a jubilee of feasts. Dryden.

JUCUNDITY. n. s. [jucunditas, jucundus, Lat.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.

The new or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves, will have activity enough to excite the earthiest soul, and raise a smile from the most composed tempers. Brown.

JUDAS Tree. n. s. [siliquastrum, Lat.] A plant.

Judas tree yields a fine purplish, bright, red blossom in the spring, and is increased by layers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To JUDA'IZE. v. n. [judaiser, Fr. judaiizo, low Lat.] To conform to the manner of the Jews.

Paul judaiiz'd with the Jews, was all to all. Sandys.

JUDGE. n. s. [judge, Fr. judex, Lat.]

1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.

Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? Genesis.

A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation. Psalms.
Thou art judge

Of all things made, and judgest only right. Milton.

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it. Shakspeare.

A single voice; and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the judge. Shakspeare.

How dares your pride,
As in a lifted field to fight your cause,
Unask'd the royal grant; nor marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully: it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign judge of his own art. Dryden.

3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.

One court there is in which he who knows the secrets of every heart will sit judge himself. Sherlock.

A perfect judge will read each piece of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.

To JUDGE. v. n. [juger, Fr. judico, Lat.]

1. To pass sentence.

My wrong be upon thee; the Lord judge between thee and me. Genesis.

Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. 2 Chron.

2. To form or give an opinion.

Beshrew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge aright. Shaksp.

Authors to themselves,
Both what they judge and what they chuse. Milton.

If I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge, by the copies, which was Virgil, and which Ovid. Dryden.

Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident. Locke.

He proceeds in his inquiry into sciences, resolved to judge of them freely. Locke.

3. To discern; to distinguish; to consider accurately.

How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud? Job.

Judge in yourselves: is it comely a woman pray unto God uncovered? 1 Cor.

How properly the Tories may be called the whole body of the British nation, I leave to any one's judging. Addison.

To JUDGE. v. a.

1. To pass sentence upon; to examine authoritatively; to determine finally.

Chaos shall judge the strife. Milton.

Then those, whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.

2. To pass severe censure; to doom severely. This is a sense seldom found but in the scriptures.

He shall judge among the heathen; he shall fill the places with the dead bodies. Psalms.

Judge not, that ye be not judged. Matthew.
Let no man judge you in meat or drink. Col.

JU'DGER. n. s. [from judge.] One who forms judgment, or passes sentence.

The vulgar threatened to be their oppressors, and judgers of their judges. King Charles.

They who guide themselves merely by what appears, are ill judgers of what they have not well examined. Digby.

JU'DGMENT. n. s. [jugement, French.]

1. The power of discerning the relations between one term or one proposition and another.

O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason. Shakspeare.

The faculty, which God has given man to supply the want of certain knowledge, is judgment, whereby the mind takes any proposition to be true or false, without perceiving a demonstrative evidence in the proofs. Locke.

J U D

Judgment is that whereby we join ideas together by affirmation or negation; so this tree is high. Watts.

2. Doom; the right or power of passing judgment.

If my suspect be false, forgive me, God;
For judgment only doth belong to thee. Shaksp.

3. The act of exercising judicature; judicatory.

They gave judgment upon him. 2 Kings.
When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclos'd
In majesty severe,

And sit in judgment on my soul,
O how shall I appear? Addison's Spectator.

4. Determination; decision.

Where distinctions or indentities are purely material, the judgment is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding. Glanville.
We shall make a certain judgment what kind of dissolution that earth was capable of. Burnet.

Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgment of things proposed to our inquiry. Watts.

5. The quality of distinguishing propriety and impropriety; criticism.

Judgment, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man in the rapture of poetical composition. Dennis.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

6. Opinion; notion.

I see men's judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward Draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. Shaksp.

When she did think my master lov'd her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you. Shaksp.

7. Sentence against a criminal.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd
With agony. Shaksp.

The chief priests informed me, desiring to have judgment against him. AEs.
On Adam last this judgment he pronounc'd. Milton.

8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.

The judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. Romans.

The precepts, promises, and threatenings of the gospel will rise up in judgment against us, and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation. Tillotson.

9. Punishment inflicted by providence, with reference to some particular crime.

This judgment of the heavens that makes us tremble, Touches us not with pity. Shaksp. King Lear.

We cannot be guilty of greater uncharitableness, than to interpret afflictions as punishments and judgments: it aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance. Addison's Spectator.

10. Distribution of justice.

The Jews made insurrection against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat. AEs.

Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shaksp.

In judgments between rich and poor, consider not what the poor man needs, but what is his own. Taylor.

A bold and wise petitioner goes strait to the throne and judgment seat of the monarch. Arbuthnot and Pope.

11. Judiciary law; statute.

If ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them, the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant. Deuteronomy.

J U G

12. The last doom.

The dreadful judgment day
So dreadful will not be as was his fight. Shaksp.

JUDICATORY. n. f. [judico, Latin.]

1. Distribution of justice.

No such crime appeared as the lords, the supreme court of judicatory, would judge worthy of death. Clarendon.

2. Court of justice.

Human judicatories give sentence on matters of right and wrong, but inquire not into bounty and beneficence. Atterbury.

JUDICATURE. n. f. [judicature, French; judico, Latin.]

1. Power of distributing justice.

The honour of the judges in their judicature is the king's honour. Bacon.

If he should bargain for a place of judicature, let him be rejected with shame. Bacon.

2. Court of justice.

In judicatures to take away the trumpet, the scarlet, the attendance, makes justice naked as well as blind. South.

JUDICIAL. adj. [judicium, Latin.]

1. Practised in the distribution of publick justice.

What government can be without judicial proceedings? And what judicature without a religious oath? Bentley.

2. Inflicted on as a penalty.

The resistance of those will cause a judicial hardness. South.

JUDICIALLY. adv. [from judicial.] In the forms of legal justice.

It will behove us to think that we see God still looking on, and weighing all our thoughts, words, and actions in the balance of infallible justice, and passing the same judgment which he intends hereafter judicially to declare. Grew.

JUDICIARY. adj. [judiciare, Fr. judiciarius, Latin.] Passing judgment upon any thing.

Before weight be laid upon judiciary astrologers, the influence of constellations ought to be made out. Boyle.

JUDICIOUS. adj. [judicieux, French.] Prudent; wise; skillful in any matter or affair.

For your husband,
He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits o' th' season. Shaksp.

Love hath his seat
In reason, and is judicious. Milton.

To each favour meaning we apply,
And palate call judicious. Milton.

We are beholden to judicious writers of all ages for those discoveries they have left behind them. Locke.

JUDICIOUSLY. adv. [from judicious.] Skillfully; wisely; with just determination.

So bold, yet so judiciously you dare,
That your least praise is to be regular. Dryden.

Longinus has judiciously preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to excellence. Dryden.

JUG. n. f. [juge, Danish.] A large drinking vessel with a gibbous or swelling belly.

You'd rail upon the hostess of the house,
Because she bought stone jugs and no seal'd quarts. Shaksp.

He fetch'd 'em drink,
Fill'd a large jug up to the brink. Swift.

TO JUGGLE. v. n. [jougler or jongler, Fr. joculari, Latin.]

J U I

show false appearances of extraordinary performances.

The ancient miracle of Memnon's statue seems to be a juggling of the Ethiopian priests. Digby on Bodies.

2. To practise artifice or imposture.

Be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense. Shaksp.
Is't possible that spells of France should juggle
Men into such strange mockeries? Shaksp.
They ne'er forswore themselves, nor lied,
Disdain'd to stay for friends consents;
Nor juggled about settlements. Hudibras.

JUGGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A trick by legerdemain.

2. An imposture; a deception.

The notion was not the invention of politicians, and a juggle of state to cozen the people into obedience. Tillotson.

JUGGLER. n. f. [from juggle.]

1. One who practises slight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working forcerers that change the mind,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shaksp.

I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought. Bacon.

Aristæus was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Cræsus, and a notable juggler. Sandys' Travels.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and impostors, do daily delude them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The juggler which another's sight can show,
But teaches how the world his own may know. Garth.

One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand; but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles. Addison's Freeholder.

What magick makes our money rise,
When dropt into the southern main:
Or do these jugglers cheat our eyes? Swift.

2. A cheat; a trickish fellow.

O me, you juggler; oh, you canker blossom,
You thief of love; what, have you come by night,
And stol'n my love's heart from him? Shaksp.

I sing no harm
To officer, juggler, or justice of peace. Donne.

JUGGLINGLY. adv. [from juggle.] In a deceptive manner.

JUGULAR. adj. [jugulum, Latin.] Belonging to the throat.

A gentleman was wounded into the internal jugular, through his neck. Wifeman's Surgery.

JUICE. n. f. [jus, French; juys, Dutch.]

1. The liquor, sap, or water of plants and fruits.

If I define wine, I must say, wine is a juice not liquid, or wine is a substance; for juice includes both substance and liquid. Watts.

Unnumber'd fruits,
A friendly juice to cool thirst's rage contain. Thomson.

2. The fluid in animal bodies.

Juice in language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, scarce covering the bone. Ben Jonson's Discovery.

An animal whose juices are unsound can never be nourished: unsound juices can never repair the fluids. Arbuthnot.

JUICELESS. adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice

Divine Providence has spread her table every where; not with a juiceless green carpet, but with succulent herbage and nourishing grass. Mare.

When Boreas' spirit blusters fore, Beware th' inclement heav'ns; now let thy hearth
Crackle with juiceless boughs. Philips.

JU'ICINESS. n. f. [from juice.] Plenty of juice; succulence.

JU'ICY. adj. [from juice.] Moist; full of juice; succulent.

Earth being taken out of watery woods, will put forth herbs of a fat and juicy substance.

Bacon's Natural History.

Each plant and juiciest gourd will pluck.

Milton.

The musk's surpassing worth! that, in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offspring. Philips.

To JUKE. v. n. [jucher, French.]

1. To perch upon any thing as birds.

2. Juking, in Scotland, denotes still any complaisance by bending of the head.

Two asses travelled; the one laden with oats, the other with money: the money-merchant was so proud of his trust, that he went juking and tossing of his head. L'Estrange.

JU'JUB. n. f. [zizyphus, Lat.] A

JU'JUBES. n. f. plant whose flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose.
The fruit is like a small plum, but it has little flesh upon the stone. Miller.

JU'LAP. n. f. [A word of Arabick original; julapium, low Lat. julep, Fr.] An extemporaneous form of medicine, made of simple and compound water sweetened, and serving for a vehicle to other forms not so convenient to take alone.

Quincy.

Behold this cordial julap here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds
With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mixt.

Milton.

If any part of the after-birth be left, endeavour the bringing that away; and by good sudorifics and cordials expel the venom, and con-temperate the heat and acrimony by julaps and emulsions. Wise man's Surgery.

JU'LUS. n. f.

1. July flower.

2. Julus, lul, among botanists, denotes those long worm-like tufts or palms, as they are called, in willows, which at the beginning of the year grow out, and hang pendular down from hazels, walnut-trees, &c. Miller.

JU'LY. n. f. [Julius, Latin; juillet, Fr.]
The month anciently called quintilis, or the fifth from March, named July in honour of Julius Caesar; the seventh month from January.

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bosom sun-burnt. Peacham.

JUMART. n. f. [French.]

Mules and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an ass and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent. Locke.

To JU'MBLE. v. a. [in Chaucer, jombres, from combler, French, Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.

Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed. L'Estrange.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy scripture. Locke.

Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky means make people wise?
And jumbled words, if fortune throw them,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior.
Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were created, and are ordered for the best, than that the universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favouredly cobbled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter? Bentley.

How tragedy and comedy embrace,
How farce and epick get a jumbled race. Pope.

That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy.

Swift.

To JU'MBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.

JU'MBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.

Had the world been coagulated from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glanville.

What jumble here is made of ecclesiastical revenues, as if they were all alienated with equal justice. Swift.

JU'MENT. n. f. [jument, French; jumentum, Latin.] Beast of burden.

Juments, as horses, oxen, and asses, have no eructation, or belching. Brown's Vulg. Err.

To JUMP. v. n. [gumpen, Dutch.]

1. To leap; to skip; to move without step or sliding.

Not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and an half by the square. Shakspeare.

The herd come jumping by me,
And fearless quench their thirst, while I look on,
And take me for their fellow-citizen. Dryden.

So have I seen from Severn's brink,
A flock of geese jump down together,
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
And swimming never wet a feather. Swift.

Candidates petition the emperor to entertain the court with a dance on the rope; and whoever jumps the highest succeeds in the office.

Gulliver's Travels.

2. To leap suddenly.

One Peregrinus jumped into a fiery furnace at the Olympick games, only to shew the company how far his vanity could carry him. Collier.
We see a little, presume a great deal, and so jump to the conclusion. Spectator.

3. To jolt.

The noise of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nahum.

4. To agree; to tally; to join.

Do not embrace me till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune, do cohere and jump
That I am Viola. Shakspeare. Twelfth Night.
In some sort it jumps with my humour.

Shakspeare.

But though they jump not on a just account,
Yet do they all confirm a Turkish fleet.

Shakspeare.

Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the bar'rous nations. Shakspeare.
Herein perchance he jumps not with Lipsius.

Hakewill.

Never did trusty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras.

This shews how perfectly the rump
And commonwealth in nature jump:
For as a fly that goes to bed,
Rests with his tail above his head;
So in this mungrel state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers. Hudibras.

Good wits jump, and mine, the nimbler of the two. More.

Good now, how your devotions jump with mine.
Dryden.

I am happier for finding our judgments jump
in the notion. Pope to Swift.

To JUMP. v. a. To pass by a leap; to pass eagerly or carelessly over.

Here, upon this bank and shelf of time,
We'd jump the life to come. Shakspeare. Macbeth.

JUMP. adv. Exactly; nicely. Obsolete.

Otherwise one man could not excel another, but all should be either absolutely good, as hitting jump that indivisible point or center wherein goodness consisteth; or else missing it, they should be excluded out of the number of welldoers. Hooker.

But since so jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,

Are here arriv'd. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump, when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife. Shakspeare's Othello.

JUMP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of jumping; a leap; a skip;
a bound.

The surest way for a learner is, not to advance by jumps and large strides; let that, which he sets himself to learn next, be as nearly conjoined with what he knows already, as is possible.
Locke.

2. A lucky chance.

Do not exceed

The prescript of this scrawl: our fortune lies Upon this jump. Shakspeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. [jupe, French] A waistcoat; a kind of loose or limber stays worn by sickly ladies.

The weeping cassock scar'd into a jump,
A sign the presbyter's worn to the stump.
Cleaveland.

Italian.]

1. Cheesecake; a kind of sweetmeat of curds and sugar.

2. Any delicacy.

A goodly table of pure ivory,
All spread with juncates, fit to entertain
The greatest prince. Spenser.
With stories told of many a feat,
How fairy Mab the juncates eat. Milton.

3. A furtive or private entertainment. It is now improperly written junket in this sense, which alone remains much in use.
See JUNKET.

JU'NCOUS. adj. [juncus, Lat.] Full of bulrushes.

JU'NCTION. n. f. [jonction, Fr.] Union; coalition.

Upon the junction of the two corps, our spies discovered a great cloud of dust. Addison.

JU'NCTURE. n. f. [junctura, Latin.]

1. The line at which two things are joined together.

Besides those grosser elements of bodies, salt, sulphur, and mercury, there may be ingredients of a more subtle nature, which, being extremely little, may escape unheeded at the junctures of the diffusatory vessels, though never so carefully luted. Boyle.

2. Joint; articulation.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being less in danger of breaking than if they were all one entire bone without those gristly junctures. More.

All other animals have transverse bodies; and though some do raise themselves upon their hinder legs to an upright posture, yet they cannot endure it long, neither are the figures or junctures, or order of their bones, fitted to such a posture. Hale.

3. Union ; amity.

Nor are the soberest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and junction of hearts, which I desire to bear in those holy offices to be performed with me. King Charles.

4. A critical point or article of time.

By this profession in that junction of time, they bid farewell to all the pleasures of this life. Addis.

When any law does not conduce to the publick safety, but in some extraordinary junctions, the very observation of it would endanger the community, that law ought to be laid asleep. Addison.

JUNE. n. f. [Jun, Fr. Junius, Lat.]

The sixth month from January.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark green. Peacham.

JUNIOR. adj. [junior, Lat.] One younger than another.

The fools, my juniors, by a year,
Are tortur'd with suspense and fear,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd to stand between. Swift.

According to the nature of men of years, I was repining at the rise of my juniors, and unequal distribution of wealth. Tatler.

JUNIPER. n. f. [juniperus, Lat.] A tree.

A clyster may be made of the common decoctions, or of mallows, bay, and juniper berries, with oil of linseed. Wiseman.

JUNK. n. f. [probably an Indian word.]

1. A small ship of China.

America, which have now but junks and canoes, abounded then in tall ships. Bacon.

2. Pieces of old cable.

JUNKET. n. f. [properly juncate.] See JUNCATE.

1. A sweetmeat.

You know there wants no junkets at the feast. Shakspeare.

2. A stolen entertainment.

To JUNKET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feast secretly ; to make entertainments by stealth.

Whatever good bits you can pilfer in the day, save them to junket with your fellow-servants at night. Swift.

2. To feast.

Job's children junketed and feasted together often, but the reckoning cost them dear at last. South.

The apostle would have no revelling or junketing. South.

JUNTO. n. f. [Italian.] A cabal ; a kind of men combined in any secret design.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work, at length come and dance attendance for approbation upon a junto of petty tyrants, acted by party and prejudice, who denied fitness from learning and grace from morality ? South.

From this time began an intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers, which had like to have ended in my destruction. Gulliver.

IVORY. n. f. [ivoire, Fr. ebur, Lat.] A hard, solid, and firm substance, of a fine white colour : it is the dens exertus of the elephant, who carries on each side of his jaws a tooth of six or seven feet in length ; the two sometimes weighing three hundred and thirty pounds : these ivory tusks are hollow from the base to a certain height, and the cavity is filled with a compact medullary substance. Hill.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakspeare.

VOL. I.

Draw Erato with a sweet and lovely countenance, bearing a heart with an ivory key. Peacham.

From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issu'd. Milton.

Two gates the silent house of sleep adorn,
Of polish'd ivory this, that of transparent horn :
True visions through transparent horn arise,
Through polish'd ivory pass deluding lies. Dryd.

JUPPON. n. f. [juppon, Fr.] A short close coat.

Some wore a breast-plate and a light juppon,
Their horses cloth'd with rich caparison. Dryd.

With legal authority ; according to forms of justice.

JURISCONSULT. n. f. [juris consultus, Lat.]

One who gives his opinion in cases of law.

There is mention made, in a decision of the jurisconsult Javolenus, of a Britannick fleet. Arbutnot.

JURISDICTION. n. f. [jurisdictio, Lat. jurisdiction, Fr.]

1. Legal authority ; extent of power.

Sometimes the practice of such jurisdiction may swerve through error even in the very best, and for other respects, where less integrity is. Hooker.

You wrought to be a legate ; by which power
You maim'd the jurisdiction of all bishops. Shakspeare.

All persons exercising ecclesiastical jurisdiction should have the king's arms in their seals of office. Hayward.

This place exempt
From Heav'n's high jurisdiction. Milton.

As Adam had no such power as gave him
Sovereign jurisdiction over mankind. Locke.

This custom in a popular state, of impeaching particular men, may seem to be nothing else but the people's chusing to exercise their own jurisdiction in person. Swift.

2. District to which any authority extends.

JURISPRUDENCE. n. f. [jurisprudence, Fr. jurisprudentia, Lat.] The science of law.

This is not to be measured by the principles of jurists. Bacon.

JUROR. n. f. [juro, Lat.] One that serves on the jury.

Were the jurors picked out of choice men, the evidence will be as deceitful as the verdict. Spenser.

I shall find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful, I see your end,
'Tis my undoing. Shakspeare.

I sing no harm, good sooth ! to any wight,
Juror, or judge. Donne.

About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in. Hayward.

JURY. n. f. [jurata, Lat. juré, Fr.] A company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question.

There be three manners of trials in England : one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the escheatour make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest : if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest : the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner : so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize ; assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, empannelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half-year courts of the justices errants, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes ; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, there are usually many juries, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court ; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, billa vera, or disallow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance ; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari ; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least ; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant : according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began ; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Cowell.

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. Shakspeare.

How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness. Shakspeare.
Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bacon.

JURYMAN. n. f. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.
No judge was known, upon or off the bench,
To use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests of any one single jurymen, much less of a whole jury. Swift.

JURMAST. n. f. It seems to be properly durée mast, mât de durée, a mast made to last for the present occasion. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast lost in a fight or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the mizen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a shift to sail. Harris.

JUST. adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Lat.]

1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the distribution of justice.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age. Dryd.

Men are commonly so just to virtue and goodness, as to praise it in others, even when they do not practise it themselves. Tillotson.

2. Honest; without crime in dealing with others.

Just balances, just weights, and a just ephah. Leviticus.

3. I know not whether just of has any other authority.

Just of thy word, in ev'ry thought sincere,
Who knew no wish but what the world might hear. Pope.

4. Exact; proper; accurate.

Boileau's numbers are excellent, his expressions noble, his thoughts just, his language pure, and his sense close. Dryden.

These scenes were wrought,
Embellish'd with good morals and just thought. Granville.

Just precepts thus from great examples giv'n,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from Heav'n. Pope.

Just to the tale, as present at the fray,
Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.

Once on a time La Mancha's knight, they say,
A certain bard encount'ring on the way,
Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
As ere could Dennis of the laws o' th' stage. Pope.

Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Watts' Logick.

5. Virtuous; innocent; pure.

How should man be just with God? Job.
A just man falleth seven times and riseth. Proverbs.

He shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Matthew.

The just th' unjust to serve. Milton.

6. True; not forged.

Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit. Hooker.

7. Grounded on principles of justice; rightful.

Me though just right
Did first create your leader. Milton.

8. Equally retributed.

He received a just recompence of reward. Hebr.
Whose damnation is just. Romans.

As Hesiod sings, spread water o'er thy fields,
And a most just and glad increase it yields. Denham.

9. Complete without superfluity or defect.

He was a comely personage, a little above just stature, well and strait limbed, but slender. Bacon.

10. Regular; orderly.

When all
The war shall stand ranged in its just array,
And dreadful pomp, then will I think on thee. Addison.

11. Exactly proportioned.

The prince is here at hand: pleaseth your lordship
To meet his grace, just distance 'tween our armies? Shakspeare.

12. Full; of full dimensions.

His soldiers had skirmishes with the Numidians, so that once the skirmish was like to have come to a just battle. Knolles.

There is not any one particular above mentioned, but would take up the business of a just volume. Hale.

There seldom appeared a just army in the civil wars. Dutchess of Newcastle.

JUST. adv.

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

The god Pan guided my hand just to the heart of the beast. Sidney.

They go about to make us believe that they are just of the same opinion, and that they only think such ceremonies are not to be used when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be established. Hooker.

There, ev'n just there he stood; and as he spoke,
Where last the spectre was, she cast her look. Dryden.

A few understand him right; just as when our Saviour said, in an allegorical sense, Except ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Bentley.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

2. Merely; barely.

It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themselves upon just nothing at all. L'Estrange.

The Nereids swam before
To smooth the seas; a soft etesian gale
But just inspir'd and gently swell'd the sail. Dryden.

Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
That so I neither may be rich nor poor;
And having just enough, not covet more. Dryd.

3. Nearly; almost; tantum non.

Being spent with age, and just at the point of death, Democritus called for loaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.

JUST. n. f. [jouste, French.] Mock encounter on horseback; tilt; tournament. Joust is more proper.

None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than jousts, both with sword and lance. Sidney.

What news? hold those jousts and triumphs? Shakspeare.

Among themselves the tourney they divide,
In equal squadrons rang'd on either side,
Then turn'd their horses heads, and man to man,
And steed to steed oppos'd, the jousts began. Dryden.

To JUST. v. n. [jouster, French.]

1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.

2. To push; to drive; to juggle.

JUSTICE. n. f. [justice, French; justitia, Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due: opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive, belonging to magistrates; or commutative, respecting common transactions between men.

O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temp'rance, stableness,
I have no relish of them. Shakspeare.

The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Locke.

2. Equity; agreeableness to right: as, he proved the justice of his claim.

3. Vindicative retribution; punishment: opposed to mercy.

He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut.
Let justice overtake us. Isaiah.
Examples of justice must be made, for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others. Bacon.

4. Right; assertion of right.

Draw thy sword,
That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakspeare.

5. [justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment. Cowell.

And thou, Esdras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Esdras.

6. JUSTICE of the King's Bench. [justiciarius de Banquo Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest; wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Angliæ. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them. Cowell.

Give that whipster his errand,
He'll take my lord chief justice' warrant. Prior.

7. JUSTICE of the Common Pleas. [justiciarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowell.

8. JUSTICE of the Forest. [justiciarius Forestæ.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert: of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowell.

9. JUSTICES of Assise. [justicarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assises; the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorized and sent down to them. Cowell.

10. JUSTICES in Eyre. [justicarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in Eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Corwell.

11. JU'STICES of Gaol Delivery. [justiciarii ad Gaolas deliberandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprise those prisoners that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assize were likewise authorized to this. Corwell.

12. JU'STICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assize; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day: nisi prius justiciarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius as well as justices of assize, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Corwell.

13. JU'STICES of Peace. [justiciarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Corwell.

The justice,

In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakspeare.

Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Shakspeare.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction. Bacon.

To JU'STICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. Not in use.

As for the title of proserption, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justified himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended for intending to poison the young queen of Scots; the king delivered him to the French king, to be justified by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

JU'STICEMENT. n. s. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.

JU'STICER. n. s. [from To justice.] Administrator of justice. An old word.

He was a singular good justicer; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Davies on Ireland.

JU'STICESHIP. n. s. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Swift.

JU'STICIABLE. adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice.

JU'STIFIABLE. adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason.

Just are the ways of God,
And justifiable to men. Milton's Agonistes.

Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

JU'STIFIABLENESS. n. s. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough. King Charles.

JU'STIFIABLY. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right; defensibly.

A man may more justifiably throw cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke.

JUSTIFICATION. n. s. [justification, Fr. justificatio, low Latin.]

1. Absolution.

I hope for my brother's justification; he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shakspeare.

2. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support.

Among theological arguments in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. Swift.

3. Deliverance by pardon from sins past.

Clarke.

In such righteousness

To them by faith imputed, they may find Justification towards God, and peace Of conscience. Milton's Par. Lost.

'Tis the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare aptness of faith to bring forth works; if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hammond.

JUSTIFICA'TOR. n. s. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JU'STIFIER. n. s. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Romans.

To JU'STIFY. v. a. [justifier, French; justifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor;
I cannot justify whom law condemns. Shakspeare.
They say, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children. Matthew.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? Job.

There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that justifieth in judgment. Ecclesi.

Sins may be forgiven through repentance, but no act of wit of man will ever justify them. Sherlock.

You're neither justified nor yet accus'd. Dryden.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.

When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood. Sidney.

What she did, whatever in itself,
Her doing seem'd to justify the deed. Milton.

My unwilling flight the gods inforce,
And that must justify our sad divorce. Denham.

Yet still thy fools shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense. Dryden.

Let others justify their millions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession. Atterbury.

3. To free from past sin by pardon.

By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Acts.

To JU'STLE. v. n. [from just, joustler, French.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance Puts back leave taking, justles roughly by All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure. Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida.

The chariot shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways. Nahum.

Argo pass'd,
Through Bosphorus, betwixt the justling rocks. Milton.

Late the clouds
Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,

Tine the slant lightning. Milton's Par. Lost.

Not one starry spark,
But gods meet gods, and justle in the dark. Lee.

Courtiers therefore justle for a grant;
And, when they break their friendship, plead their want. Dryden.

The more remote run stumbling with their fear,
And, in the dark, men justle as they meet. Dryden.

When elephant 'gainst elephant did rear
His trunk, and castles justled in the air,
My sword thy way to victory had shown. Dryden.

Was there not one who had set bars and doors to it, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be staid;
then might we well expect such vicissitudes, such justlings and clashings in nature. Woodward.

I thought the dean had been too proud
To justle here among a crowd. Swift.

To JU'STLE. v. a. To push; to drive; to force by rushing against it. It is commonly used with a particle following, as out or off.

Private and single abilities should not justle out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

Many excellent strains have been justled off by their intrusions. Brown's Vulgar Err.

The surly commons shall respect deny,
And justle peerage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and abuses of writing can ever be justled out of their possession of all libraries. Holder.

Running in the dark, a man may justle a post. Collier.

Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappiness in its absence, is justled out, to make way for the removal of those uneasinesses we feel. Locke.

We justled one another out, and disputed the post for a great while. Adamsen.

JU'STLY. adv. [from just.]

1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner.

Nothing can justly be despised, that cannot justly be blamed: where there is no choice, there can be no blame. South.

With ignominy scourg'd, in open sight;
Next view the Tarquin kings; th' avenging sword
Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restor'd. Dryden.

J U T

The goddess, studious of her Grecians fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting justly, and in writing well. Prior.

2. Properly; exactly; accurately.

Their artful hands instruct the lute to sound,
Their feet assist their hands, and justly beat the ground. Dryden.

JU'STNESS. n. f. [from just.]1. Justice; reasonableness; equity. Just- ness is properly applied to things, and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.

It maketh unto the right of the war against him, whose success useth commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made.

Spenser on Ireland.

We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it.

Shakspeare.

2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety. In this sense it is now most used.

I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented, with all the justness and gracefulness of action. Dryden.

I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatick poet, when he had any dispute with particular persons about the just- ness and regularity of his productions. Addison.

To JUT. v. n. [Supposed to be corrupted from jet, perhaps from shoot.] To push or shoot into prominences; to come out beyond the main bulk.

J U V

Insulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awless thrown. Shaksp.

All the projected or jutting parts should be very moderate, especially the cornices of the lower orders. Wotton.

The land, if not restrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck, and jutted to the sea. Dryd.

Broke by the jutting land on either side;
In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden.

It seems to jut out of the structure of the poem, and be independent of it. Broome.

To JU'TTY. v. a. [from jut.] To shoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like a brass cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base, Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Shaksp.

JUVENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Latin.]

Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when it is solid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhaust. Bacon's Essays.

JUVENILITY. n. f. [from juvenile.]

1. Youthfulness.

The restoration of grey hairs to juvility, and renewing exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle. Glanville.

2. Light and careless manner.

J Y M

Customary strains and abstracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications. Glanville.

JUXTAPOSITION. n. f. [juxtaposition, Fr. juxta and positio, Latin.] Apposi-tion; the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a mere juxtaposition. Glanville.

J'VY. n. f. [ivy, Saxon; hedera, Lat.]

A plant.

It is a parasitick plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment. Miller.

A gown made of the finest wool;

A belt of straw, and ivy buds,

With coral clasps and amber studs;

And if these pleasures may thee move,

Come live with me and be my love. Raleigh.

Direct the clasping ivy where to climb. Milton.

JY'MOLD. ad. See GIMAL.

Their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;

And in their pale dull mouths the jymold bit
Lies, foul with chew'd grafs, still and motionless.

Shakspeare.

K.

K A L

K. A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill. It is used after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brick, stick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with e final; as clocke, checke, tricke. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent e final: as, cloke, broke, brake, pike, duke, eke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shook, leek.
The English never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

KA'LENDAR. n. f. [now written calen- dar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour
Stand as accur'd in the calendar. Shakspeare.

KA'LI. n. f. [an Arabick word.] Sea weed, of the ashes of which glass is made; whence the word alkali.

K A Y

The ashes of the weed kali are sold to the Venetians for their glass works. Bacon.

KAM. adj. Crooked.

Kam, in Erse, is squint eyed, and applied to any thing awry; clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, crofs from the purpose: A-schembo,
Italian; hence our English a-kimbo.

Clean kam is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kim kam.

This is clean kam; merely awry. Shakspeare.

To KAW. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a raven, crow, or rook.

Jack-daws kawing and fluttering about the nest, set all their young ones a-gaping; but having nothing in their mouths but air, leave them as hungry as before. Locke.

KAW. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry of a raven or crow.

The dastard crow that to the wood made wing,

With her loud kaws her craven-kind doth bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryd.

KAYLE. n. f. [quille, French.]1. Ninepin; kettlepins, of which skittles seems a corruption.

K E C

And now at keels they try a harmless chance,
And now their cur they teach to fetch and dance.

Sidney.

The residue of the time they wear out at coits,
kayles, or the like, idle exercises. Carew.

2. A kind of play still retained in Scotland, in which nine holes ranged in three's are made in the ground, and an iron bullet rolled in among them.To KECK. v. n. [kecken, Dutch.] To heave the stomach; to reach at vomiting.

All those diets do dry up humours and rebums, which they first attenuate, and while the humour is attenuated it troubleth the body a great deal more; and therefore patients must not keck at them at the first. Bacon's Natural History.

The faction, is it not notorious?

Keck at the memory of glorious. Swift.

To KE'CKLE. v. a. To defend a cable round with rope. *Ainsworth.*KE'CKSY. n. f. [commonly ken; cigué, French; cicuta, Latin. Skinner.] Skinner seems to think kecksy or ken the same as hemlock. It is used in Staffordshire both for hemlock, and any other hollow-jointed plant.

Nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakspeare.

KE'CKY. adj. [from keex.] Resembling a kex.

An Indian sceptre, made of a sort of cane, without any joint, and perfectly round, consisteth of hard and blackish cylinders, mixed with a soft kecky body; so as at the end cut transversely, it looks as a bundle of wires. Grew.

To KEDGE. v. a. [kaghe, a small vessel, Dutch.]

In bringing a ship up or down a narrow river, when the wind is contrary to the tide, they set the forefall, or foretopfall and mizen, and so let her drive with the tide. The sails are to flat her about, if she comes too near the shore. They also carry out an anchor in the head of the boat, with a hawser that comes from the ship; which anchor, if the ship comes too near the shore, they let fall in the stream, and so wind her head about it; then weigh the anchor again when she is about, which is called kedging, and from this use the anchor a kedger. Harris.

KE'DGER. n. f. [from kedge.] A small anchor used in a river. See KEDGE.

KE'DLACK. n. f. A weed that grows among corn; charnock. Tusser.

KEE. The provincial plural of cow, properly kine.

A lafs that Cic'ly hight had won his heart,
Cic'ly the western lafs that tends the kee. Gay.

KEEL. n. f. [cæle, Saxon; kiel, Dutch; quille, French.] The bottom of a ship. Portunus

Heav'd up his lighten'd keel, and sunk the sand,
And steer'd the sacred vessel. Dryden.

Her sharp bill serves for a keel to cut the air before her; her tail she useth as her rudder. Grew's Cosmol.

Your cables burst, and you must quickly feel
The waves impetuous ent'ring at your keel. Swift.

KEELS, the same with kayles; which see.

To KEEL. v. a. [cælan, Saxon.] This word, which is preserved in Shakspeare, Hanmer explains thus:

To keel seems to mean to drink so deep, as to turn up the bottom of the pot, like turning up the keel of a ship. Hanmer.

In Ireland, to keel the pot is to scum it.
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot. Shakspeare.

KE'ELFAT. n. f. [cælan, Saxon, to cool, and fat or vat, a vessel.] Cooler; tub in which liquor is let to cool.

KE'ELSON. n. f. The next piece of timber in a ship to her keel, lying right over it next above the floor timber. Harris.

To KE'ELHALE. v. a. [keel and hale.] To punish in the seamen's way, by dragging the criminal under water on one side of the ship and up again on the other.

KEEN. adj. [cene, Saxon; kuhn, German; koen, Dutch.]

1. Sharp; well edged; not blunt. We say keen of an edge; and sharp, either of edge or point.

Come thick night,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakspeare.

Here is my keen-edged sword,
Deck'd with fine flower-de-luces on each side. Shakspeare.

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms,
Keen be my sabre, and of proof my arms. Dryden.

A sword keen-edg'd within his right he held,
The warlike emblem of the conquer'd field. Dryden.

2. Severe; piercing.

The winds
Blow moist and keen, shattering the graceful locks

Of these fair spreading trees; which bids us seek Some better shroud. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The cold was very supportable; but as it changed to the north-west, or north, it became excessively keen. Ellis' Voyage.

3. Eager; vehement.

Never did I know
A creature, that did bear the shape of man,
So keen and greedy to confound a man. Shakspeare.

Keen dispatch of real hunger. Milton.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up a piece of the coat. L'Estrange.

Those curs are so extremely hungry, that they are too keen at the sport, and worry their game. Tatler.

This was a prospect so very inviting, that it could not be easily withstood by any who have so keen an appetite for wealth. Swift.

4. Acrimonious; bitter of mind.

Good father cardinal, cry thou, amen,
To my keen curses. Shakspeare.

I have known some of these absent officers as keen against Ireland, as if they had never been indebted to her. Swift.

To KEEN. v. a. [from the adjective.]

To sharpen. An unauthorized word.
Nor when cold winter keens the brightening flood,

Wou'd I weak shivering linger on the brink. Thomson.

KE'ENLY. adv. [from keen.] Sharply; vehemently; eagerly; bitterly.

KE'ENNESS. n. f. [from keen.]

1. Sharpness; edge.

No, not the hangman's ax bears half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Shakspeare.

2. Rigour of weather; piercing cold.

3. Asperity; bitterness of mind.

That they might keep up the keenness against the court, his lordship furnished them with informations, to the king's disadvantage. Clarendon.

The sting of every reproachful speech is the truth of it; and to be conscious is that which gives an edge and keenness to the invective. South.

4. Eagerness; vehemence.

To KEEP. v. a. [cepan, Saxon; kepen, old Dutch.]

1. To retain; not to lose.

I kept the field with the death of some, and flight of other. Sidney.

We have examples in the primitive church of such as by fear being compelled to sacrifice to strange gods repented, and kept still the office of preaching the gospel. Whitgift.

Keep in memory what I preached unto you. 1 Corinthians.

This charge I keep till my appointed day
Of rend'ring up. Milton.

His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal. Milton.

You have lost a child; but you have kept one child, and are likely to do so long. Temple.

If we would weigh, and keep in our minds, what we are considering, that would instruct us when we should, or should not, branch into distinctions. Locke.

2. To have in custody.

The crown of Stephanus, first king of Hungary, was always kept in the castle of Vicegrade. Knolles.

She kept the fatal key. Milton.

3. To preserve; not to let go.

The Lord God merciful and gracious, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity. Exodus.

I spared it greatly, and have kept me a grape of the cluster, and a plant of a great people. 2 Esdras.

4. To preserve in a state of security.

We passed by where the duke keeps his galleys. Addison.

5. To protect; to guard.

Behold I am with thee to keep thee. Genesis.

6. To restrain from flight.

Paul dwelt with a soldier that kept him. Acts.

7. To detain, or hold as a motive.

But what's the cause that keeps you here with me?
—That I may know what keeps me here with you? Dryden.

8. To hold for another.

A man delivers money or stuff to keep. Exodus.

Reserv'd from night, and kept for thee in store. Milton.

9. To tend; to have care of.

God put him in the garden of Eden to keep it. Genesis.

While in her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor, it chanced that a merchant saw her and liked her. Carew.

Count it thine

To till and keep, and of the fruit to eat. Milton.

10. To preserve in the same tenour or state.

To know the true state, I will keep this order. Bacon.

Take this at least, this last advice my son,
Keep a stiff rein, and move but gently on:
The coursers of themselves will run too fast,
Your art must be to moderate their haste. Addison.

11. To regard; to attend.

While the stars and course of heaven I keep,
My weary'd eyes were seiz'd with fatal sleep. Dryden.

12. To not suffer to fail.

displeasure, are the only true restraints: these alone ought to hold the reins, and keep the child in order. Locke on Education.

Men are guilty of many faults in the exercise of this faculty of the mind, which keep them in ignorance. Locke.

Happy souls! who keep such a sacred dominion over their inferior and animal powers, that the sensitive tumults never rise to disturb the superior and better operations of the reasoning mind. Watts.

14. To retain by some degree of force in any place or state. It is often followed in this sense by particles: as, down, under,
in, off.

This wickedness is found by thee; no good deeds of mine have been able to keep it down in thee. Sidney.

It is hardly to be thought that any governor should so much malign his successor, as to suffer an evil to grow up which he might timely have kept under; or perhaps nourish it with coloured countenance of such sinister means. Spenser.

What, old acquaintance! could not all this flesh
Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell. Shakspeare.

Venus took the guard of noble Hector's corse,
And kept the dogs off: night and day applying sovereign force

Of rosy balms, that to the dogs were horrible in taste. Chapman's Iliad.

The Chinese said where they will; which sheweth that their law of keeping out strangers is a law of pusillanimity and fear. Bacon.

And those that cannot live from him asunder,
Ungratefully shall strive to keep him under. Milton.

If any ask me what wou'd satisfy,
To make life easy, thus I wou'd reply:

As much as keeps out hunger, thirst, and cold. Dryden.

Matters, recommended by our passions, take possession of our minds, and will not be kept out. Locke.

Prohibited commodities should be kept out, and useless ones impoverish us by being brought in. Locke

An officer with one of these unbecoming qualities, is looked upon as a proper person to keep off impertinence and solicitation from his superior. Addison's Spectator

the estates they are born to, are of no use but to keep up their families, and transmit their lands and houses in a line to posterity. Addison

During his studies and travels he kept up a punctual correspondence with Eudoxus. Addison

39. To KEEP under. To oppress; to subdue.

O happy mixture! whereby things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us.
Hooker

Truth may be smothered a long time, and kept under by violence; but it will break out at last.
Stillington

To live like these that have their hope in another life implies, that we keep under our appetites, and do not let them loose into the enjoyments of sense. Atterbury

over a body of brass.

As he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettledrum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge. Shakspeare.

KEY. n. f. [cæg, Saxon.]

1. An instrument formed with cavities correspondent to the wards of a lock, by which the bolt of a lock is pushed forward or backward.

If a man were porter of hell gate, he should have old turning the key. Shakspeare.

Fortune, that arrant whore
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shaksp.

The glorious standard is to heav'n they spread,
With Peter's keys ennobled and his crown. Fairfax.

Yet some there be, that by due steps aspire
To lay there just hands on that golden key,
That opens the palace of eternity. Milton.

Conscience is its own counsellor, the sole master of its own secrets; and it is the privilege of our nature, that every man should keep the key of his own breast. South.

He came, and knocking thrice, without delay
The longing lady heard, and turn'd the key. Dryden.

2. An instrument by which something is screwed or turned.

Hide the key of the jack. Swift.

3. An explanation of any thing difficult.

An emblem without a key to 't, is no more than a tale of a tub. L'Estrange.

These notions, in the writings of the ancients darkly delivered, receive a clearer light when compared with this theory, which represents every thing plainly, and is a key to their thoughts. Burnet.

Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books. Locke.

4. The parts of a musical instrument which are struck with the fingers.

Pamela loves to handle the spinnet, and touch
the keys. Pamela.

5. [In musick.] Is a certain tone where-to every composition, whether long or short, ought to be fitted; and this key is said to be either flat or sharp, not in respect of its own nature, but with relation to the flat or sharp third, which is joined with it. Harris.

KIC

Hippolita, I woo'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling. Shakspeare.

But speak you with a sad brow? Or do you play the flouting Jack! Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song? Shaksp.

Not know my voice! Oh, time's extremity!
Hast thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue
In sev'n short yeats, that here my only son Knows not my feeble key of untun'd cares? Shakspeare.

6. [kaye, Dutch; quai, French.] A bank raised perpendicular for the ease of lading and unlading ships.

A key of fire ran along the shore,
And lighten'd all the river with a blaze. Dryden.

7. Key cold was a proverbial expression, now out of use.

Poor key cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster. Shaksp.

KEYAGE. n. f. [from key.] Money paid for lying at the key, or quay. Ainsworth.

KEYHOLE. n. f. [key and hole.] The perforation in the door or lock through which the key is put.

Make doors fast upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the keyhole. Shakspeare.

I looked in at the keyhole, and saw a well-made man. Tatler.

I keep her in one room; I lock it;
The key, look here, is in this pocket;
The keyhole is that left? Most certain. Prior.

KEYSTONE. n. f. [key and stone.] The middle stone of an arch.

If you will add a keystone and chaprels to the arch, let the breadth of the upper part of the keystone be the height of the arch. Moxon.

KIBE. n. f. [from kerb, a cut, German,
Skinner; from kibwe, Welsh, Minsbew.]

An ulcerated chilblain; a chap in the heel caused by the cold.

If 'twere a kibe, 'twould put me to my slipper. Shakspeare.

The toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of our courtier, that it galls his kibe. Shakspeare.
One boasted of the cure, calling them a few

KIBED. adj. [from kibe.] Troubled with kibes: as, kibed heels.

To KICK. v. a. [kauchen, German;
calco, Lat.] To strike with the foot.

He must endure and digest all affronts, adore the foot that kicks him, and kiss the hand that strikes him. South.

It anger'd Turenne once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.

Another, whose son had employments at court, valued not, now and then, a kicking or a caning. Swift.

To KICK. v. n. To beat the foot in anger or contempt.

Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice, which I have commanded? 1 Samuel.

Jeihurun waxed fat and kicked. Deut.

The doctrines of the holy scriptures are terrible enemies to wicked men, and this is that which makes them kick against religion, and spurn at the doctrines of that holy book. Tillot.

KICK. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow with the foot.

What, are you dumb? Quick, with your answer, quick,

Before my foot salutes you with a kick. Dryden.

KICKER. n. f. [from kick.] One who strikes with his foot.

KICKSHAW. n. f. [This word is supposed, I think with truth, to be only a corruption of quelque chose, something; yet Milton seems to have understood it otherwise; for he writes it kickshoe, as if he thought it used in contempt of dancing.]

1. Something uncommon or fantastical; something ridiculous.

Shall we need the monfieurs of Paris to take our youth into their slight custodies, and send them over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kickshaws? Milton.

2. A dish so changed by the cookery that it can scarcely be known.

Some pigeons, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws. Shakspeare.

In wit, as well as war, they give us vigour; Cressy was lost by kickshaws and soup-meagre. Fenton.

KICKSY-WICKSEY. n. f. [from kick and wince.] A made word in ridicule and disdain of a wife. Hanmer.

He wears his honour in a box, unseen, That hugs his kicksy-wicksey here at home, Spending his manly marrow in her arms. Shak.

KID. n. f. [kid, Danish.]

1. The young of a goat.

Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant spring. Fairy Queen.

There was a herd of goats with their young ones, upon which fight sir Richard Graham tells, he would snap one of the kids, and carry him close to their lodging. Wotton.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw Dandled the kid. Milton.

So kids and whelps their fires and dams express; And so the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden.

2. [from cidwlen, Welsh, a faggot.] A bundle of heath or furze.

To KID. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth kids.

KIDDER. n. f. An engrosser of corn to enhance its price. Ainsworth.

To KIDNAP. v. a. [from kind, Dutch, a child, and nap.] To steal children; to steal human beings.

KIDNAPPER. n. f. [from kidnap.] One who steals human beings; a manstealer.

The man compounded with the merchant, upon condition that he might have his child again; for he had smelt it out, that the merchant himself was the kidnapper. L'Estrange.

These people lye in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law. Spectator.

KIDNEY. n. f. [etymology unknown.]

1. These are two in number, one on each side: they have the same figure as kidneybeans: their length is four or five fingers, their breadth three, and their thickness two: the right is under the liver, and the left under the spleen. The use of the kidneys is to separate the urine from the blood, which by the motion of the heart and arteries, is thrust into the emulgent branches, which carry it to the little glands, by which the serosity, being separated, is received by the orifice of the little tubes, which go from the glands to the pelvis, and from thence it runs by the ureters into the bladder. Quincy.

A youth laboured under a complication of diseases, from his mesentery and kidneys. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. Sort; kind: in ludicrous language.

Think of that, a man of my kidney; think of that, that am as subject to heat as butter, a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakspeare.

There are millions in the world of this man's kidney, that take up the same resolution without noise. L'Estrange.

KIDNEYBEAN. n. f. [phaseolus. So named from its shape.] A leguminous plant.

Kidneybeans are a sort of cod ware, that are very pleasant wholesome food. Mortimer's Husb.

KIDNEYVETCH. [anthyllis.] n. f. Plants.

KIDNEYWORT. [cotyledon.] n. f. Ainsw.

KILDERKIN. n. f. [kindekin, a baby, Dutch.] A small barrel.

Make in the kilderkin a great bung-hole of purpose. Bacon.

A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ; But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.

To KILL. v. a. [anciently To quell; cpellan, Saxon; kelen, Dutch.]

1. To deprive of life; to put to death, as an agent.

Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?

—Please you, I'd rather kill two enemies. Shaks.

Ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger. Exodus.

There was killing of young and old, making away of men, women, and children. 2 Mac.

2. To destroy animals for food.

We're mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse,

To fright the animals, and to kill them up

In their assign'd and native dwelling place. Shaks.

Shall I take my bread, and my flesh that I have killed for my shearers? 1 Samuel.

3. To deprive of life, as a cause or instrument.

The medicines, if they were used inwards, would kill those that use them; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.

4. To deprive of vegetative or other motion, or active qualities.

Try with oil, or barm of drink, so they be such things as kill not the bough. Bacon.

Catharticks of mercurials mix with all animal acids, as appears by killing it with spittle. Floyer.

KILLER. n. f. [from kill.] One that deprives of life.

What sorrow, what amazement, what shame was in Amphialus, when he saw his dear foster-father find him the killer of his only son? Sidney.

Wilt thou for the old lion hunt, or fill His hungry whelps? and for the killer kill,

When couch'd in dreadful dens? Sandys.

So rude a time,

When love was held so capital a crime, That a crown'd head could no compassion find, But dy'd, because the killer had been kind. Waller.

KILLOW. n. f. [This seems a corruption of coal and low, a flame, as soot is thereby produced.] An earth of a blackish or deep blue colour, and doubtless had its name from kollow, by which name, in the north, the smut or grime on the backs of chimneys is called. Woodward.

KILN. n. f. [cyln, Saxon.] A stove; a fabrick formed for admitting heat, in order to dry or burn things contained in it.

I'll creep up into the chimney.—There they always use to discharge their birding pieces: creep into the kiln hole. Shakspeare.

After the putting forth in sprouts, and the drying upon the kiln, there will be gained a bushel in eight of malt. Bacon.

Physicians chuse lime which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not slack'd. Moxon.

To KILNDRY. v. a. [kiln and dry.] To dry by means of a kiln.

The best way is to kilndry them. Mortimer.

KILT for killed.

Spenser.

KIMBO. adj. [a schembo, Ital.] Crooked; bent; arched.

The kimbo handles seem with bears-foot carv'd, And never yet to table have been serv'd. Dryden.

He observed them edging towards one another to whisper; so that John was forced to sit with his arms a kimbo, to keep them asunder.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

KIN. n. f. [cynne, Saxon.]

1. Relation either of consanguinity or affinity.

You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin, and so a friend to their persons, not to their errors. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Th' unhappy Palamon,

Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free, Without a crime, except his kin to me. Dryden.

2. Relatives; those who are of the same race.

Tumultuous wars,

Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound. Shakspeare.

The father, mother, and the kin beside, Were overborne by fury of the tide. Dryden.

3. A relation; one related.

Then is the soul from God; so pagans say, Which saw by nature's light her heavenly kind, Naming her kin to God, and God's bright ray, A citizen of heav'n, to earth confin'd. Davies.

4. The same generical class, though perhaps not the same species; thing related.

The burst

And the ear-deaf'ning voice of the oracle, Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my sense, That I was nothing. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that which it discovers, being dissolved in a little hot water, is altogether differing from the stink of the other, being of kin to that of other alcalizate salts. Boyle.

5. A diminutive termination from kind, a child, Dutch: as, manikin, minikin, thomkin, wilkin.

KIND. adj. [from cynne, relation, Sax.]

1. Benevolent; filled with general goodwill.

By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done

To pluck me by the beard. Shakspeare.

Some of the ancients, like kind hearted men, have talked much of annual refrigeriums, or intervals of punishment to the damned, as particularly on the great festivals of the resurrection and ascension. South.

2. Favourable; beneficent.

He is kind to the unthankful and evil. Luke.

KIND. n. f. [cynne, Saxon.]

1. Race; generical class. Kind in Teutonick English answers to genus, and sort to species; though this distinction, in popular language, is not always observed.

Thus far we have endeavoured in part to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kinds. Hosker.

As when the total kind

Of birds, in orderly array on wing,

Came summon'd over Eden, to receive

Their names of thee. Milton's Par. Lost.

That both are animalia,

I grant; but not rationalia;

For though they do agree in kind,

Specific difference we find. Hudibras.

God and Nature do not principally concern themselves in the preservation of particulars, but kinds and companies. South's Sermons.

He with his wife were only left behind

Of perish'd man; they two were human kind. Dryden.

Some acts of virtue are common to heathens and christians; but I suppose them to be performed by christians after a more sublime manner than among the heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection.

Atterbury.

He, with a hundred arts refin'd
Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind.

Pope.

2. Particular nature.

No human laws are exempt from faults, since those that have been looked upon as most perfect in their kind, have been found to have so many.

Baker.

3. Natural state.

He did give the goods of all the prisoners unto those that had taken them, either to take them in kind, or compound for them.

Bacon.

The tax upon tillage was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decumæ, or tithes.

Arbut.

4. Nature; natural determination.

The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands,
And in the doing of the deed of kind
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes:

Shakspeare.

Some of you, on pure instinct of nature,
Are led by kind to admire your fellow-creature.

Dryden.

5. Manner; way.

Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

This will encourage industrious improvements, because many will rather venture in that kind, than take five in the hundred.

Bacon.

6. Sort. It has a slight and unimportant sense.

Diogenes was asked, in a kind of scorn, What was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers? He answered, Because the one knew what they wanted, the other did not.

Bacon.

To Ki'NDLE. v. a. [cinnu, Welsh; cynbelan, Saxon.]

1. To set on fire; to light; to make to burn.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea he kindleth it and baketh bread.

Isaiah.

I was not forgetful of those sparks, which some men's distempers formerly studied to kindle in palaments.

King Charles.

If the fire burns vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled: there is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in it, kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled from the sun.

South.

2. To inflame the passions; to exasperate; to animate; to heat; to fire the mind.

I've been to you a true and humble wife;
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike.

Shakspeare.

He hath kindled his wrath against me, and counteth me as one of his enemies.

Jeb.

Thus one by one kindling each other's fire,
Till all inflam'd, they all in one agree.

Daniel.

Each was a cause alone, and all combin'd
To kindle vengeance in her haughty mind.

Dryd.

To Ki'NDLE. v. n.

1. To catch fire.

When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee.

Isaiah.

2. [from cennan, Saxon.] To bring forth. It is used of some particular animals.

Are you native of this place?
—As the coney that you see dwells where she is kindled.

Shakspeare.

Ki'NDLER. n. s. [from kindle.] One that lights; one who inflames.

Now is the time that rakes their revels keep,
Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep.

Gay.

Ki'NDLY. adv. [from kind.] Benevolently; favourably; with good-will.

Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company.

Shakspeare.

I sometime lay here in Corioli,
At a poor man's house: he us'd me kindly.

Shakspeare: Coriolanus.

Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another.

Romans.

His grief some pity, others blame;
The fatal cause all kindly seek.

Prior.

Who with less designing ends,
Kindlier entertain their friends;
With good words, and count'nance sprightly,
Strive to treat them all politely.

Swift.

Ki'NDLY. adj. [from kind; probably from kind the substantive.]

1. Homogeneous; congenial; kindred; of the same nature.

This competency I beseech God I may be able to digest into kindly juice, that I may grow thereby.

Hammond.

These soft fires
Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat,
Of various influence, foment and warm,
Temper or nourish.

Milton's Paradise Lost

2. The foregoing sense seems to have been originally implied by this word; but following writers, inattentive to its etymology, confounded it with kind.

3. Bland; mild; softening.

Through all the living regions do'st thou move,
And scatter'st, where thou goest, the kindly seeds of love.

Dryden.

Ye heav'ns, from high the dewy nectar pour,
And in soft silence shed the kindly show'r!

Pope.

Ki'NDNESS. n. s. [from kind.] Benevolence; beneficence; good-will; favour; love.

If there be kindness, meekness, or comfort in her tongue, then is not her husband like other men.

Ecclesiasticus.

Old Lelius professes he had an extraordinary kindness for several young people.

Collier.

Ever blest be Cytherea's shrine,
Since thy dear breast has felt an equal wound;
Since in thy kindness my desires are crown'd.

Prior.

Love and inclination can be produced only by an experience or opinion of kindness to us.

Rogers.

Ki'NDRED. n. s. [from kind; cynrene, Saxon.]

1. Relation by birth or marriage; cognation; consanguinity; affinity.

Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
You keep her conquests, and extend your own.

Dryden

2. Relation; suit.

An old mothly saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred.

Shakspeare

3. Relatives.

I think there is no man secure
But the queen's kindred.

Shakspeare: Richard III.

Nor needs thy juster title the foul guilt
Of eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain

Denham

Ki'NDRED. adj. Congenial; related; cognate.

From Tuscan Corintum he claim'd his birth;
But after, when exempt from mortal earth,
From thence ascended to his kindred skies
A god.

Dryden.

KiNE. n. s. plur. from cow.

To milk the kine,
E'er the milk-maid fine
Hath open'd her eyne.

Ben Jonson.

A field I went, amid' the morning dew,
To milk my kine.

Gay.

KING. n. s. [A contraction of the Teutonic word cuning, or cuning, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stout or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength.

Verflegan.]

1. Monarch; supreme governour.

The great king of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder.

Shakspeare.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters.

Shakspeare.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.

Shakspeare.

The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, staidness,
Bounty, persever'ance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them.

Shakspeare.

Thus states were form'd the name of king unknown,

'Till common int'rest plac'd the sway in one:
'Twas virtue only, or in arts or arms,
Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,
The same which in a fire the sons obey'd
A prince the father of a people made.

Pope.

2. It is taken by Bacon in the feminine; as prince also is.

Ferdinand and Isabella, kings of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors.

Bacon.

3. A card with the picture of a king.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen.

Pope.

4. KING at arms, a principal officer at arms, that has the pre-eminence of the society; of whom there are three in number, viz. Garter, Norroy, and Clarenceux.

Phillips.

Walton.

To KING. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with a king. A word rather ludicrous.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not.

Shakspeare.

2. To make royal; to raise to royalty.

Sometimes am I a king;
Then treason makes me with myself a beggar,
And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again.

Shakspeare.

KiNGAPPLE. n. s. A kind of apple.

The kingapple is preferred before the jenneting.

Mortimer.

KiNGCRAFT. n. s. [king and craft. The art of governing. A word commonly used by king James.

There we'll sit Ruling in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms.
Shakspeare.

Yet this place
Had been thy kingly seat, and here thy race,
From all the ends of peopled earth, had come To rev'rence thee. Dryden's State of Innocence.

In Sparta, a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the ephori. Swift.

The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states. Swift.

2. Belonging to a king; suitable to a king.

Why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch
A watch-case to a common 'larum bell? Shakspeare.
Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand,
What husband in thy power I will command.
Shakspeare.

3. Noble; august; magnificent.

He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly entertainment, such a kingly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprizes.
Sidney.

I am far better born than is the king;
More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts.
Shakspeare.

KINGLY. adv. With an air of royalty; with superiour dignity.

Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state Inclin'd not. Milton's Par. Lost.
His hat, which never vail'd to human pride,
Walker with rev'rence took, and laid aside;
Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod.
Dunciad.

KINGSE'VIL. n. f. [king and evil] A scrofulous distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of a king.

Sore eyes are frequently a species of the kingsevil, and take their beginning from vicious humours inflaming the tunica adflata. Wiseman.

KINGSHIP. n. f. [from king.] Royalty; monarchy.

They designed and proposed to me the new-modelling of sovereignty and kingship, without any reality of power, or without any necessity of subjection and obedience. King Charles.

We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself,

K I S

he was presently deserted and opposed by them, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with the addition of that title which he passionately thirsted after. South.

KINGSPEAR. n. f. [asphodelus.] A plant.

KINGSTONE. n. f. [squalina.] A fish. Ainsworth.

KIN'SFOLK. n. f. [kin and folk.] Relations; those who are of the same family.

Those lords, since their first grants of those lands, have bestowed them amongst their kinsfolks. Spenser.

My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends forgotten me. Job.

KINSMAN. n. f. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.

The jury he made to be chosen out of their nearest kinsmen, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser.

Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
Whom kinsmen to the crown the heralds deem'd.
Dryden.

Let me stand excluded from my right, Robb'd of my kinsman's arms, who first appear'd in fight. Dryden's Fables.

There is a branch of the Medicis in Naples: the head of it has been owned as a kinsman by the great duke, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions. Aldison on Italy.

KINSWOMAN. n. f. [kin and woman.] A female relation.

A young noble lady, near kinswoman to the fair Helen, queen of Corinth, was come thither. Sidney.

The duke was as much in love with wit as he was with his kinswoman. Dennis' Letters.

KIRK. n. f. [cynce, Saxon; κῆρυξ.] A church. An old word yet retained in Scotland.

Home they hasten the posts to dight,
And all the kirk pillars ere day-light,
With hawthorn buds and sweet eglantine. Spensf.
Nor is it all the nation hath these spots,
There is a church as well as kirk of Scots.
Cleaveland.

What one party thought to rivet by the Scots, that the other contemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. K. Charles.

KIRTLE. n. f. [cýrtel, Saxon.] An upper garment; a gown.

All in a kirtle of discoloured say
He clothed was. Fairy Queen.
What stuff wilt thou have a kirtle of? Thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. Shakspeare.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy poeies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Raleigh.

TO KISS. v. a. [cusan, Welsh; κῆν.]

1. To touch with the lips.

But who those ruddy lips can miss,
Which blessed still themselves do kiss. Sidney.
He took

The bride about the neck, and kiss her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd. Shakspeare.

Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other.
Shakspeare.

2. To treat with fondness.

The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it, but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shaksf.

3. To touch gently.

The moon shines bright; in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakspeare.

KISS. n. f. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.

What sense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shakspeare.
Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryd.

K I T

KISSER. n. f. [from kiss.] One that kisses.

KISSINGCRUST. n. f. [kissing and crust.] Crust formed where one loaf in the oven touches another.

These bak'd him kissingcrusts, and those Brought him small beer. King's Cookery.

KIT. n. f. [kitte, Dutch.]

1. A large bottle. Skinner.

2. A small diminutive fiddle.

'Tis kept in a case fitted to it, almost like a dancing master's kit. Grew's Museum.

3. A small wooden vessel, in which Newcastle salmon is sent up to town.

KITCHEN. n. f. [kegin, Welsh; keg, Flemish; cycene, Saxon; cuisine, Fr. cucina, Italian; kyshen, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.

These being culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass. Spenser.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heav'n, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hooker.

He was taken into service in his court to a base office in his kitchen; so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown. Bacon.

We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

KITCHENGARDEN. n. f. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.

Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchengardens. Bacon.

A kitchengarden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery. SpeEtator.

KITCHENMAID. n. f. [kitchen and maid.] A maid under the cookmaid, whose business is to clean the utensils of the kitchen.

KITCHENSTUFF. n. f. [kitchen and stuff.] The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan.

As a thrifty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barrelling the droppings and the snuff
Of waiting candles, which in thirty year, Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer. Donne.

Instead of kitchenstuff some cry
A gospel-preaching ministry Hudibras.

KITCHENWENCH. n. f. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery.

Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench. Shakspeare.

Roasting and boiling leave to the kitchenwench. Swift.

KITCHENWORK. n. f. [kitchen and work.] Cookery; work done in the kitchen.

KITE. n. f. [cýta, Saxon; milvus.]

1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shaksf.
The heron, when she soareth high, so as sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth winds; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather. Bacon.

A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.

Detested kite! thou liest. Shakspeare.

3. A fictitious bird made of paper.

A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will madly burn, or childishly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Gov. of the Tongue.

KITESFOOT. n. f. A plant. Ainsw.
KITTEN. n. f. [katteken, Dutch.] It is probable that the true singular is kit, the diminutive of cat, of which the old plural was kitten or young cats, which was in time taken for the singular, like chicken.
 A young cat.

That a mare will sooner drown than an horse, is not experienced; nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps and kittens. Brown.

It was scratched in playing with a kitten. Wifeman.

Helen was just slipt into bed;
 Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,
 Away the kitten with them fled,
 As fees belonging to her prey. Prior.

To KITTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.

So it would have done
 At the same season, if your mother's cat
 Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born. Shakspeare.

The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak, and the cat kittened in the hollow trunk of it. L'Estrange.

To KLINK. v. n. [from clack.]

1. To make a small sharp noise.
2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer, or steal away suddenly with a snatch.

To KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knaap, Erse.] To bite. Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so that knab and knap may be the same.

I had much rather lie knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares. L'Estrange.

An ass was wishing, in a hard winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon. L'Estrange.

KNABBLE. v. n. [from knab.] To bite idly, or wantonly; to nibble. This word is perhaps found no where else.

Horses will knabble at walls, and rats gnaw iron. Brown.

KNACK. n. f. [cnappinge, skill, Saxon.]

1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.

When I was young, I was wont
 To load my she with knacks: I would have ransack'd

The pedlar's filken treasury, and have pour'd it
 To her acceptance. Shakspeare.

For thee, fond boy,
 If I may ever know thou dost but sigh
 That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
 I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success. Shakspeare.

This cap was moulded on a porringer,
 A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy:
 Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
 A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shaksp.

But is 't not presumption to write verse to you,
 Who make the better poems of the two?
 For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
 Alas! what are they but poems in prose! Denham.

He expounded both his pockets,
 And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
 A copper-plate, with almanacks
 Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.

2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.

I'll teach you the knacks
 Of eating of flax,
 And out of their noses

Draw ribbands and posies. Ben Jonson's Gypsies.
 The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware

all this while of the desperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange

There is a certain knack in conversation that gives a good grace by the manner and address. L'Estrange.

Knives, who in full assemblies have the knack Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.

My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes another about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

The dean was famous in his time,
 And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.

3. A nice trick.
 For how should equal colours do the knack?
 Cameleons who can paint in white and black? Pope.

To KNACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks.

KNA'CKER. n. f. [from knack.]

1. A maker of small work.
 One part for plow-right, knacker and smith. Mortimer.

2. A ropemaker. [restio, Latin.] Ainsw.

KNAG. n. f. [knag, a wart, Danish. It is retained in Scotland.] A hard knot in wood.

KNA'GGY. adj. [from knag.] Knotty; fet with hard rough knots.

KNAP. n. f. [cnap, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece; cnæp, Saxon, a protuberance.] A protuberance; a swelling prominence.

You shall see many fine seats set upon a knap of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathered as in troughs. Bacon.

To KNAP. v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]

1. To bite; to break short.
 He knappeth the spear in funder. Com. Prayer.
 He will knap the spears a-pieces with his teeth. More.

2. [knaap, Erse.] To strike so as to make a sharp noise like that of breaking.

Knap a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the found of the tongs. Bacon's Natural History.

To KNAP. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.

I reduced the shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them knap in before they knew they were out. Wifeman.

KNA'PBOTTLE. n. f. [papaver spumecum.] A plant.

To KNA'PPLE. v. n. [from knap.] To break off with a sharp quick noise.

KNA'PSACK. n. f. [from knappen, to eat.]

The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.

The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, 'till I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. King Charles

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are hedges in summer, and barns in winter: I with my knapsack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden.

KNA'PWEED. n. f. [jacea, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

KNARE. n. f. [knor, German.] A hard knot.

A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground, And prickly stubs instead of trees are found; Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old,

Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

KNAVE. n. f. [cnapa, Saxon.]

1. A boy; a male child.
2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.

For as the moon the eye doth please
 With gentle beams not hurting sight,
 Yet hath fir sun the greater praise,
 Because from him doth come her light;
 So if my man must praises have,
 What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.
 He eats and drinks with his domestick slaves,
 A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.

Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South.

When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estrange.

An honest man may take a knave's advice;
 But idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.
 See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

4. A card with a soldier painted on it.

For 'twill return, and turn t' account,
 If we are brought in play upon 't,
 Or but by casting knaves get in,
 What pow'r can hinder us to win! Hudibras.

KNA'VEY. n. f. [from knave.]

1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villany.

Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Shakspeare.

If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do it; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakspeare.

The cunning courtier should be slighted too,
 Who with dull knavery makes so much ado;
 'Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast,
 Like Aesop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps of trifling things of more cost than use.

We'll revel it as bravely as the best,
 With amber bracelets, beads and all this knave'ry. Shakspeare.

KNA'VISH. adj. [from knave.]

1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.

'Tis foolish to conceal it at all, and knaveish to do it from friends. Pope's Letters.

2. Waggish; mischievous.

Here she comes curst and sad;
 Cupid is a knaveish lad,
 Thus to make poor females mad. Shakspeare.

KNA'VISHLY. adv. [from knaveish.]

1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.

2. Waggishly; mischievously.

To KNEAD. v. a. [cnædan, Saxon; kneden, Dutch.] To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakspeare.

It is a lump, where all beasts kneaded be,
 Wisdom makes him an ark, where all agree. Donne.

Thus kneaded up with milk the new-made man
 His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
 'Till knowledge misapply'd, misunderstood,
 And pride of empire, four'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd,
 And kneaded up alike with moist'ning blood. Dryden.

Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heart,
 Seasoned it with some furious particles of the lion. Addison's Spectator.

K N E

No man ever reapt his corn,
Or from the oven drew his bread,
Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,
That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.
The cake she kneaded was the fav'ry meat. Prior.

KNEADINGTROUGH. n. f. [knead and trough.] A trough in which the paste of bread is worked together.

Frogs shall come into thy kneadingtroughs. Exodus.

KNEE. n. f. [cneop, Sax. knee, Dut.]

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.

Thy royal father
Was a most faint king: the queen that bore thee
Oftener upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakspeare

Scotch skink is a kind of strong nourishment made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and clasp thy knees. Milton.

Wearied with length of ways, worn out with toil,

To lay down, and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries;
And cast her languishing regards above,
For help from heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.

2. A piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tossed; but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.

To KNEE. v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.

Go you that banish'd him, a mile before his tent, fall down, and kneel the way into his mercy. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Return with her!

Why, the hot blooded France that dow'rless took Our youngest born: I could, as well be brought To kneel his throne, and squire-like pension beg. Shakspeare.

KNEED. adj. [from knee.]

1. Having knees: as, in-kneed, or out-kneed.

2. Having joints: as, kneed grafts.

KNEEDEEP. adj. [knee and deep.]

1. Rising to the knees.

2. Sunk to the knees.

The country peasant meditates no harm,
When clad with skins of beasts to keep him warm;

In winter weather unconcern'd he goes,
Almost kneedeep, through mire in clumsy shoes. Dryden.

KNE'EDGRASS. n. f. [gramen geniculatum.] An herb.

KNE'EHOLM. n. f. [aquifolium] An herb. Ainsworth.

KNE'EPAN. n. f. [knee and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both sides, and covered with a smooth cartilage on its fore-side. It is soft in children, but very hard in those of riper years: it is called patella or mola. Over it passes the tendon of the muscles which extend the leg, to which it serves as a pulley. Quincy.

The kneepan must be shewn, with the knitting thereof, by a fine shadow underneath the joint. Peucham on Drawing.

To KNEEL. v. n. [from knee.] To perform the act of genuflexion; to bend the knee.

When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down
And ask of thee forgiveness. Shakspeare.

K N I

Ere I was risen from the place that shew'd
My duty kneeling, came a reeking post,
Stew'd in his haste, half breathing, panting forth
From Goneril, his mistress, salutation. Shakspeare.

A certain man kneeling down to him, said,
Lord, have mercy upon my son; for he is lunatick. Matthew.

As soon as you are dressed, kneel and say the Lord's prayer. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

KNEETRIBUTE. n. f. [knee and tribute.] Genuflexion; worship or obeisance shown by kneeling.

Receive from us

Kneetribute yet unpaid, prostration vile. Milton.

KNEEL. n. f. [cnil, Welsh, a funeral pile; cnyllan, to ring, Sax.] The found of a bell rung at a funeral.

I would not wish them to a fairer death,
And so his knell is knoll'd. Shakspeare.

Sea nymphs hourly ring his knell:

Hark, now I hear them. Shakspeare's Tempest.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shakspeare.

All these motions, which we saw,
Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:
Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours work, as well as hours do tell;
Unhappy 'till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

At dawn poor Stella danc'd and sung;
The am'rous youth around her bow'd:
At night her fatal knell was rung;

I saw, and kiss'd her in her shroud. Prior.

KNEW. The preterit of know.

KNIFE. n. f. plur. knives. [cnip, Sax. kniff, Danish.] An instrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunnet smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakspeare.

Blest powers, forbid thy tender life
Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Craslow.

The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The beast of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden's Æneid.

Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,
And trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife. Dryden.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. Watts.

KNIGHT. n. f. [cnihz, Sax. knecht, Germ. a servant, or pupil.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.

That same knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made. Spenser.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place. Spenser.

When every case in law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight. Shakspeare.

This knight; but yet why should I call him knight?

To give impiety to this rev'rent file? Daniel's Civil War.

No squire with knight did better fit
In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras.

2. Shakspeare uses it of a female; and it must therefore be understood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.

K N I

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that flew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakspeare.

3. A champion.

He suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post. Drayton.

Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight against their king,
And raise the first sedition? Denham.

KNIGHT errant. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in quest of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.

The ancient errant knights
Won all their mistresses in fights;
They cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT errantry. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar passes for courage is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out needless encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the post. A hireling evidence; a knight dubbed at the whipping post, or pillory.

There are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to swear the truth of the broadest contradictions, where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South.

KNIGHT of the shire. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a-year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.

Favours came thick upon him: the next St.
George's day he was knighted. Wotton.

The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.

KNIGHTLY. adv. [from knight.] Befitting a knight; befitting a knight.

Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knightly combat shall be performed between us. Sidney.

How dares your pride presume against my laws:
As in a lifted field to fight your cause:
Unask'd the royal grant, no marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

KNIGHTHOOD. n. f. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.

The sword which Merlin made,
For that his nourling, when he knighthood swore,
Therewith to doen his foes eternal smart. Fairy Queen.

Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And so defend thee Heaven and thy valour. Shakspeare.

Is this the sir, who some waste wife to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a-wooing in? Ben Jonson.

If you needs must write, write Cæsar's praise,
You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays. Pope.

KNIGHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obsolete.

Arise, thou cursed miscreant,

He found that reason's self now reasons found
To fasten knots, which fancy first had bound.
Sidney.

As the fair vestal to the fountain came,
Let none be startled at a vestal's name,
Tir'd with the walk, she laid her down to rest;
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,

To take the freshness of the morning air,
And gather'd in a knot her flowing hair. Addison.

2. Any figure of which the lines frequently intersect each other.

Garden knots, the frets of houses, and all equal figures, please: whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon.

Our sea-wall'd garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds, her fairest flowers choked up,
Her knots disorder'd. Shakspeare's Rich. II.

It fed flow'rs worthy of paradise, which not nice art

In beds and curious knots, but nature boon, Pour'd forth profuse on hill and dale and plain. Milton.

Their quarters are contrived into elegant knots, adorned with the most beautiful flowers. More.

Henry in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half-express'd, and half-conceal'd his flame
Upon this tree; and as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That, as the wound, the passion might increase. Prior.

3. Any bond of association or union.

Confirm that amity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
That virtuous lady Bona. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

As he began, and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Why left you wife and children,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love? Shakspeare.

Not all that Saul could threaten or persuade,
In this close knot, the smallest looseness made. Cowley.

4. A hard part in a piece of wood caused by the protuberance of a bough, and consequently by a transverse direction of the fibres. A joint in an herb.

Taking the very refuse among those which served to no use, being a crooked piece of wood, and full of knots, he hath carved it diligently,
when he had nothing else to do. Wisdom.

Such knots and crossness of grain is objected here, as will hardly suffer that form, which they cry up here as the only just reformation, to go on so smoothly here as it might do in Scotland. King Charles.

5. Difficulty; intricacy.

A man shall be perplexed with knots and problems of business, and contrary affairs, where the determination is dubious, and both parts of the contrariety seem equally weighty; so that, which way soever the choice determines, a man is sure to venture a great concern. South.

6. Any intrigue, or difficult perplexity of affairs.

When the discovery was made that the king was living, which was the knot of the play untied, the rest is shut up in the compass of some few lines. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

7. A confederacy; an association; a small band.

Oh you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a conspiracy against me. Shakspeare.

questions; and he that was the best at the untying of knotty difficulties, carried the prize. L'Estrange.

Some on the bench the knotty laws untie. Dryden.

They compliment, they sit, they chat,
Fight o'er the wars; reform the state;
A thousand knotty points they clear,
'Till supper and my wife appear. Prior.

To KNOW. v. a. pret. I knew, I have known. [cnapan, Saxon.]

1. To perceive with certainty, whether intuitive or discursive.

O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come! Shakspeare.

The memorial of virtue is immortal, because it is known with God and with men. Wisdom.

The gods all things know. Milton.

Not from experience, for the world was new,

He only from their cause their natures knew. Denham.

We doubt not, neither can we properly say we think we admire and love you above all other men: there is a certainty in the proposition, and we know it. Dryden.

When a man makes use of the name of any simple idea, which he perceives is not understood, he is obliged by the laws of ingenuity, and the end of speech, to make known what idea he makes it stand for. Locke.

2. To be informed of; to be taught.

Ye shall be healed, and it shall be known to you why his hand is not removed from you. Samuel.

things than to expect a kindness from a common enemy. L'Estrange.

3. To distinguish.

Numeration is but the adding of one unit

more, and giving to the whole a new name, whereby to know it from those before and after,

and distinguish it from every smaller or greater multitude of units. Locke.

4. To recognise.

What art thou, thus to rail on me, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee? Shakspeare.

They told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread. Luke.

At nearer view he thought he know the dead,

And call'd the wretched man to mind. Flatman.

Tell me how I may know him. Milton.

5. To be no stranger to; to be familiar with.

What are you?

—A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows,

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,

Am pregnant to good pity. Shakspeare.

6. To converse with another sex.

And Adam knew Eve his wife. Genesis.

To KNOW. v. n.

gel, and delivered me out of the hand of Herod. Acts.

2. Not to be ignorant.

When they know within themselves they speak of that they do not well know, they would nevertheless seem to others to know of that which they may not well speak. Bacon.

Not to know of things remote, but know

That which before us lies in daily life,

Is the prime wisdom. Milton.

In the other world there is no consideration that will sting our consciences more cruelly than this, that we did wickedly when we knew to have done better; and chose to make ourselves miserable, when we understood the way to have been happy. Tillotson.

They might understand those excellencies which they blindly valued, so as not to be farther imposed upon by bad pieces, and to know when nature was well imitated by the most able masters. Dryden.

3. To be informed.

The prince and Mr. Pains will put on our jerkins and aprons, and sir John must not know of it. Shakspeare.

There is but one mineral body, that we know of, heavier than common quicksilver. Boyle.

4. To KNOW for. To have knowledge of. A colloquial expression.

He said the water itself was a good healthy water; but for the party that own'd it, he might have more diseases than he knew for. Shakspeare.

5. To Know of. In Shakspeare, is to take cognifance of, to examine.

Fair Hermia, question your defires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun,
For ay to be in shady cloifter mew'd. Shakf.

KNO'WABLE. adj. [from know.] Cognoscible; possible to be discovered or understood.

These are resolved into a confessed ignorance, and I shall not pursue them to their old asylum; and yet it may be, there is more knowable in these, than in less acknowledged mysteries.

Glanville.

'Tis plain, that under the law of works is comprehended also the law of nature, knowable by reason, as well as the law given by Moses.

Locke.

These two arguments are the voices of nature, the unanimous suffrages of all real beings and substances created, that are naturally knowable without revelation.

Bentley.

KNO'WER. n. f. [from know.] One who has skill or knowledge.

If we look on a vegetable, and can only say 'tis cold and dry, we are pitiful knowers.

Glanville.

I know the respect and reverence which in this address I ought to appear in before you, who are a general knower of mankind and poetry.

Southern.

KNO'WING. adj. [from know.]

1. Skillful; well instructed; remote from ignorance.

You have heard, and with a knowing ear,
